Israel, as a nation, have not been, dispensationally, the subjects of the moral government of God since the dispersion, whilst Jews scattered within the ancient boundary of the Roman Empire have been recognised as citizens in the various countries where located.

The present age is emphatically a parenthetic one between two portions of Israel's history. The first, on probation under law; the second, at the Advent of the Messiah, the kingdom and land restored, and the nation in resurrection testimony. The age is one wherein Jew and Gentile are being gathered out to form the mystic body of Christ. It is "the times of the Gentiles," during which "blindness in part is happened to Israel" (Rom. xi. 25).

BRIEF NOTES.

A Free Distribution of New Testaments to the 42,000 Board-school children of Birmingham is being arranged for.

An Appeal is made in The British Friend on behalf of the orphan schools in Bosnia, founded by Miss Irby and Miss Johnston.

Reports in the April number of Evangelical Christendom show that the Week of Prayer was widely observed in foreign lands.

The Miraculous Element in the Gospels will be the subject of ten lectures by Professor Bruce, of Glasgow, in New York, in April.

It is intended to open a "Home of Refuge" in Paris, where fallen women, willing to reform, may be welcomed and aided to begin a better life.

A Gospel Sleigh.—A church in Ashby, Mass., during the past winter ran a free "Gospel sleigh," for the benefit of those who live far from church.

Two Young Parsee Ladies are enrolled as students in the Free Church College, Bombay; they distinguish themselves, we are told, by their regularity of attendance and diligent application to their studies.

The Presbyterian Church of Jamaica has been celebrating its jubilee. Our hearts cannot but be gladdened by the report of the good and energetic work which is being carried on in Jamaica and other islands.

A Suffering Class.—Drivers, conductors, and other employés of street-car companies in Baltimore, work from sixteen to eighteen hours a day. A bill making twelve hours a legal day's work for them is being pressed on the legislature.

A Strong anti-American Feeling is being awakened in the city of Canton in China by the ill-treatment of Chinamen in the United States. We are not surprised, says The New York Independent, that such should be the fact. The result is natural.

Great Interest is felt in the "Modern Athens" at the projected new departure in London Methodism. The attempt to combine culture with aggressive evangelism is much appreciated. Nowhere will Mr. Mark Guy Pearse and Mr. Hugh Price Hughes find more sympathy than in the most distingushed and devout circles of the University and churches of Edinburgh.

Chicago.—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has entered on the experiment of trying to reach the outcast women of Chicago. Dr. Kate C. Bushnell, a noble Christian woman and thoroughly educated physician, who has had large experience in this work, will "lend a hand" to any and all whom she can induce to begin the splendid struggle for a better life. Associated with her is her first trophy in this work, now for five years a Christian, but one who knows by what she has suffered the horrors of an impure life.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For Gospel services at Thrissell-street Baptist Chapel, Bristol, by Mr. Opie Rodway, from April 10 to 16.——For blessing on a mission at Topclyffe Grange, Farnborough, April 9—13.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

The work of Evangelisation in Belgium continues to make steady progress.

Prussia.—A new "Military Hymn and Prayer-book" has been published, in Berlin, for use in the army and among the conscripts. It is evangelical in tone and teaching.

The Neuchatel Bible Society has 24 depôts in the Canton. Every pastor has perfect liberty to sell the Bible, to give it at a reduced price, or to give it gratis, according to circumstances. In 1885, 874 Bibles and 304 New Testaments were distributed.

Hungary.—Bible distribution has become much more difficult in Hungary, as much from the opposition of Protestant pastors as from that of Catholic priests. Notwithstanding, about 400 Bibles and 3500 New Testaments, in ten different languages, were distributed last year.

Evangelical Alliance.—Mr. A. J. Arnold gave on Thursday, March 18, at Villa Carle, San Remo, an interesting account of the principles and working of the Alliance. The instances in which it has been able to succour oppressed and persecuted Christians by procuring their deliverance from prison and hardships in almost every quarter of the globe were most striking.

Father Hyacinthe has been delivering a series of Lent lectures at the Gallican Church which he has founded in the Rue d'Arras, Paris. He said that the Church, to resist the enemies of religion, must be herself deeply religious, and must prove by her usefulness her claim to be held in respect. She cannot otherwise hope indirectly to moralise the workshop and to sanctify the school.

Bishop Taylor, says a correspondent of an American contemporary, expects to receive from England machinery for crushing sugar-cane, evaporating pans, implements for work; also a large portable tannery, given him by a man who taught him its use, which he intends teaching the natives. The Bishop believes that the heathen of Africa must be taught industry as well as religion.

San Remo.—The Protestant Italian School here is proving a great success. The annual examination and prize-giving took place on Wednesday, March 17, when the children made a capital appearance. As a school, affording relief to Protestant Italian children from petty Roman Catholic persecution, and a free and liberal education to Catholic children, it is worthy of all support.

Miss Leigh's Work in Paris.—Miss Leigh has been visiting the Riviera, holding drawing-room meetings to promote her work in Paris. She held a very successful meeting of this kind at Villa Teresa, San Remo, Rev. Alex Robertson in the chair. The details of her preserving and rescuing work amongst young English and American girls, beset by temptations and snares to vice in that capital of gaiety, were most touching.

Signor Gavazzi continues his course of interesting lectures on the last Encyclical of Leo XIII., which are well attended. On one occasion he drew the attention of his audience to the fact that the spot where they were assembled was sanctified by the blood of martyrs for the cause of the Gospel: on the very spot where these martyrs died for the truth, they could now preach the Gospel, and the Pope, who lives close by, could not prevent them.

The Auxiliary Evangelisation Society, Paris, held its annual meeting on March 1. This Society does not open up new fields, but seeks to furnish pastors needing help with missionary workers. It now employs seven agents. M. Appia stated his belief, that Christian activity leads to great longevity, and gave several examples: Lord Shaftesbury, Mr. Müller, and Mlle. Dumas, who at the age of ninety-five still visits the prison of St. Lazare, and retains a young heart.—Evangéliste.

The Gospel in the Somme.—Thanks to the zeal and care of Pastor Duran, the work of evangelisation is gradually spreading and deepening at Fenqières and the neighbouring villages. Colporteur Pointet in the course of last year sold 6867 Bibles and New Testaments, and gave away 51,500 Gospels. Under the auspices of the Paris Home Mission, Pastor Prunier has been holding meetings at Lisieux, Trouville, and Havre; at Trouville, 25 inquirers visited him to learn the way of life more perfectly.—Témoin de la Vérité.

News from Basutoland is interesting. The arrival of the children of Dr. Casalis, and of M. Mabille, was an enthusiastic, joyful triumph. All the native Christians filled the church at Morijah to thank God. M. Mabille was welcomed as the grandson of the man of the little black eyes, the beloved of the Bassutos! Two thousand people sat down to a banquet; on the following Sabbath seven hundred communicants joined in the observance of the Lord's Supper. There was also a baptism, with great rejoicings.—Evangelical Christendom.

Italian Evangelical Schools.—These schools, connected with the Free Christian Church in Italy, continue to be the object of Romish hate and intrigue. "One family were told such horrible things about our teaching that the mother was led to come and hear for herself; ever since she has come regularly to our Gospel meetings." The fifteenth report says that from the commencement no less than 2500 boys and girls have received a complete elementary education, many of whom are members of Christian churches, and several are agents in the work of evangelisation. The accounts from Leghorn, Turin, Spezia, &c., are equally interesting. Rev. John R. McDougall, secretary and treasurer, whose address is Scotch Church, Florence, asks travellers to favour the schools with a visit.

The Book World.

Turning-Points; or, Two Years in Maud Vernon's Life. By L. C. Silke. Religious Tract Society. A story full of heavenly wisdom, combined with sketches of young life and its varied viscissitudes.

The April number of The Monthly Interpreter (1s. T. T. Clark & Co.) fulfils well its function of Bible interpretation. Professor Reynolds' article on "The Portraitures of the Fourth Gospel" is specially noteworthy; it is rich in scholarship and spiritual insight.

The King's Coin; or, God's Fraction. By Rev. Thomas J. Bass. 1s. 6d. James Nisbet & Co. Mr. Bass earnestly advocates the duty of giving a fixed proportion of our income to God. He supports the position he takes up with weighty arguments and appeals of considerable persuasive skill.

Golden Legends of the Olden Time. By John Stoughton, D.D. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. Beautifully bound, beautifully printed, and beautifully written, this volume is sure to meet with a cordial reception. Dr. Stoughton's ecclesiastical researches have made him acquainted with many forgotten legends, which he uses here to teach true lessons and inspire noble actions.

Chapters on Flowers. By Charlotte Elizabeth. Seeley & Co. These twenty-five charming chapters well deserve to be rescued from the bookshelf of a past generation, and re-presented to the public, as they are here, in a most attractive form. The beautiful coloured floral plates are an index of the equally beautiful, and deeply spiritual meditations and instructive narratives.

There are some books that are very far from being pleasant reading, which yet ought to be read, as a solemn duty. Among these we reckon Human Wrecks, by Mr. J. B. Wookey. (6d. Kensit, 18, Paternoster-row.) Such a word of warning as its pages contain, spoken in a spirit of true Christian faithfulness, may well cause all who are in the easy downward path, or in danger of entering on it, to stop and turn, and flee as for their life.

The Acts of the Apostles: Divided into Short Sections, with a Simple Commentary for Family Reading. By Rev. Francis Bourdillon, M.A. Elliot Stock. Mr. Bourdillon does not profess to be an exegete or a theologian. He confines himself to simple comments on passages to be read at the fireside. In this he has succeeded very well. His duties as a clergyman have brought him into contact with men and women, and taught him how to speak to them. He is thoroughly evangelical, and writes in a pleasing manner.

The Anglican Pulpit of To-day. Hodder & Stoughton. It was a good idea to collect sermons of representative clergymen in the Church of England. The discourses reflect credit on their authors; but the biographical notices are somewhat unfair, for a work professedly impartial. Bishop Temple's Bampton Lectures are characterised as of "no great importance," whereas they are a notable contribution to the vexed question of the relations between science and religion; and Archdeacon Farrar is denied the scholarship he undoubtedly possesses. The book, however, contains many discourses well worthy of preservation.

Sermons by the late Dr. Mackay, of Hull. Two volumes of these are before us. "The Seeking Saviour, and other Bible Themes" (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton) are studies that will repay careful and prayerful reading. Rugged in form, they are strong in their presentation of Scriptural truth, and felicitous in their expression of different phases of the Christian life. "Abundant Grace" (1s. James E. Hawkins) is made up of addresses delivered by Dr. Mackay at Conferences in the United States, Canada, and Great Britain. Every page burns with the consecration of purpose and the passionate devotion to evangelical teaching which made the speaker such a power for good.

The New Moral Creation. By Rev. John Cooper. Macniven & Wallace. Much in this book is excellent. The baseness and malignity of sin, the free, fathomless, eternal love of God, and the self-sacrificing love of the Saviour, are powerfully set forth. The fruits of the Spirit are described with experimental fulness and delicacy. Yet we cannot but notice two blemishes—one of defect, the other of excess. The atoning death of Christ, though plainly stated, does not occupy the prominent place given to it by apostles and evangelists. On the other hand, the chapters on repentance after death, and kindred subjects, are calculated to lead to unscriptural conclusions.

Darkness in the Land of Egypt and Light in the Dwellings of the Children of Israel. By Lieut.-Colonel A. T. Fraser, R.E. Elliot Stock. Colonel Fraser is evidently a man with a pet theory, which he would have all accept. He has a good deal to say about light and heat that will interest students of physical science; but we do not believe they will listen to his interpretations of the working of the laws of nature. We regret that he should try to explain away the miraculous element in the plague of darkness sent on Egypt, by stating that "either there must have been rays thrown in over that part of the earth's surface, which had the effect of counteracting the light diffused from the sun, or the solar rays, becoming demagnetised, deflected them from the place." We prefer to accept the Bible statement, that darkness covered the land, without curiously asking the reason why or how.

The Unerring Word. By Rev. Henry Martin, M A. 2d. Twiss & Son, Ilfracombe. This is indeed "a tract for the times," a word in season to him that is in danger of losing his grasp of the verities of God's Word amid the prevailing scepticism.

A series of five little penny books have been issued by Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling, with the general title "Fresh Springs from the Word of the Lord." They contain very wisely-selected passages of Scripture on subjects relating to the discipline of the Christian life, and are eminently fitted to be useful to invalids and those under any sore trial.

There will shortly be published a "Treasury of the Scottish Covenant, by Rev. John C. Johnston, Dunoon. The object of the volume is to supply a book of reference on the Scottish Covenant in connection with the land whose moors and mosses have been "flowered with the graves of martyrs." The work will not be a history proper, but a treasury; nevertheless it will contain most of the information sought for and found often with difficulty on the pages of historians—civil and ecclesiastical. It will also contain a large amount of information on the subject not hitherto gathered together in compact form.

TRAMWAY MEN.—Last Sunday morning, through the kindness of a friend, about one hundred and thirty men, employed on the North London tramways, were entertained at breakfast at Finsbury Hall. Addresses full of Gospel truth and good counsel were delivered by Mr. Glover, Rev. J. Ossian Davies, Mr. Robert Burn, and others.

BALLS POND.—The anniversary of the Wall-street Mission was recently held, Mr. R. Paton in the chair. The report read by the Superintendent showed that the Gospel services, both in the Hall and in the street, had resulted in some conversions. The other agencies of the Mission, such as children's services, Band of Hope, Bible-class, &c., are actively carried on.

OUR SOLDIERS.—The new report of the Soldiers' Institute, Sandgate, Kent, contains a striking portrait of the late Foundress of this Institute, Miss Papillon, with a brief survey of her work among the soldiers at Shorncliffe Camp, for which the mission exists. The labours of the present missionary, Mr. Henry Hull, himself a convert while at the Woolwich Home, are being much blessed, and the services are largely attended.

"GOD'S FAITHFULNESS."—This monthly, which records the work of the South of England Christian Vigilance and Girls' Rescue Association, states that there are now thirty-three inmates in the Home at Reading, most of whom have made a full surrender to God. There has been much encouragement in connection with rescue work at Poole, and in the Channel Islands. Mrs. W. F. Day, Norwood House, King's-road, Reading, superintends the work.

DUBLIN.—The report of the Free Breakfast Movement states that during the year 26,000 Sunday free breakfasts have been given to the poor, gathered from the lanes, alleys, and gutters of the City. The attendance at the mothers' meeting has increased; twenty or thirty different classes for boys and girls have been regularly maintained; employment has been obtained for the unemployed. Mr. Robert Cotter, Christian Union-buildings, Dublin, is the secretary.

LIFE-BOAT SERVICES.—It is purposed to establish a service of much more powerful life-boats than those now in use. They are to be always afloat, as launching from the beach during a gale is often an insuperable difficulty. They are to have sleeping and cooking conveniences on board, to save both crews and rescued from needless hardships and risks. Steam power will also be used where practicable. It is felt that a fair start might be made with twenty vessels, to be placed at different parts around our coasts. Ten thousand pounds is required; a public Fund has been opened, and part of the money subscribed. Those who desire to help should communicate with Mr. F. Johnson, the Honorary Managing Secretary of the National Refuge Harbours Society, 17, Parliament-street, London.

PORTSMOUTH.—The fourteenth report of the Bethesda Mission states that the services of the Superintendent, Commander Key, have been retained, and that the past year has been one of good success. The Branch Hall at Southsea has been renovated by several working men, who gave their time and labour gratuitously, and afterwards conducted a week of special services. Much has been done for the poor in gifts of clothing, coal, food, medical assistance, &c. Situations have been obtained for servants, rescue work has been very successful, poor women have been provided with remunerative needlework, and more than 1000 food tickets have been given out to the sick poor. The annual sale is fixed for October, and articles will be thankfully received. The address of Commander Key is St. Edward's-road, Southsea.

Notes on Daily Readings

SUNDAY, APRIL 11.—DEUT. XXV.

1.—They shall justify the righteous, and condemn the wicked.—A passage worthy of attention as defining the meaning of terms whose use in the New Testament it is very important rightly to understand. Justification, as here defined, is not (as Rome teaches) the act of making righteous, but of pronouncing righteous.

4.—Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn.—St. Paul quotes this verse twice (1 Cor. ix. 9; 1 Tim. v. 18), and both times in its spiritual application, to the claims of ministers to be supported in temporal things by those among whom they labour.

9.—Loose his shoe from off his foot.—"The taking off the shoe was an ancient custom in Israel, adopted, according to Ruth iv. 7, in cases of redemption and exchange, for the purpose of confirming commercial transactions. The usage arose from the fact, that when anyone took possession of landed property, he did so by treading upon the soil, and asserting his right of possession by standing upon it in his shoes. In this way the taking off of the shoe and handing it to another became a symbol of the renunciation of a man's position and property."—Keil.

13.—Thou shalt not have in thy bag divers weights, a great and a small.—"That is, stones of unequal weights, the lighter to sell with, the heavier to buy with. Stones were used by the Jews, instead of brass or lead, for their weights. Of duties towards our neighbour, those which occur most frequently are the most important. That of honesty in trade is, therefore, emphatically enforced once more in conclusion."—Sp. Com.

17.—Remember what Amalek did unto thee.—Amalek was the first enemy that opposed Israel's progress on coming out of Egypt, and that under circumstances, as here detailed, of peculiar malevolence. They therefore brought upon themselves the enmity of God, as we read in Exod. xvii. 16: "The Lord hath sworn that the Lord will have war with Amalek from generation to generation." It was as charged with the execution of this curse of God that Israel was neither to forgive nor to forget Amalek's conduct. How often is hostility to Rome looked upon as uncharitable, whereas it is but righteous indignation against the persistent enemies of God's Word, God's truth, and God's people.

MONDAY, APRIL 12.—DEUT. XXVI.

2.—Thou shalt take of the first of all the fruit of the earth.—"The fruit was the tangible proof that they were in possession of the land, and the presentation of the first of this fruit the practical confession that they were indebted to the Lord for the land. This confession the offerer was also to embody in a prayer of thanksgiving, after the basket had been received by the priest, in which he confessed that he and his people owed their existence and welfare to the grace of God, manifested in the miraculous redemption of Israel out of the oppression of Egypt, and in their guidance into Canaan."—Keil.

5.—A Syrian ready to perish was my father.—"The reference is shown by the context to be to Jacob, as the ancestor in whom particularly the family of Abraham began to develop into a nation (see Isa. xli. 8, 9, xliii. 22, 28). Jacob is called 'a Syrian' (lit. Aramæan) not only because of his own long residence in Syria with Laban (Gen. xxix.—xxxi.), as our Lord was called a Nazarene because of his residence at Nazareth, but because he there married and had his children (Hos. xii. 12)."—Sp. Com. The words "ready to perish" are in the Hebrew "perishing," or, as in R.V., (margin) "lost." Keil renders it "a lost Aramæan was my father."

12.—The third year, which is the year of tithing.—"The seventh year being Sabbatical, and no tithes being payable in it (Exod. xxiii. 10), 'the third year of tithing,' here alluded to, would be each third and sixth in the septennial cycle. As in each of these years the whole triennial series of tithe obligations would have been completed, the Israelite is appropriately called upon, 'when he had made an end of tithing the third year,' to make solemn profession before God that he had discharged each and all as they fell due, and applied them as the law appointed."—Sp. Com.

13.—I have not transgressed thy commandments.—This "refers primarily to the directions concerning the tithes."—Keil.

17.—Thou hast avouched the Lord this day to be thy God.—"Lit., 'made to say.' The sense is, 'Thou hast given occasion to the Lord to say that He is thy God.'"—Sp. Com. Compare Heb. xi. 16, "God is not ashamed to be called their God."

TUESDAY, APRIL 13.—DEUT. XXVII.

3.—Thou shalt write upon them all the words of this law.—"We must not restrict the expression, 'all the words of this law' to the Decalogue, since that was but a summary and abridgment of those obligations, nor would the 'great stones' of ver. 2 be required to contain the Decalogue only; nor yet to the following blessings and cursings (which is the view of Josephus); nor yet to the Book of Deuteronomy only. The words can only mean all the laws revealed from God to the people by Moses, i.e., the legal enactments, regarded by the Jews as 613 in number."—Sp. Com.

12, 13.—These shall stand upon Mount Gerizim to bless.—"The tribes appointed to stand on Gerizim to bless the people all sprang from the two wives of Jacob, Leah and Rachel. All the four tribes which sprang from the handmaids Zilpah and Bilhah are located on Ebal; but two tribes are added to the latter from the descendants of the wives, that of Reuben probably because he forfeited his primogeniture; and that of Zebulun apparently because he was the youngest son of Leah."—Ibid.

26.—Cursed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them.—This is the last of the twelve curses to be solemnly pronounced upon Mount Ebal; the first eleven of which were directed against special sins, this last "comprehensively sums up in general terms, and condemns all and every offence against God's law." As such it is quoted by St. Paul as involving the guilt of all who "are of the works of the law" (Gal. iii. 20); but the subsequent reference to Christ having "redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us," explains why the altar was to be built upon Ebal, the mount of cursing (ver. 5), rather than upon Gerizim, the mount of blessing. It was needed on Ebal to neutralise the curse for as many as should trust in Him whom the altar and sacrifice prefigured.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 14.—DEUT. XXVIII.

"A comparison of these chapters with Exod. xxiii. 20—23, and Lev. xxvi., will show Moses here resumes and amplifies the promises and threats already set forth in the earlier records of the law. The blessings are declared in fourteen verses. The curses require nearly four times as many. Thus here again the curse is the more conspicuous feature in the law. The language rises in this chapter to the sublimest strains, especially in the latter part of it; and the prophecies respecting the dispersion and degradation of the Jewish nation in its later days are amongst the most remarkable in Scripture."—Sp. Com.

36.—The Lord shall bring thee, and thy king . . . unto a nation which neither thou nor thy fathers have known.—Fulfilled both in the Assyrian conquest of Israel and in the Babylonish captivity of Judah.

49.—The Lord shall bring against thee a nation from far.—However partially this may seem to have been fulfilled in earlier invasions, it is to the Roman conquest of Judea that we must look for the complete fulfilment. "It only needs to read this part of the denunciation, and to compare it with the narrative of Josephus (Jewish War, vi.), to see that its full and exact accomplishment took place in the wars of Vespasian and Titus against the Jews, as indeed the Jews themselves generally admit."—Sp. Com. The words "as swift as the eagle flieth" point to the well-known Roman ensign. Compare Matt. xxiv. 28.

56.—The tender and delicate woman.—The fearful picture given in this and the next verse of what should happen "in the siege and in the straitness," was literally fulfilled at the siege of Jerusalem under Titus, as recorded by Josephus (Jewish Wars, vi. 3, 4).

THURSDAY, APRIL 15.—DEUT. XXIX.

1.—These are the words of the covenant.—"This verse is added to the last chapter in the Hebrew text of most editions. The Jewish authorities regard it, and probably correctly, as a recapitulation. Compare the very similar case, Lev. xxvi. 46."—Sp. Com.

4.—Yet the Lord hath not given you an heart to perceive.—"Ability to understand the things of God is the gift of God (1 Cor. ii. 14); yet man is not guiltless if he lacks that ability. The people had it not because they had not felt their want of it, nor asked for it."—Ibid. See xxxii. 29, where the Lord mourns over their lack of understanding: "O that they were wise, that they understood this." See, too, Ezek. xii. 2.

12.—That thou shouldest enter into covenant with the Lord thy God.—The transition from the "ye" of ver. 10 to the "thou" is worthy of note, followed as it is (ver. 13) by "that He may establish thee to-day for a people unto Himself." It seems to mark distinctly the national character of the covenant spoken of, which was with the nation as such, and not with individuals.

15.—Also with him that is not here with us this day.—"I.e., as the Jews explain, posterity, which throughout all generations was to be taken as bound by the act and deed of those present and living."—Sp. Com.

18.—Lest there should be among you a root that beareth gall and wormwood.—The word "gall" is rendered in margin (A.V.) "a poisonful herb," and in ditto R.V., "a poisonous herb." This indicates the deadly character of the tendency to idolatry thus figuratively expressed. The use of this passage in Heb. xii. 15, in its application to "any man that falleth short of (or "falleth back from," margin) the grace of God" (R.V.), is suggestive. The deadly sin of the Old Covenant, viz., tendency to idolatry, is parallel, in the New Covenant, to falling short of (or back from) the grace of God; in other words, the Galatian error, or "leaven," which soon "leavened the whole lump" of professing Christendom.

FRIDAY, APRIL 16.—DEUT. XXX.

"The closing words of the address of Moses are words of comfort and promise. The chastisements of God would lead the nation to repent, and thereupon God would again bless them."—Sp. Com.

5.—The Lord thy God will bring thee into the land.—However partially this promise may have been fulfilled in the return from Babylon, its complete fulfilment is manifestly yet future. The next verse, which is a continuation of the promise, cannot be separated from this one ("And the Lord thy God will circumcise thy heart," &c.), and this certainly awaits its fulfilment, as many other Scriptures testify, as also does the judgment denounced in the next verse (7) against Israel's enemies.

12.—It is not in heaven, that thou shouldest say, &c.—"The immediate purpose of this passage is to encourage the people, by reminding them that all necessary instruction had been placed within their reach."—Sp. Com. The use of this passage (11—14) by St. Paul (Rom. x. 6) leads many commentators to suppose that he is explaining its meaning here, and that, therefore, Moses is really speaking of the righteousness of faith. But this is evidently a mistake. Moses is speaking of the law, Paul of the Gospel. The latter accommodates a passage, written to show that Israel under the law was inexcusable, so clearly had the law been made known to them, in order to show that God by the death and resurrection of Christ had taken away all excuse for unbelief from those who hear the Gospel.

SATURDAY, APRIL 17.—DEUT. XXXI.

2.—I am an hundred and twenty years old.—By putting together Acts vii. 23, 30, and Exod. vii. 7 we find that the one hundred and twenty years of Moses' life fall into three periods of forty years each: forty years in Egypt, forty years in Midian, and forty in the wilderness.

6.—He will not fail thee, nor forsake thee.—These words spoken to "all Israel" (ver. 1) are repeated (ver. 6) to Joshua, and are again repeated by the Lord Himself to Joshua (Josh. i. 5). Once more they appear in Heb. xiii. 5 as the common property of all Christians, and are there introduced as an antidote to covetousness or the love of money: "Be ye free from the love of money; content with such things as ye have: for Himself hath said, I will in no wise fail thee, neither will I in any wise forsake thee" (R.V.). The exhortation with which ver. 6 begins, "Be strong and of a good courage," appears again in Heb. xiii. 6, which (R.V.) renders, "So that with good courage we say, The Lord is my helper, I will not fear; what shall man do unto me?"

11.—When all Israel is come to appear before the Lord.—"The actual discharge of this duty is recorded in Neh. viii. 1. From ver. 18 it appears that Ezra 'read in the book of the law of God' day by day during the feast, but later Jewish practice has confined the reading to the first day of the feast, and to certain portions of Deuteronomy only."—Sp. Com.

19.—Write ye this song for you.—Though called the song of Moses, these words show that it was given by the Lord Himself to Moses.

Forthcoming Meetings.

EVANGELISTIC.

The Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Apply Hon. Sec , 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W C.

The Irish Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of Ireland on due notice. Apply to Mr. J. Barton, Hon. Sec., Dundalk, Ireland.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle Evangelists' Association will send lay preachers and evangelists to any chapel or hall of any evangelical denomination in London. Apply Hon. Sec., 121, Camberwell New-road, S.E.

The Scottish Evangelistic Association will send evangelists to any part of Scotland on due notice. Apply to Dr. Moxey, Superintendent, 5, St. Andrew-square, Edinburgh.

The Children's Evangelistic Mission will send evangelists to any part of Great Britain to conduct missions for children and young people. Apply early. Apply T. Eyres, Hon. Sec , 253, Southampton-street, Camberwell S.E.

The Church Army will send evangelists (working men) to any clergyman on due notice, for short or long missions. Apply Hon. Sec., 35, Southampton-street, Strand, W.C.

BATTERSEA.—The Union Tabernacle, which is being erected for the congregation of which Mr. D. M. Cameron is the evangelist and pastor, is almost completed, and will be formally opened early next month.

HEREFORD Y.W.C.A.—A very pleasant and profitable evening was recently spent by the members and a few friends in the comfortable room in which their weekly meetings are held. About eighty sat down to tea. Miss Dalton gave a most interesting address, commencing by giving particulars of the work of the Association; she urged upon all present the necessity of entire consecration. Twelve new members joined the Association.

Y.M C.A., FINSBURY-PARK.—This Association is making a great effort to pay off the debt resting upon their building: over £1000 are required, and to raise this they purpose holding a bazaar. The debt was incurred in purchasing the lease of their present premises, which had previously been used as a billiard and drinking saloon, but which are now devoted to the spiritual, mental, and physical improvement of young men. The bazaar will be opened at 3 o'clock, on April 13, by Lady Hope, and remain open the three following days.

CABMEN'S SHELTERS.—The Committee of the Cabmen's Shelter Fund, in their eleventh report, rejoice greatly in the success of their efforts, three new shelters having been erected in London during the past year. The number erected during the past eleven years is thirty-seven, and these are used by 3000 cabmen daily. A substantial increase of income is desired. The office is 68, Buckingham Palace-road, S.W., and Mr. W. H. Macnamara is the Hon. Secretary.

THE Y.M.C.A. at Finsbury Park has put up a Shelter on one of the draughtiest cabstands in London. £20 still required.

THE CRY OF THE STARVING.

THE LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY AND HOMERTON MISSION is doing its very utmost to render assistance to the very poor of the Metropolis, but FUNDS are most URGENTLY REQUIRED.

WHO WILL HELP?

HOW TO HELP US TO CARRY ON OUR WORK.—£8 will pay the whole cost of 1,000 Adults' or Children's Dinners or Suppers; £4, 500; £2, 250; £1, 125. 4s. 6d. will pay for a good pair of a Boots for a poor Child; 2s. 6d., a Week's Lodging for a poor Man or Woman. £6 will enable us to pay the whole expense of an Adult to Canada.

Assistance is given to the Destitute without any sectarian distinction whatever, and without favour or partiality. Inquiries are made by our own Agents, or by the very many Clergymen, Ministers, Secretaries of Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, District Visitors, City Missionaries, Ragged School Workers, and others who take a deep interest in our work, and act as Honorary Almoners on behalf of the Society, and at whose Schoolrooms or Mission Halls Free Meals have been given by this Society.

Donations will be most gratefully received by Mr. JOHN JAMES JONES; or,

Mr. HENRY HICKS BOARD, Secretary,
57 and 59, Ludgate Hill, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Drafts to be crossed Fuller, Banbury & Co. P.O. Orders to be drawn on General Post Office.

Donations for the London Samaritan Society are also received by the Bankers, Messrs. Fuller, Banbury, Nix, & Matheson, 77, Lombard-street, E.C.; the City Bank, Ludgate-hill; and by the Auditors, Messrs. Josiah Beddow & Son, Chartered Accountants, 2, Gresham-buildings, Basinghall-street, London, E.C.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

Hebrews vi. 19.

To Shelter Young Women (otherwise respectable) lately Fallen into Sin.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and for the particulars of its work, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee), Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London, and to whom, or to any member of Committee, subscriptions may be sent, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

EAST-END MISSION WORK.

TO make provision for continuing the Evangelistic work so successfully carried on by the Rev. Thomas Jackson during the past eighteen months, at the Clapton Park Theatre, the Mission-hall (known as the Clapton Park Tabernacle) has been purchased, and is being enlarged at a total cost of £2500. The building will provide sittings for 550 persons, and the school-room will accommodate 350 scholars. There will also be four rooms for caretaker, and needy servants' free registry office; six rooms for the use of mothers' meetings; working men's free library and reading room; free night school for adults, Band of Hope, Gospel Temperance, benevolent and tract societies, Good Samaritan union, soup kitchen, &c. The opening services will (God willing) be held on April 21. Many men and women who have been led to Christ at the Theatre services are giving out of their small earnings to the building fund, and in order to carry on, unfettered by any debt, our work among the poor, the perishing, and unsaved we desire to raise the whole amount by Good Friday. Will friends, wh oare interested in Gospel work among the masses, kindly help us.

Donations will be thankfully acknowledged by Mr. B. Mooney, 41, Powerscroft-road, Lower Clapton, E., Treasurer; Mr. W. Johnson, 124. Elderfield-road. Clapton Park, E., Secretary; or by Rev. T. Jackson, 41, Powerscroft-road, Lower Clapton, E., Missionary.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

Instituted 1772.
President: G. WILLIAMS, ESQ.
Vice-Presidents: A. PEASE, ESQ., M.P., S. D. WADDY, ESQ., M.P., Q.C., and J. H. GLADSTONE, ESQ., Ph.D., F.R.S., &c.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, ESQ.
Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of The Christian.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND

Scripture Readers' Association.

Instituted in 1844.

The financial year will close March 31, and unless at least £500 in new annual Subscriptions or Donations are received there will be a serious deficiency. The Committee venture to appeal very earnestly for immediate help, without which many grants to poor and populous parishes will be jeopardized. 126 Readers now on the staff.

"Training is the great requirement of the present age. Every calling in life demands preparation; natural ability, and irregular, unguided development, are not enough. As soon as a person has chosen his life-work, he begins to prepare himself for it. So, when a person has decided to follow Christ, and become a 'fisher of men,' training should begin at once. It is not enough to have become a Christian—to have in view a life of work for God; but one should, even in childhood, be 'about his Father's business.' Therefore, as soon as a child is 'in the way he should go,' he should be 'trained up' in that way. We do not leave a child to himself in his physical and intellectual growth; neither should we disregard his need of help in spiritual development. Yet how little direct attention is paid to the child's spiritual needs after his conversion! . . . . We seem to expect the lambs to flourish if treated in the same way as we treat the sheep. . . . . A farmer's boy, whose business it was to tend sheep, contrived a plan by which his lambs should be in better condition than those of his neighbours. Instead of keeping all the flock together, he put the lambs in a smaller enclosure within the fold. His care was richly repaid. Equally successful are the special efforts put forth for young converts in the Church."—Pages 23, 24.

SIXTEENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
CONSUMPTION.—CASE of JAMES HUNT, SHAFTESBURY.

This patient applied to me in August last. His illness had commenced with a severe cold, pain in the side and chest, shortness of breath, cough, and expectoration—great weakness followed. For six months he had been gradually losing flesh, in the whole frame. "I have had four doctors' advice (he writes), and they report Consumption. The rector of our parish has known my case from the beginning."

One month after this the patient writes:—"I am happy to tell you that I am getting better; my breathing, and appetite, and cough are much better. Your liniment has done much good. Yours is a wonderful medicine!"

At the end of October he writes:—"I have been making rapid progress. Many tell me I do not look like the same person."

In a letter dated December 18, he says:—"I am able to follow my employment without any relapse. I thank you for your kind advice and valuable medicine. I did not think in the summer I should ever be able to work again. I can with confidence recommend your treatment; to which I owe my life, thank God. Do what you like with my letter.—James Hunt, Dover-street, Stow Row, Shaftesbury."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge. Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

MR. GEORGE WILLIAMS.

FEW City men have led a more useful life, and no City man is better known, than Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, the Founder of the Young Men's Christian Association, and head of the well-known firm of Hitchcock, Williams & Co., in St. Paul's Churchyard.

It is not often given to men to see the fruit of their labours during their lifetime. The Young Men's Christian Association was founded in 1844 in quite a small way, and it has grown until Branches may be found all over the world, with a membership of more than two hundred thousand. For many years Mr. George Williams has filled the office of Treasurer of the parent Association, and now that the noble earl who was for so long President of the Association has gone to his rest, the committee have elected Mr. George Williams to the vacant presidency. Everyone must feel that there is a peculiar fitness in his appointment to this office, which, we trust, he may long fill and adorn. The physical, as well as the spiritual, condition of young men has always received his close attention. Hazlewood in the Isle of Wight, Shaftesbury House at Margate, and other seaside homes, where young men in feeble health can gain rest and strength, are standing evidences of his thoughtfulness and liberality.

But it is not only in connection with the Y.M.C.A. that Mr. George Williams' name will be handed down to posterity. With all his business engagements he finds time to attend the committees, or to take an active interest in the work of the British and Foreign Bible Society, the London City Mission, the Sunday-school Union, the Bishop of London's Diocesan Council, the Young Women's Christian Association, and a host of similar societies. The Commercial Travellers' Christian Association, the Christian Community, the Young Men's Foreign Missionary, and several other Societies, claim him as President. He is always to the front in the cause of temperance, thrift, rescue-work, societies for the blind, deaf, and dumb, and everything that promotes the temporal as well as the eternal welfare of the people.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.)

When Exeter Hall was in danger of being turned into a place of questionable amusement, he was the means of rescuing that historic building, so long identified with Christian work; and, with the aid of Mr. Samuel Morley, Mr. R. C. L. Bevan, Mr. J. D. Allcroft, and other friends, it has been preserved as the headquarters of the Y.M.C.A., and for the use of religious and philanthropic societies.

In private life Mr. Williams is genial, sympathetic, and warm-hearted, a model father, and a devoted husband. He is alike idolised by his wife and revered by his children. In the words of one who knows him well, "he is always the same, cheerful and happy, and looks at the bright side of everything." His motto, "It is not how little, but how much, we can do for others," is carried out systematically in his daily life. His home, in a breezy Square, bears a strong impress of the simple habits and taste of its head.

Wherein lies the secret of this good man's strength? Let us for a moment, with respectful hand, move aside the veil which shuts in the home of one of our notable men from a too curious gaze. This is the explanation we get, and herein lies encouragement for us all. "He has a quiet time with God before he goes into the City every morning. He puts himself in God's hands every day, and that is the secret of his quiet patience and his kindly smile." The friend and colleague, in all good works, of such men as the late Earl of Shaftesbury, the late Earl Cairns, the Earl of Aberdeen, Mr. Samuel Morley, Mr. D. L. Moody, and others, he is no less a friend to the humblest.

As a speaker he is earnest and forcible; and as a fitting conclusion to our very slight, and, we fear, inadequate sketch of his busy and useful life, we may quote some of his words, used at the forty-second anniversary of the Aldersgate-street branch of the Y.M.C. Association, held at the Mansion House last week. The Lord Mayor being obliged to vacate the chair, the seat was naturally filled by Mr. Williams.

In responding to a very hearty vote of thanks, he said, "I thank you for the kind words which have been spoken. Anything I have ever done has been the outcome and result of God's infinite mercy to myself. All praise to Him for his goodness to me; I can but magnify his grace, and glorify Him for what He has done. What He has done for me He will do for any young man in this great city of London. If any young man wants to lead a happy life, I can assure him that the Christian life is the happiest. That is what we have been teaching all these forty-two years, and what we desire to teach in the future—how blessed and good a thing it is to serve the Lord Jesus Christ, and how privileged are his true disciples. Our earnest desire is that all our young men may become his true disciples."

THE CHURCH FOR THE TIMES.

By Rev. JOSEPH COOK.

CLOSING BOSTON MONDAY LECTURE.

It is the whole duty of the Church to echo God. Wherever God acts there He is and speaks. An echo is not divisive of the voice it represents. It has no selective, self-assertive power. It repeats without diminution, interpolation, or addition. It reproduces not only the truth, and nothing but the truth, but the whole truth of the voice it represents. Any Church that echoes God's voice will be heard around the world. Not the man for the times, but the Church for the times is the proper rallying cry of reform. No one man will ever save the world. A combination of aggressive, omnipresent churches may. But the churches must not exercise selective, self-assertive power. They must repeat the message of Reality, without diminution or addition. They must exercise equal mental hospitality to severe truth and to tender truth. By what mark may true churches be infallibly known? By the fact that along all the summits of their doctrines and their deeds of the unobstructed Divine voice.

> From crag to crag leaps the live thunder

What should be the doctrines and what the deeds of the Church for the times?

I.

Notice first the reply which this question receives from self-evident religious truth or axiomatic theology. And in so doing summarise in a final view the organising facts and principles to the illustration of which this course of lectures has been devoted.

Contact with Reality is contact with God.

Co-operation with Reality is co-operation with God.

The Church for the Times must be the Church of Reality, that is, the Church of God.

In Reality, at the last analysis, it is not law, nor Nature, but a Personal Omnipresent God, with whom we have to do in life and death, and beyond death.

(1) We are in contact with reality, and we know that we are, when we say that without deliverance from both the love and the guilt of sin no soul can attain peace.

(2) We are in contact with reality, and we know that we are, when we affirm that character tends to a final permanence, and that a final permanence can come but once.

(3) We are in contact with reality, and we know that we are, when we proclaim the necessity of the New Birth, and of an Atonement and the duty of immediate repentance.

(4) We are in contact with reality, and we know that we are, when we say that an individual who surrenders to God has new light, and a strange peace and power flash through him. He becomes thus a telescope with a star in its chambers—a burning-glass kindling the fire of a new life.

(5) We are in contact with reality, and we know that we are, when we say that apostles, prophets, evangelists, preachers and teachers have their spiritual power from attention to all religious truth and self-surrender to it.

(6) We are in contact with reality, and we know that we are, when we say that a company or community of souls surrendered to God becomes a telescope with a star in its chambers—a burning-glass kindling the fires of new lives.

(7) We are in contact with reality, and we know that we are, when we call such a company or community a Church in which God dwells—a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

(8) We are in contact with reality, and we know that we are, when we say that against a Church founded on the cans and cannots of the very nature of things, the gates of hell cannot prevail.

(9) We are in contact with reality, and we know that we are, when we say that a Church thus founded has unity, catholicity, perpetuity.

(10) We are in contact with reality, and we know that we are, when we say that outside such a Church there can be no salvation.

All power in heaven and earth is given to Reality; therefore, let us teach all nations to observe all things which Reality requires, and so the power of Reality shall be with us at all times.

These are the necessary foundations of the Church of God. These four alls—all power, all nations, all commandments, all times, are the corner-stones of the Church of spiritual Theism, of which I always assert the efficiency, and deny the sufficiency. The Church of Reality is, or will yet be, the Church of Science. The city of Reality lieth four square. The length and breadth, and height of it are equal. Its twelve gates are twelve pearls.

II.

So much for the answer that axiomatic theology gives to my inquiry. What answer does historic theology give to it?

Precisely these four alls are the corner-stones of the historic Church of Christ. I venture to affirm that the sublimest and most effective words known to human history are those in which these four colossal alls were proclaimed as the foundation of the kingdom of the one God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, in the Christian Church. Where, in the whole range of recorded thought, have you anything possessing such scope and sublimity as these commands?

> "All power is given unto Me in heaven and on earth.
> "Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the one name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost,
> "Teaching them to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you.
> "And, lo! I am with you at all times, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. xxviii. 18—20).

So closes the first Gospel, and well it may close here, for the seventh heaven has been reached in the height of outlook:—

All power; all nations; all commands; all times.

These four alls of Christ from his supreme commission to his disciples are the four corner-stones of the Church of Christ.

It is certain that this commission exists in the history of the founding of Christianity.

It is certain the Church was founded on it.

It is certain that the Church has endeavoured to execute it for 1800 years.

It is certain that the depth of the meaning of the words, "all nations" was understood poorly until recent years.

It is certain that the depth of the words, "all commands," is not fathomed even yet.

According to Lotze, the structure of the universe is not only teleological but ethical. All power in heaven and on earth is given to ethical ends. So in the profound philosophy of the East the sacred word is Om, the supreme name of God. In the beginning was Reality, and Reality was with God, and Reality was God. All power is given to Him who is the Logos, who in the beginning was with God and was God. The Logos is the essence of Reality, and all power is given to Reality in heaven and on earth. "All power is given unto Me in heaven and on earth." These are not the words of a man. The stupendousness of this commission, its worthiness of reality, are among the proofs of its Divine origin. All power belongs to the God who was in Christ; therefore go and teach all nations loyalty to the Father as Ruler, and to the Son as Saviour, and to the Holy Ghost as Sanctifier.

This colossal "therefore" has an immeasurable scope and force.

In the Triune Name is contained a Creed, but not the whole message that is to be taught to all nations.

"All things whatsoever I have commanded you." These words indicate the scope of the doctrine of the Church of Christ. They include all his cans and cannots; all his parables; all his teachings as to the New Birth and the Atonement and prayer and baptism and the Lord's Supper and the resurrection and immortality; all his example.

Reality has a very definite creed and a wholly unalterable one. So has not the Church whose creed is the creed of no creed.

It is only on condition of self-surrender to all the religious truth known to the soul that the gift of the Holy Spirit is promised in all times.

There is a vast distinction between the Church for the Times and the Church of the Times. The former is a compass, the latter a weather-vane. The former is a Church of Reality, the latter the Church of Fashion. The former sets its own impress on the world; the latter takes its impress from the world. "Be not conformed to the world" is the motto of the Church for the Times. "Be conformed to the world" is the motto of the Church of the Times.

The tendency of the creed of no creed, to lead to the most unscholarly indefiniteness, perfectly barren of spiritual power, has been ridiculed of late so uniquely that I need not pause here and now to add to my argument a moral drawn from current events. This bit of delicious drollery from a Boston wit, Mr. Hale, in The North American Review (March, 1886, p. 239), says: "There are many people who tell ministers that there is no God and no immortality. There are some who say they know no distinction between right and wrong. There are so many of these people—intelligent and considerable people—that the Church has to determine to attend to the essentials of her business and to let the non-essentials go," that is such non-essentials as opinions concerning right and wrong, and immortality and God! "The Church can no longer afford to play with this folderol of minute distinctions." Exquisite raillery could not go further with safety on so sacred a theme, or be better justified by history!

(1) The Church for the times will be in close contact and in constant co-operation with Reality.

(2) It will have for its central creed the Vital Orthodoxy of both the Scriptures and of self-evident truth—that is, the Necessity of the New Birth, the necessity of an Atonement, the duty of immediate repentance.

(3) It will teach all the commands of Christ to all nations, and God will be with it at all times.

(4) It will assert the priesthood of all believers, when they are endued with power from on high.

(5) It will meditate on whatsoever things are true and lovely and of good report.

(6) It will be aggressive, scholarly and popular, and all lawful things to all men, so as by all means to save some.

(7) It will teach that the Holy Spirit is a present Christ, and our Lord the world's Lord.

III.

So much for the answer which historic and axiomatic theology give to my question. And now, what answer do you derive from Church history?

Allow your thoughts to pass freely back and forth through the constellations of the spiritual records of the Churches. You have great denominations called evangelical, and they justify their name by being fruitful. Growth is the supreme evidence of life. Fruitfulness in the spiritual field is something without which we cannot say a Church is connected with Reality, the branch severed from the vine, shrivels. If you divide the churches of all ages into the growing churches and the shrivelling churches, I think you will divide them pretty exactly between the evangelical and the unevangelical. If you please, that is history, and I cannot alter it. It is said that those who teach truths, called evangelical, do not believe in what they teach. History appears to believe in that course of thought and action commonly called evangelical; for history, over and over again, has shown that Churches adopting that thought and that kind of action have had growth, while the Churches not possessing these things have shrivelled

I might go into detail as to the vitality of individuals in Church history; but I have discussed already the fact that the vitality of a single soul is secured by the indwelling of God. In the Church as elsewhere, what is good for the bee is good for the swarm. As a man is converted by attention to religious truth and self-surrender to all of it that he possesses, so a community is. The indwelling of the Divine Spirit is attained in the manner we have seen in a study of apostles, prophets, evangelists, preachers and teachers, and in the same way in all ages it has been attained in individual churches.

There are churches for the times, even in our times, perhaps a thousand of them, between Oregon and Russia! There are churches of the times in great multitudes. I would not seem here to criticise anyone, least of all the brave men who lead the churches, whether of the times or for the times. I am a layman, and my conviction is that in nine cases out of ten when there is trouble in a church it is the fault of the laymen, who prefer a church of the times to a church for the times.

Imagine a body of believers in Vital Orthodoxy, all possessed of vivid and powerful convictions of the necessity of deliverance from the love of sin and of the guilt of it, and of immediate repentance; all with strong grasp on the self-evident religious truths; all with family altars; all led by apostles, prophets, evangelists, preachers, and teachers of the right tone; what would be their natural action as to creeds, as to Church-membership, as to the instruction of youth, as to reaching the masses by preaching and evangelistic services, as to the use of the press, as to current reform, national and international? I think that, among the novel suggestions we might hear from a body of such believers thus echoing God, would be these:—

(1) Let all believers become an aggressive priesthood, as soon and as far as they receive power from on high.

We read in the Holy Word that the believers were all scattered abroad, except the apostles; therefore they who were scattered abroad—that is, the laymen—went everywhere preaching the Word. I am not here to suggest novel expedients of a dangerous kind, but there is a sense in which the aggressive priesthood of believers needs to be emphasised more than it ever has been in our day.

(2) Let us have conversation meetings between believers and unbelievers at the close of our chief devotional gatherings at least three months in the year.

Kneel down with the inquirer; ask him: "What is your chief religious difficulty?" And when he states it, the problem is well on its way to solution. Ask God to solve it. Ask the inquirer to yield utterly to all the light he has, and you may be sure he will have more light, and that, following this added illumination, he will be brought at last into the land on which the sun never sets. I would have all Church members trained to go into these religious conversations in after-meetings; and in this zone, where the winter season is so long, I would have every year open with three months of such effort. A week of prayer, and twelve weeks of work; that is what we want with which to open every circuit of the seasons.

(3) Let visitation from house to house be carried out until all the spiritual wants of all the people are known and relieved.

(4) Let the methods of Church discipline be made Biblical.

(5) Let Church and State be kept separate.

(6) Let a spiritual churchmembership be secured at all hazards of offence to the world and fashion.

(7) Let there be a wise use of the press, monthly, weekly, and daily.

The time will come, soon, I hope, when Christians will control daily newspapers of their own. Too often, as we have had occasion to note, and as I hope you will remember, in journals of a certain class, not only is it true that the wish is the father to the thought, but also that the wish is father to the news.

(8) Let current reforms in their moral issues be discussed in preludes of week-day lectures.

I would not have a prelude on current events introduced into the pulpit on Sundays; but on week-day occasions why should not the churches occasionally discuss great topics of current reform, and take by the nape of the neck the iniquity of the land, and teach it its duty? In a republic, that seems to be the duty of the Church, and it is a duty that never has been well enough performed in this Republic.

(9) Let exchanges between preachers of different cities and nations be made numerous.

I greatly wish that the suggestion of our chief American evangelists might be carried out, and exchanges be effected between Edinburgh and London preachers on the one hand, and Boston, New York, and Chicago on the other, for certain months of the year.

(10) Let there be founded, with our International Evangelical Alliance, an International Christian Evidence Society. We ought to have here what England already has, a Christian Evidence Society; and an International Christian Evidence Society would meet a need of the times. An organisation of this kind should select and financially support men of adequate endowment and learning to present the Christian evidences and doctrines in all the foremost cities of the world, especially in those of countries like Japan and India, recently awakened from traditional misbelief, or now temporarily threatened by imported unbelief.

(11) Let a fourth year of study be added to the courses of theological seminaries for certain classes of advanced students.

(12) Let us have professorships on the relations of religion and science.

(13) Let Christian union of evangelical bodies have expression in frequent union meetings for evangelistic and philanthropic effort.

(14) Let public law as to Sunday and the liquor traffic and the social evil be brought into harmony with Christian sentiment.

(15) Let the churches, as God grants them opportunity, maintain the five orders of religious labourers—apostles, prophets, evangelists, preachers, and teachers.

(16) Let every church service be closed by some form of oral or silent prayer, calling every hearer to the duty of total immediate and affectionate self-surrender to God.

We address the heart; we address the intellect: we are learning, I hope, more and more to address the whole man; but it is only the very best class of the ministry that knows how to address the will, and cause it, by the blessing of heaven, to surrender utterly to God on the spot, and at the moment of the appeal. This is the value of the best kind of evangelistic services. We want no wildfire; but what is the difference between the evangelist and the ordinary preacher? The evangelist means to secure an immediate surrender to God. Perhaps he cannot address the intellect as well as you can; but he has learned how to present truth to the will. You present it to the heart, to the taste, to the intellect; and year by year your ministry is fruitless. Preach to the will an hour, and you have done more than by preaching days to the mere intellect, and heart, and the taste. We must not undervalue this latter kind of preaching; but, taken alone, it is futile sheet-lightning, and not the thunderbolt. Let us address the will on every public religious occasion, by calling for some final act of each hearer involving total and irreversible surrender of the will to all the light the soul has. Before any benediction is pronounced, let the audience, in both vocal and silent prayer, be led through a great and supreme act of utter self-surrender to Almighty God, as both Saviour and Lord.

Through all the Bible there flame high, cherubic symbols to represent the Church. We read of the stone cut out of the mountain and filling the earth; we read of the voice of the redeemed before the throne, and of the angel with the everlasting Gospel to be proclaimed to all quarters of the earth. But the supreme symbol we find in Ezekiel, where we read of the wheels and of the spirit within them. Whithersoever the spirit was to go, they went. When the living creatures went, the wheels went by them; when those stood, these stood; when those were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up over against them. The spirit of the living creatures was in the wheels. The likeness of the living creatures was like burning coals of fire. Out of the fire went forth lightnings. The living creatures ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning. The likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creatures was as the colour of a terrible crystal stretched forth over their heads above. Everyone had four wings which covered their bodies; and when they went, the noise of their wings was like the voice of great waters, and as the voice of the Almighty. Such is the voice which the Church for these times, and for all times, is called upon to echo.

PROTESTANTS IN BOHEMIA.

SIR,—The following statement, which has been forwarded to me by Rev. A. W. Clark, American missionary at Prague, tells its own story.

I myself visited Stupitz about three years ago, and can in all respects confirm Mr. Clark's statements. I have sent £10 as my own subscription towards the £165 required for the completion of a place of worship and pastor's house at Stupitz.

Yours faithfully, E. V. BLIGH.
Farthenwell Hall, Kent.

Before the year 1878 the little village of Stupitz was quite unknown, save in the county where it is located. The religious persecution, which some of the people suffered there in 1878 and 1879, astonished the Christian world. Their trials were discussed in the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, at Basel, in October, 1879, and a deputation of prominent men from different countries was sent to the Emperor of Austria to plead the cause of the persecuted. Ten years ago, the time when the present religious movement began, the village or hamlet of Stupitz was entirely Roman Catholic. In the year 1876 a farmer living there read the advertisements of a mission book-store in Prague. At his next visit in Bohemia's capital he bought several tracts and little books. He soon returned for more, and at length bought a Bible, which he and some of his neighbours began to read; the more they read, the greater was their interest and desire to know the truth. They then invited friends from Prague to come and explain the Scriptures. The awakened souls of Stupitz and vicinity met often, especially on Sunday, to study the Word.

The priest of a neighbouring village complained of this new and strange interest, and secured the interference of the civil authorities. The persecution began in January, 1878, and continued for two full years. They met in each other's houses to sing and pray and study God's Word, but hardly a Sunday passed in the time here specified that a gendarme (sometimes several of them) did not break up their meeting. Some were imprisoned for a short time, others fined. Quite a number withdrew from the Roman Catholic Church, and declined to connect themselves with any then recognised Protestant Church in Austria. During this time a child in one of the families died. Neither at the house nor at the cemetery were the afflicted friends allowed the privilege of public prayer, singing, or word of comfort. Sympathy for the persecuted was felt in different countries, and the Evangelical Alliance appointed a deputation to visit the Emperor of Austria. His Majesty received the deputation with great cordiality, and was not a little surprised to hear of such intolerance in his Empire. He promised relief in due time. In February the needed official documents reached the poor Stupitzers that they might have unmolested family Bible services with invited guests. Only those who have been deprived of religious liberty can fully realise the joy and gratitude with which this news was greeted.

The past six years have tested these people and their loyalty to Christ. With the assistance of the American Mission in Prague they have maintained their Bible services with unflagging interest. A Free Church, accepting the usual reformed standards of faith, as Heidelberg and Westminster Catechism has been organised. The pressing need of a house for worship with home for pastor has long been felt. The American Board has generously granted 1600 dollars for this cause. The people themselves have liberally helped, but nearly £200 are needed in order to dedicate the house to the Lord in July next, free of debt. From Stupitz to the nearest Protestant church is nearly five hours' walk. In some directions one might walk ten hours or more without finding any Protestant church. Contributions will be gladly received by Secretaries of the Evangelical Alliance, 7, Adam-street, London, W.C.; or by Rev. A. W. Clark, Missionary of the American Board, Weinberge, Prague, Bohemia.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH wishes her friends to know that her present address is, Care of Mrs. Harmon, Cape Palmas, Maryland, county Liberia, W. C. Africa. Having laboured in the other three counties of the republic, she has been wishing for a year to visit the fourth, but could not on account of the difficulty of transit. However, last February, she went to Grand Bassa, to a Methodist Conference, where Bishop Taylor also was present, and joining his party they induced a captain to accommodate them by calling at Cape Palmas. She describes the place as healthy and beautiful, and finds such an opening there for labour that she thinks it best not to return to Monrovia for a year. Mrs. Thomas Davis, Foxcock, co. Dublin, will still gladly forward any remittances consigned to her care.

LETTERS FROM ABROAD.—7.

On Tuesday evening, February 23, we left Algiers, and had a delightful passage to Marseilles. We called at the Sailors' Home, 104, Rue de la République, where is a reading-room open all day for English-speaking sailors, and a service on Sunday evenings. Le Repos (Strangers' Rest) is at 71, Rue de la Darse. There is excellent sleeping accommodation, but it is often insufficient for the demand. Here we called on the Comtesse Précorbin, a devoted Christian lady, who works diligently on behalf of the fallen. She had recently been in Spain, but we fear had not been able there to do a great deal for them. We also saw M. Dubuz, at 12, Rue d'Oran. He is the Secretary of the Y.M.C.A., and works in connection with the MacAll Mission, which has nine stations, all in good positions in public thoroughfares — in this respect having a great advantage over the one out-of-the-way station at Algiers.

The next evening we reached Narbonne, and on the following arrived at Figueras, in the north-east corner of Spain. On the way a French evangelist travelled with us for a few hours. He saw a book in our hands, and asked if it were a Bible, and then he went on to speak to the people in the carriage. He was bold and faithful, dwelling, however, a little too much on special doctrines, and not enough on such simple and elementary truths as our fellow-passengers needed, who were going to a Romish fête at Perpignan.

FIGUERAS, SPAIN.

The attention of English Christians has been frequently and painfully directed in recent years to this unhappy country. The terrible visitations by which it has suffered from floods and earthquakes and cholera have irresistibly called forth the sympathies of all who can feel for their fellow-men. A week amongst the villages, which are more numerous here than in other parts of Spain, and some of which were last year the scenes of terrible suffering, is quite sufficient to give an idea of the spiritual destitution which prevails. Under the baneful influence of priestcraft, the people are kept fast in the bonds of ignorance and superstition. The children are taught, in poetry and prose, to describe Protestants as an evil race, and, before the people learn to know them better, it is not uncommon for them to cross themselves, and pass over to the other side to avoid them. At one village an old woman was walking along a road, with a distaff on her arm, making thread. We drew near to look at it, but she took to her heels, and ran away from us faster probably than she had done since she was a girl.

On the evening of our arrival at Figueras we were met by Sr. and Sra. D. Luis Lopez Rodriguez. The former is familiarly spoken of by the people as Don Luis; the latter was known to many of our readers before she went to Spain as Miss Emily Murray, whose favourite work was visiting hospitals in connection with the Bible Flower Mission. The story of her interest in Spain, and her entry into it, is one of those evangelical romances of which Gospel history is full. One day she had started with her sister to go to the Ophthalmic Hospital, but remembering that she had no foreign texts, or tracts, or Gospels, she turned back, saying: "We may meet with some foreigner, and we must have something for him." She only found, however, one text-card in French, which she took. In the hospital she found a Spaniard, Señor Prévi. Miss Murray gave him the card, and asked if he would accept a Bible, of which he spoke very disrespectfully, though he admitted he had never read it. His friend promised to send him a Spanish Bible that night, as he was to leave the following day. She went to several shops to try to get one, but failed. At last she lifted up her heart in prayer for guidance, that she might be able to fulfil her promise. Then she was led back to the first shop she had called at, and begged them to look again if they had not got a Spanish Bible. They got up to a shelf where were some books covered with dust, for they had not been touched for years. The first of the pile was a Spanish Bible. At home there had been a dinner party, and Miss Murray, having gone out and succeeded in finding the Bible, called out one of the guests and persuaded him, in spite of his objections, to leave at once and take the Bible to the sister, or matron, to give to Señor Prévi. He read it, and six months after returned to London, a saved man, but discarded by his uncle, and with his good prospects ruined. How he went to Spain and preached the Gospel, and won souls, and died; how Miss Murray's way was opened to go to Figueras and take up the broken thread of his work; the perils from false brethren out of which the Lord delivered her; the circumstances which led to her marriage: are a story too long to tell here; but they were all links of a chain of providential leading, the purpose of which evidently was the establishment of evangelical schools, and the preaching of the Gospel of Christ in the town itself and in many surrounding villages.

On the day of our arrival we went to the schools, which are situated in the outskirts of the town. The ground floor of the house serves for a preaching-hall, seating about three hundred, and the upper rooms for schools for boys and girls. The attendance is good in spite of the disadvantage of the locality, and notwithstanding that they pay a peseta (9½d.) a month, while the Romanist schools are free. But parents who are of sufficiently independent spirit send their children there, because they get better taught, especially the girls, whom the priests have always endeavoured to keep in superstitious ignorance.

Among the trophies won for Christ by the Gospel in Figueras, is an old fortune-teller, who strayed into the hall one night, attracted by the singing. The people said she was a very wicked woman, and ought not to be allowed to come. But the Lord opened her heart to receive the Gospel; she gave up her fortune-telling, and is one of the brightest of the company who form the little church at Figueras.

A more central place of meeting is urgently needed; many more children would be sent to the schools, and a much larger number would come to hear the Gospel, if the buildings were more accessible. A desirable and suitable site is obtainable in the middle of the town, and for £1200 the necessary accommodation could be provided.

What then would be done with the present house? Why, it would serve admirably for a Cottage Hospital; for this indefatigable evangelist and pastor, and his devoted and experienced wife, have already commenced a Medical Mission, with two or three beds for patients whose needs require treatment such as cannot be obtained at home.

We heartily commend this work to English friends. We have had the pleasure of subscribing for the first few loads of stones.

The work in the town, however, forms but a small part of the weekly programme filled by this energetic Spanish evangelist and his enthusiastic English wife. Thirty-two villages more or less distant, within a radius of thirty miles, are visited, some weekly, some monthly, the journeys being accomplished on foot or in a tartana, a Spanish covered cart.

The nearest village is Villabertran, where meetings are held in a portion of an old convent of the Knights Templar, the rest of the building being still used by Romanists. We went there on Sunday morning, and nowhere did we meet with more interested people or more interesting children than in this, to a considerable extent, Carlist village.

Two years ago the night-watchman, who had received the truth, was going into the town with some evergreens to decorate the hall at Christmas. He was met by the priest, who asked him where he was going. On being told, he said, "You will bitterly repent that." The next night he was stabbed outside the church. His murder, however, led to the conversion of his wife, who had formerly been opposed; but when she went to tell the pastor he sympathised with her, opened to her the truth of the Gospel, and she is now a grateful, stedfast, and consistent disciple of Christ.

In the afternoon, at Figueras, the people were told that at night, after the preaching, we would speak to them by interpretation. The hall was packed; some gipsies were present, and Don Luis appropriately spoke about Hagar at the well. We followed, with almost our first attempt at speaking through an interpreter. It was extremely interesting to ourselves and to the people. It was good exercise also, necessitating short sentences, without any superfluous padding.

Our next visit was to Cabanas, where only two meetings had been previously held in the village inn, for which the landlord had been deprived of his post-office licence; but he again granted the use of his premises. There was no opening with prayer or singing; the people were not prepared for that. Don Luis spoke to them from one of the Gospel miracles, and at the close asked their consent to his praying with them, which was cordially given, and the people respectfully, if not reverently, listened.

A similar meeting had been held at San Clementi, a village eight miles distant, but the Alcalde prohibited a second, and had it been held, the proprietor would probably not only have been turned out of his house, but proceeded against at law; and this is a serious thing in Spain, with very uncertain issues. We went, however, as a second meeting had been announced, and called upon the Alcalde, a bloated and blustering personage, who not only peremptorily refused to allow the meeting, but threatened us with ejection by the Civil Guard if we did not leave his premises. We went to tea with a young man and his sister, who had been a nun, but had retired before taking the veil, in consequence of the priests' bad behaviour.

At Bisbal, a town of some importance, reached from Figueras partly by train, partly by diligence, there is the nucleus of a promising Christian church. A labouring man (who had been given a New Testament by a friend when in France, and who had for some time been reading to his friends a Bible, subsequently presented to him by Don Luis), having heard of the work at Figueras, walked thirty-six miles to ask that this town might be added to the list of those visited. A few meetings of a private character were held in the house of a tradeswoman, who had received notice to quit consequent on this confession of Christ. On nearing the town we were met by this little company, and hospitably entertained. A meeting, the first of a public character, was held in the hall of a café, attended by about two hundred, mostly men. A few questions were asked, and they quietly dispersed. A private meeting was then held to arrange for the Christians to meet together in fellowship.

The largest, and, in some respects, the most remarkable, meeting we attended was at Armentera, a village about eight miles from Figueras. The priest had announced that the church bell would be rung at the time specified for the meeting, and all who wished to be saved would go to church; those who did not might go to the meeting held by "those insects of the earth, the Protestants." The bell rang and gave notice of our meeting. About 800 men, women, and children, flocked to it; it seemed as if all the village was there, except eight women who obeyed the summons of the priest.

The great attraction was a magic lantern with slides, showing Abraham offering Isaac, the brazen serpent, and the crucifixion and resurrection of our Lord. The explanation of the Gospel given with the pictures was admirably adapted to the people's minds. Among the audience was a party of men from San Clementi, who would carry home an account of the teaching which their Alcalde, or mayor, had forbidden in their own village. We were escorted by a number of men for a couple of miles on our way home, as it was not safe for a small party of Protestants, after such a meeting, to walk unprotected along such a lonely road.

During our stay at Figueras, a deputation from another village requested Don Luis to go there and preach. We have since heard that the day after our departure he went there, returning late, but full of joy at having had the privilege of telling the Gospel to between three and four hundred persons who had never heard it before. The priest, on hearing of the intended visit, arranged for a mission to be held by the Jesuits at the same time, and also got up a procession by torchlight. Notwithstanding these attractions, the ball-room was well filled, and lighted by the very candles prepared for the procession and service, carried by the women, who finally followed their husbands to hear the Gospel, leaving the priests and Jesuits almost without an audience. The following mention of this appeared in the Figueras newspaper of March 21:—

El Ampurdances Missiones, March 21.—Last week a Protestant Mission and a Jesuit Mission were held in Capmany. The men were almost all with the former, and the women with the latter; but we observed that no sooner was the procession of Jesuits over, than the women followed their husbands into the hall where the Protestants were preaching, carrying still in their hands the lighted candles, which served perfectly well to light up the preaching hall, as they had done the procession.

On Sunday afternoon a peasant walked from Capmany, in order to beg Don Luis, on the part of the people, to "go and preach the good things to them soon again." An hour or so was spent in conversation with him. He, like many others, had purchased a Bible, 40 having been sold after the meeting. In order to make sure of his motives, Don Luis said, "You must understand that my preaching has nothing to do with politics." "I know that," he replied, "it is conversion you want."

In Spain, as in Corinth of olden time, we doubt not God has much people to be gathered in, and He will gather them, though there are many adversaries.

Having now returned home, we render hearty thanks to God for having sent us on such a mission; for arranging our journey, so that, although we went not by the shortest route, we came to each place at the right time; for giving us such a hearty welcome everywhere, and such pleasant and profitable fellowship with our dear brethren and fellow-servants; for preserving us from every kind of danger by sea and land, and for the very kind letters we have since received, assuring us that as we had ourselves been blessed so, our visits had been like that of Jonathan when he went out to David in the wood, and strengthened his hands in God.

We also cordially thank our readers who bore us up in prayer, in response to our request before we went, and we earnestly hope that it may be given to some of them to go forth on similar visitations at home or abroad. They never derived so much joy from picture galleries, or even from God's works in nature, as they will receive in seeing God's greater works in grace, and in giving encouragement to those working in lonely places. People go for pleasure trips round the world; why should not God's children go and call upon their brethren on the Continent of Europe, on the Congo, in India, China—anywhere where God may lead their willing feet, as that good soldier of Jesus Christ, Major Malan, visited the mission stations in South Africa?

PORTUGUESE PERSECUTION.

Dear Sir,—I wrote a few months ago asking prayer for a young man in the Azores, who is to be tried in May, for preaching the Gospel in his father's house. May I now ask the prayers of your readers for another brother (one of the converts who had to flee from this place in Dr. Kalley's time), and myself, who have been apprehended on a similar charge, in this island.

We are not in prison, as bail has been accepted, and have appealed to the Supreme Court, in Lisbon, against the action, hoping it may be quashed. If not, we shall have to take our trial here in November, and, left to the mercy of authorities who are in league with the Jesuits, and a country jury completely under the thumb of the priests, we are almost certain to be condemned, and may be expelled, not only from the island, but from all Portuguese territory, for a period of twelve years.

The state of the law is such, that infidels may blaspheme against any and every religion; but to deny that men can make a God is a crime that must be punished! Only last year a young poet published a book, with the infamous title of "The Old Age (or more idiomatically, "The Dotage" of the Eternal Father," full of the most abominable blasphemies against the Lord and his Christ, and not a voice was raised against it! But to tell poor sinners of the great love of Christ, to tell of a salvation without money and without price—this is proselytism, not to be tolerated! Of course the great object of the enemy is to try and stop the work, and if not successful in driving us out, to hinder the work by frightening the people, and putting us to trouble and expense. The little school in the village where we were apprehended has been terribly reduced in numbers owing to their opposition, and many who were gladly listening to the word are now afraid to come.

But we know the Lord reigns, and we can and do sing, "All, all is well," though we cannot see how it will end.—Yours in Christ,

Madeira, March 30. H. Maxwell Wright.

P.S.—I am leaving for Portugal, and would ask special prayer for the brother who remains here.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.—The seventeenth report of the Association for the Diffusion of the Gospel in Spain states that the actual work has at all times been small. Nevertheless, in various parts of the country little congregations of fifteen and twenty, in one or two cases fifty persons, meet regularly for prayer and the study of God's Word. In this way the seed of the kingdom is being sown, and the aim of the Association is being accomplished, viz., the extension of the Gospel wherever there might seem to be an opening; to scatter the seed, leaving to the Spaniards themselves to decide upon their own form of Church organisation. Mr. J. B. Hunter (of Messrs. Reed & Co.) Brown's-buildings, Liverpool, is Treasurer.

THE MEN AND THEIR BOOKS.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Christian Colportage Association for England was held on April 7 at Exeter Hall. A prayer-meeting, which was very largely attended, was held previously in the parlour, which scarcely afforded standing room for all present.

Mr. Samuel Morley presided at the meeting, and was supported on the platform by a number of friends of the work. The report read by the Secretary, Mr. H. D. Brown, was of a deeply interesting character. There are now 90 colporteurs employed by the Association in twenty-two different counties, and in London. During the past year the Society, by its system of colportage, sold 85,412 Bibles and Testaments, 274,759 books, 217,586 magazines, and over 152,000 Scripture text-cards. The total value of these sales was £11,216. These figures alone give cause for great thankfulness, but, beyond the mere figures, the continual flow of tidings of fruit seen in spiritual blessing has been most cheering.

Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, the Treasurer, read the financial statement, from which it appears that the amount actually expended for colporteurs, wages, and equipments, and for carriage of goods was £6372 4s. 8d., and for general expenses, rent of office and depôt, salaries of secretary and assistants, travelling, printing, &c., was £1233 3s. 2d. To meet this expenditure the gross profits on sales was £3221 9s., and the amount from subscriptions and donations £4336 17s. 6d., leaving a deficit of £47 1s. 4d. Mr. Kinnaird drew attention to the fact that although the staff had been unhappily decreased the sales were actually larger than during the previous year, which said much for the diligence and zeal of the colporteurs, and showed God's blessing upon their labours. He also spoke of the great economy with which the Society was worked, and pointed out that the profits on sales far more than paid all the general expenses, so that the subscribers might know that every penny subscribed was entirely devoted to maintaining the colporteurs in their work. He could assure them that not a single penny was wasted.

The Chairman said he had read the report with very great interest. He could testify, from his own knowledge, to the great amount of good being done by this Society; he himself had the privilege of supporting two of the colporteurs in the country, and he knew of nothing better adapted for taking the Gospel to scattered villages and isolated cottages. He referred to the great amount of polluting literature which was poured out over the country which went far to account for the impurity about which they had heard so much of late, and which made an antidote such as was supplied by this Society an imperative necessity.

Mr. George Williams having borne similar testimony, Pastor Frank White said that what had always endeared this Society to him was the high standard of truth it maintained, and the deep spiritual tone which characterised it. He was thankful to God that this Society was seeking to awaken the Church of Christ to the terrible dangers around us in the shape of evil literature. He was also thankful for the body of earnest Christian men that were sent out by this Society to counteract this evil by the circulation of the Word of God, and pure Christian literature.

Mr. West spoke of the work of the Bible carriage carried on by two of the colporteurs, and which he superintended, and he gave interesting information of similar work carried on by him in Ireland.

Mr. Maynard and Mr. Robert Paton warmly commended the work, and most earnestly urged that a great effort should be made for its extension. Mr. Paton stated that of all the forms of Christian work with which he was acquainted he knew of no better agency than this for "preaching the Gospel to every creature." If the needful funds were only supplied the Society would send out the men. They ought to have at least a thousand in England.

After the meeting some fifty of the colporteurs, who had come up from their different stations, were entertained to tea in the parlour; also a number of friends, including members of committee, superintendents, and others. Then all adjourned to the Council-room, where many of the men gave brief, but telling testimonies of their experience in the work. Altogether this series of meetings, from beginning to end, was truly a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

For the Young.

AS WISE AS SOLOMON.

As the sun shone one morning into the library, and upon two little brothers who sat upon the floor playing a game of marbles, it did not light up two faces that were as amiable as they ought to have been. The boys had been having a happy play, but somehow out of a good time disputes often come, and fun may end in unkind feeling. Rob and Ned generally got along pretty well together, but something was evidently wrong with them on that morning. It could not be the bit of clay that was in the marbles, so the trouble must have been with the boys.

Aunt Sue was coming to read to them, as she had promised, and as she walked along the hall she heard Rob say in a loud and angry voice: "I tell you, I never play with cranks." She waited by the door to hear what Ned's reply would be, and it came quickly: "But you, you are as wise as Solomon."

Rob heard the sarcastic ring of his brother's words, and, springing to his feet, with flushed face and doubled fists, was already for a fight. Aunt Sue's gentle touch quieted him, and his hands fell by his side. "Auntie!" he exclaimed in a voice from which the anger had faded, "Auntie, Ned is as mean as ——"

"Mean, dear boy!" she gently interrupted, "you do not seem to have as good an opinion of him as he has of you. I think I heard him say that you were as wise as Solomon. I wish that I knew as much as he did. Do you know, my lads, that that great king is spoken of as the wisest man who ever lived? Only this morning I was reading a description of the beautiful temple that he built for the service of God. There is one verse that attracted my attention: 'There was neither hammer nor axe, nor any tool of iron heard in the house while it was in building.'"

"What does that mean, Aunt Sue?" asked Ned.

"It means that all parts of the building were fitted before they were brought there, so that no tools were necessary, just as we are being fashioned by God to be parts of the temple in heaven; but into that temple, we are told, nothing that defileth can enter, and, dear boys, evil tempers come under that head."

The boys looked very sober, and both of them regretted the quarrel. Aunt Sue noted this with pleasure, and presently she said: "Shake hands and be friends, boys, and I will tell you a pretty story that I have heard about Solomon.

Ned held out his hand, but impulsive Rob threw his arms around his brother's neck and kissed him.

"Ready now?" asked Aunt Sue.

"Oh, yes," replied the boys.

"Not long after Solomon was made king, God appeared to him in a dream, and said, 'Ask what I shall give thee.' His answer was: 'Give, therefore, thy servant an understanding heart.' That meant that he wanted wisdom, so that he might know just what to decide for the people over whom he was king. God was so pleased by this request that Solomon received not only wisdom, but riches and honour. So you see, Rob, it is a great compliment to be compared to Solomon."

Ned could not keep back the colour that came to his face at this personal allusion; but as Aunt Sue did not even glance at him he found voice to say, "Tell us more, Auntie."

"It would take me a long time, Ned, to tell you all I have read about Solomon; but I came across a pretty legend the other day."

"Is it in the Bible, Auntie?" asked Rob.

"No, dear, it is not in the Bible, but in another book that I have been reading. The story is only a legend. If you will go to my room you will find the book upon the table; bring it to me, and I will read it."

Ned brought the book, and opening it, Aunt Sue read as follows:—

"'The power of the monarch had spread his wisdom to the remotest parts of the known world. Queen Sheba, attracted by the splendour of his reputation, visited the poetical king at his own Court; there, one day, to exercise the sagacity of the monarch, Sheba presented herself at the foot of the throne. In each hand she held a wreath; the one was composed of natural and the other of artificial flowers. Art, in the labour of the mimetic wreath, had exquisitely imitated the lively hues of nature; so that, at the distance it was held by the queen for the inspection of the king, it was deemed impossible for him to decide which was the production of Nature, and which the work of art. The honour of the monarch's reputation for Divine sagacity seemed diminished, and the whole Jewish Court looked solemn and melancholy. At length an expedient presented itself to the king. Observing a cluster of bees hovering about a window, he commanded that it should be opened: it was opened; the bees rushed into the court, and alighted immediately upon the natural wreath, while not a single one fixed on the other. The surprised and delighted queen had one more reason to be astonished at the wisdom of Solomon.'"

"What a clever trick!" exclaimed Rob, and, with a twinkle in his eye, he added, as he turned to Ned, "Thank you for comparing my wisdom to that of King Solomon. I only regret that I do not deserve it."

Aunt Sue joined in the laughter, and said—

"Dear boys, do be more careful about your tempers. Solomon does not seem to have been impatient because the queen asked him something that he could not answer at once, only grieved that he was not able to give her a reply. Do try to remember that, although you cannot be as wise as Solomon, you can still learn to control a high spirit, which is often the basis of a truly noble character.

"My talk is over, but as I know that both of you are waiting for the moral that you know is sure to be tucked away in those words, I do not like to disappoint you, and I think I will let this wise king give it to you.

"'A brother offended is harder to be won than a strong city, and their contentions are like the bars of a castle.'"—New York Observer.

REFUGES IN MANCHESTER.

The report of the Manchester and Salford Boys' and Girls' Refuges, and Childrens' Aid Society, read at the Sixteenth Anniversary, is almost unique in these days of depression and difficulty. Not only has the work been maintained in all its branches, but in the direction of emigration it has been largely increased. The total expenditure for the year has been no less than £5820, but, through the goodness of God, there is a balance in hand with which to commence the work of another year. The work is divided into ten branches: (1) the Central Refuge and Home, Strangeways, where the little waifs are first received, and then trained and taught; (2) six Homes for little orphan children, of from two to ten years, 145 of whom have been received during the year; (3) family Homes for working boys employed in workshops and warehouses, 38 of whom have thus been accommodated during the year; (4) the Girls' Industrial Home, in which forty-two girls over ten years of age, have been trained in the same period, preparatory to going out to work; (5) Shelter for wandering children, the advantages of which have been extended to 210 little wanderers; (6) the Boys' Rest and lodging-house, where, for the sum of 3d., a lad may enjoy a comfortable bed, with bath, besides being surrounded by wholesome and elevating influences; (7) a seaside home; (8) a training ship; (9) the emigration department, in connection with which, through the generosity of one of the trustees, who has given £1000 for the purpose, a large house has been fitted as a Training Home, where it is expected annually some sixty children more than in previous years will be trained for bright Canadian Homes; and (10) the Boys' Industrial Brigades, which during the year have given employment to 297 boys.

This is a grand catalogue of work of the most promising character, and the report closes with the expression of a wish which we heartily endorse: "May the readers of these lines do all they can in this blessed work of rescue, so that, with God's own blessing on the work, we shall yet see, even from the waifs and strays of our streets, the fulfilment of the promise that 'our sons grow up as the young plants, and our daughters as the polished corners of the temple.'"

FRANCE AND MADAGASCAR.

Some Freethinkers are very bitter against those French evangelical Protestants who show sympathy with the work of English missionaries in Madagascar. One journal says, "As for those, who like ourselves, are quite beyond all questions of religious confession, it is a matter of perfect indifference whether Madagascar is Protestant or Catholic; but what France cannot endure is that that island should become a simple dependance on the Biblical Societies of Great Britain."

The Christianisme hopes, without expecting it, that France will everywhere respect liberty of conscience and worship, and not slander as anti-French those who, while passionately devoted to France, cannot anywhere, under any pretext, hide their faith.

SIGHING AND DOING.

For affairs of this world or the next,
  This maxim is useful and true,
And may help you, however perplext:
  Give over your sighing, and do.

You need not take up the wrong end,
  Nor puzzle to see the way through;
In the duty you now comprehend,
  Give over your sighing, and do.

By climbing the very first hill,
  You may soon be surprised by the view
Of a way ever waiting a will;
  Give over your sighing, and do.

THE PRESENT NEED OF THE CHURCH.

The monthly meeting of workers at the "Strangers' Rest," Ratcliff-highway, was held on Friday week, when Mr. C. R. Hurditch gave an address on "Revival, the Present Need of the Church." We are just emerging, he said, from a severe winter. Nature looked dead. Yesterday I was in the country for a few hours. I saw nature had only been sleeping. The budding of the trees told me of new life. What is true in the natural world is true of spiritual work. We have had encouragements, but only in small things. The united effects of disbelief, misbelief, and unbelief have been at work. To-day, in many pulpits, instead of a ringing out of the Gospel in its all-round aspect clearly and simply we have hesitancy and doubt. Worldliness and a rage for entertainments have come into the professing Church. The other day a minister said to me, "Ministers must wink at such things, or they would never get a call." I am not speaking of green spots, of which there are still many.

The condition is such that conversions are rare. I said to a verger of a cathedral the other day, "How many conversions have you had lately?" "What, sir?" he replied. "Conversions?" "We don't believe in such things," was the response. I fear this is true of many of our churches and chapels as well. Formalism, sterility, and worldliness abound, but these are the signs of the coming of the Son of God. We are nearing the best revival the world has ever seen, even that of the resurrection morn, when the Lord Himself will come. This is the only hope of the Church.

The present need is not more workers, but revival by the Spirit of God in the hearts of his people. How little preparedness there is for the Conferences which are held, how little desire to continue waiting on God. The spirit of prayer is not continuous. In past revivals, such as that recorded in Acts iv., the people came together for the renewing of the power of God in evangelists, ministers, helpers, &c. Think of 1859-60, when the revival wave came from the United States to Ireland, and then to England and Scotland, when thousands were converted by simple, earnest words, and of these very few in number. I well remember how a few words from such as Reginald Radcliffe and Richard Weaver resulted in great blessing in Marylebone Theatre, and when Mr. Grattan Guinness went as a pioneer throughout the land. Patience and perseverance in prayer were the characteristics of the commencement of that glorious work. Why should we not wait upon God until He gives us such another revival? Let us begin with ourselves, and seek to be freed from all our personal sins. The urgent need is not to multiply agencies. We want to be stirred up ourselves to obtain the blessing. Look at the wealth and the talent lying unused in the Church. Let us be stirred up to prayer for a baptism of power. We shall never get the blessing until we rise above our littleness, and take in a request as broad as the Church herself.

As a practical outcome of the meeting, it was arranged to hold a special prayer-meeting at the "Strangers' Rest," on Friday evening, April 16, at 6.45 p.m. It is hoped that Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and other friends will be present.

DERBY Y.W.C.A.—Mrs. W. E. Legg has conducted a week's mission at St. James's Hall in this town. At the last meeting, which was for praise, several testified to definite blessing received during the mission.

A SERVANTS' HOME AND REGISTRY.

The good old saying that "Prevention is better than cure" had a very pleasing illustration lately in the opening of Westbourne House, 17, Westbourne Park-villas, Harrow-road. In January last some of the members of Dr. Clifford's Church started a Servants' Registry, at 2, Pickering-place, Westbourne-grove. We have heard a great deal in recent times of registries that are nothing more and nothing less than skilfully-laid traps for unwary young women who wish to enter service. To provide registries that will be real helps both to servants and mistresses is one of the great desiderata of the time. We therefore rejoice to chronicle the establishment of this one at Westbourne-grove; and are still more glad to know that since the opening it has been, in the words of one of the friends connected with it, "a decided success."

To follow up this excellent step with another, equally desirable, if not more so, Dr. Clifford and his helpers have acquired Westbourne House, which they intend to be a place of homely and friendly resort for servants out of place. A splendid thing surely, and a thing that needs to be multiplied all over London. A number of friends came together for the formal opening of Westbourne House. In a note to us Dr. Clifford says it was "a delightful and most helpful day, a blessing to those who engaged in it, and a foretelling of much good to come to others."

MR. STEAD ON DOMESTIC SERVANTS.

At the evening meeting Mr. W. T. Stead gave one of his deeply rousing practical talks; we feel constrained to quote some extracts from a local report:—

He was glad to hear of the commencement of a registry office in the district, which brought them all face to face with one of the great social evils of our time—and by that he meant the existing state of domestic servants. If they were to go to Millbank Gaol, and inquire of the Chaplain what class recruited that gaol with female prisoners, he would say that out of every ten girls or women at least five had been domestic servants. There was no kind of employment in which so many women were engaged as domestic service, and he believed he was speaking the truth when he said that of late years the ideal of domestic service had somewhat degenerated. There had grown up a greater apartness between mistress and maid. The mistress in too many cases had grown too much of the fine lady to be a house-mother of servants, as the old English house-mother used to be, and the result had been very bad. There were many causes which led servant girls to go wrong, all of which might be reduced to two. One was the want of care on the part of mistresses in the treatment and watching over the girls; the second was the fact of the trafficking system that was constantly being carried on with domestic servants. Between the two it could easily be seen why so many were blighted. The practice of sending girls to public-houses to get pots of beer between nine and ten o'clock at night was most reprehensible. To send a girl to a public-house, where she would meet the worst people in the parish and be exposed to gibes, and to hear words of gross familiarity, which so deadened the girl's finer feelings—he thought that should be a matter for Church discipline. Such conduct on the part of anyone was most ruinous, and calculated to thrust a girl to the very brink of hell. Another phase of this evil occurred when a girl stayed out after ten o'clock at night and the mistress locked that girl out and let her sleep in the streets or elsewhere, as so many mistresses had done, "to preserve the discipline of the household." What could they expect as the result? If for one night only for the purpose of experiment he could be allowed to turn the key upon those mistresses in some quarter of London, where they had no friend, and no money in their pocket, and let them face one night, there would be very little heard of the necessity of "maintaining the discipline of the household" by such extremely cruel methods as thrusting a girl into the street at midnight rather than let her come in and rest. As Christian men and women he would ask them to pause before they turned a girl loose into the world to sink or swim.

He thought the mistresses should regard, more than they were accustomed, the sense in which they held the future of the servant in their hands. Some mistresses had, out of spite, left the girl without a character, and thus she had been stranded. The mistress who refused the servant girl a character for any mere temper or spite—and some women were awfully spiteful—and that girl went wrong, her shame and fall might lie at her door more than at other human being's. They might punish her, but it was laying a blot and stain upon their own souls which might never be washed away; because in the reckless thoughtlessness which characterised so many, they never thought that it was a sin to be repented of. There was wanting a general sympathy with servants. Half the mischief and trouble which was seen in this world was caused by a want of understanding and sympathy. We had got hold of the idea that servants existed in order to save us an amount of trouble—and that was true in a sense; but if we got into the habit of regarding any human being as merely ministering to us, and forgetting that we also owed the duty of ministering to him or her, we were on the wrong track. We had to take trouble about those who serve us, and we must remember that it was ours to present them before God, better, more Christ-like, and higher in their manhood and womanhood because they had been in our service.

Respecting registry offices requiring a character of mistresses, he thought it was far more necessary that the girl should have a character from the mistress than that the mistress should have a character from the girl. When the recent Act was brought before the notice of the House of Commons, it made it a criminal offence for the keeper of a house of ill-fame to engage a girl without warning her of the nature of the house to which she was going. This was rejected by the House of Commons expressly in order that the keepers of such places might get cooks; and the person who said that was Sir William Harcourt. It was said some of them were very hot in their agitation. He believed that the fact that the clause was not inserted in the Criminal Law Amendment Act showed that the people were not half hot enough; and it stood like a great icicle to remind us of how utterly we failed to impress upon the House of Commons and Her Majesty's Ministers, past and present, any sense of what was due to an innocent, virtuous girl.

Mr. Stead referred to the business of foreign registry offices, and the dastardly influences which were brought about by their instrumentality. The slave trade among the monsters who had degraded Central Africa, was nothing to the deeds perpetrated by men wearing a white skin, and living in Paris the centre of civilisation, and in London, the capital which was considered the centre of Christianity. There were those who would sell any young girl for a few shillings. They wanted money, and such a woman once said to him, "An honest woman must do something for a livelihood"; and that was the sort of work which was still being carried on. Their consciences were seared as with a hot iron, and they failed to see the enormity of the evil connected with their terrible transactions. He thought those facts were sufficient to stir up the people to try to circumvent that sort of thing. If they believed in the brotherhood and sisterhood of humanity, he would ask them if there was any time from the first thing in the morning till the last thing at night, during which the members of the household came together on a common platform, to recognise themselves as brothers and sisters, and equal in the sight of God? If they did not, they were not doing right. If the servant was always down in the scullery and not equal with the master and mistress, in the sight of God that was a wrong action. He had talked to atheists about the matter, and asked them what they had to substitute for family prayers, and he never knew any who answered in the affirmative, but none could but admit of their value. They should be really family prayers. There could be at least ten minutes devoted in which mistress and maid, and master and man would feel that they were all alike, equally sinners in the sight of God—that duty which no one could depute to another. But to those who had made up their minds not to do a duty before they prayed, he would say—do not pray, for it would not matter a bit. If they neglected their duties, their prayers would be in vain.

IN SEARCH OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

From Schadura, in Volhynia, in Russia, there comes a loud cry for help to enable a congregation, numbering about 200, who are denied the privilege of worshipping God, in connection with the Church of the United Brethren (or Moravians) to emigrate to Brazil. A few facts showing how the congregation was formed, how the members believe that they could not be spiritually fed if they remained in Russia, and their determination to go to Brazil, and the steps they have already taken, will be read with interest.

At one time the extensive estates in the Province of Volhynia had to be sold by the impoverished owners. This led to the immigration, on a large scale, of Germans and Bohemians. Some of these (of both nationalities) were led in a remarkable manner to request the spiritual oversight of and union with the Brethren's Church. Early in 1882 the news spread in Schadura that a minister of the Church of the United Brethren, Rev. T. H. Steinberg, was to preach in a neighbouring village. Two of the leading men went to hear him. He preached from St. John xi. 40. The heart-stirring words of the preacher were brought home to the hearers with much power. The men from Schadura requested the preacher to visit their village. He did so, and many were led into light and peace through his instrumentality.

In October, 1884, Mr. Steinberg returned to them as their pastor, and was accompanied by a Mr. William Lange, who is conversant with the Bohemian as well as the German language. Soon, however, the former was prohibited by the local authorities from acting as a minister of the Brethren's Church, and sorrowfully left Schadura, hoping soon to return as their authorised minister. Meanwhile Mr. Lange remained with the little flock in a private capacity, whilst negotiations were carried on with the Russian Government.

The answer to their petition arrived at length, but it was a refusal. When Mr. Lange communicated the sad intelligence, the members, both men, women, and children wept bitterly; they kneeled down, and breathed out earnest prayer to their Father in heaven that He would direct them. Afterwards they sang Luther's grand hymn of confidence, "God is our Refuge in distress"—"Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott." The converts declared they could not think of going back to Romanism, nor could they put themselves under the care of the Lutheran minister of the district, as he could not possibly exercise that spiritual oversight which they had learned to value, seeing that he had to attend to 300 villages.

Representations to the Russian Government proving ineffectual, the converts resolved to emigrate with their pastor. The latter visited last autumn various places in Germany, Bohemia, and Galicia to find a place of refuge, but in vain. They have now been led, and by the hand of God as they believe, to emigrate to South Brazil, where they would have entire religious liberty, and where they would find 200,000 Germans already located. They purpose leaving about the middle of May by a Hamburg ship.

They find it very difficult to sell their land, as there is great poverty in Volhynia. With the small sum they have realised from the sale of their cattle, houses, and furniture, they will pay a part of their passage money. A goodly number have already forwarded the "earnest money" for their voyage to the Hamburg agent. But about £360 or £400 will be required for some sort of needful outfit, for the remaining passage money, for the purchase of land in Brazil, and their settlement there. As it is desirable that any kind help sent for this special object should not be mixed with the funds gathered for the Moravian Missions, Mr. M. H. Hodder, 27, Paternoster-row, E.C., has undertaken to receive any contributions that may be sent, and will see that they are forwarded to the proper quarter.

HARD TIMES.—Mr. George Fuller, 1, Follett-street, Poplar, in a little pamphlet bearing this title, gives a selection of cases that have come under his own notice, and which serve to illustrate the motto of his Report—viz., "One half the world knows not how the other half live." During the winter free meals have been provided several times a week for the destitute, many of whom were without food for two days together. Upwards of 3000 garments were distributed to the poor, and a place of worship found for such as were willing to go. Food, clothing, or donations are to be sent to Mr. Fuller, Superintendent of the mission, who, we presume, will gladly send his little pamphlet to any who apply.

CINCINNATI REVIVED.

Until within a few years past Cincinnati was known commercially as "Porkopolis," from the fact that it was the greatest of American packing cities, and with the "business-like" name it was called the "Queen City of America." With her pride grew a haughty spirit, and we are taught that "a haughty spirit goes before a fall." Chicago, with its central location, its push, and rapid growth—the marvel of the world in this century—has steadily won our fame, and to-day we are only "ordinary."

With our business our piety waned. Sin and iniquity increased, until we have been denominated "the Paris of America." Not so bad as San Francisco, first, or New Orleans, second; but we have ranked third for Sabbath desecration. Riot, disorder, and bloodshed have followed. Cincinnati ranks second, I am told, in the manufacture of beer, and as much of it is drunk here in proportion to population as in any other city in the Union, nearly one-half of the population being German. Theatres, from the most elevating (?) to the lowest dives, have done their best business on the Lord's day. The doom of Sodom seemed to hang as a pall over Cincinnati.

A sufficient number of the righteous have been found to save it. The forces of the Lord's army have been marshalled; they have gone into the battle as one man; shoulder to shoulder they stand in the conflict; and as true as God's Word is, the city will be saved for Christ. The fame of a "tallow-faced Georgian"—Rev. Sam P. Jones—has passed over the wires of our Continent as a meteor; he stands to-day preaching to more men and women than any preacher on American soil. The middle of January he came to Cincinnati, his first visit, to preach. At one of the largest churches hundreds were turned away before the first week was past. From the church to the great music-halls his meetings were taken, and for four weeks his audiences would average from five to six thousand; while at Sunday services, for men only, at four o'clock, and evening services for the masses, the house would not hold them. Sunday nights thousands were turned away.

He preached righteousness, repentance, and the forsaking of sin—the power and glory all belonging to our ever-blessed Triune God. His onslaught on the liquor interests and social sins of individuals and society was without gloves. The following from the oldest religious paper in Cincinnati—The Herald and Presbyter—may be indicative of the interest stirred in the community: "A paper mill near this city reports the receipt of several bales of playing cards, which they are grinding into pulp. It is believed to be largely the result of Mr. Jones' severe denunciation of card-playing."

Our oldest and most conservative pastors are united in saying it has been the greatest revival they have ever gone through in Cincinnati. The conviction of sin has been deep, and the conversions number many hundreds. As careful inquiry as I can make reveals the fact that hundreds of accessions have been made to the churches; among them many of our brother citizens from business and professional ranks.

So deep-rooted has sin been that it has been hard to enforce many of our city laws. For their better execution a Citizens' Law and Order League has been organised to close houses of public amusement of all kinds on the Sabbath, and suppress the sale of liquor to minors at all times. God has put his seal to their work in many instances. Police-Judge Fitzgerald, a Catholic, is one of the sternest and most conscientious that has ever been on this bench. He is overwhelmingly elected—men of all political parties uniting on him. The League is scoring "victory" right along, and "they have come to stay."

There is a progress for the redemption of Cincinnati hitherto unknown. The fire of God's righteous indignation has been kindling, and justly, with a day of grace beyond. The warning has been heeded, and God's people in humiliation are now before Him for extended mercy. His people in Cincinnati are before the world for their prayers. Will the readers of The Christian remember the request?

CRUELTY TO CHILDREN.

In acknowledging the receipt of donations by our readers for the London Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Rev. Benjamin Waugh, the Honorary Secretary, writes:—

As we get more into our work, we are astonished that such a wretched state of things for the hungry and wounded children of our great city has been allowed to go on for so long unpunished, almost unrestrained. Yesterday, I was seeing a frail girl of ten who had her right arm disabled by blows of a poker; she was set to scrub the floor with her left arm, and was then whipped for being so long about it. This was but one of the ways in which the child has been punished ever since her stepmother became mistress of the house. Another child of six, whose back was a network of wounds and bruises, made by a strap, for letting out the fire, came into our hands on Saturday. We have four pitiable little things from one family, including a baby of a few months old, all left absolutely to themselves, without food or fire, whose mother is drunk the day long, whose father pleads with us to help them.

Our Shelter has a dark stream of life constantly passing through it on its way to Christian Homes and schools all over the land. Let alone, it would have gone its weary way to an early grave, or to a puny and crippled life.

MR. HAMMOND IN CARDIFF.

For over two weeks Mr. E. P. Hammond has been holding meetings in Cardiff. The Lord has added his blessing to the services. A large number have professed conversion. On the evening of Saturday week Mr. Hammond preached to between 2000 and 3000 adults in the large building in Wood-street. A very deep impression was made, many remaining to the second meeting earnestly seeking the Saviour.

The Sunday-schools have largely shared in the blessing. One teacher invited her class to tea, and they afterwards attended the Gospel meeting, with the result that most of them are now rejoicing in the assurance of sins forgiven. Another teacher reports that over a hundred scholars in her school have professed to experience a change of heart. A number of interesting cases of conversion have been met with. Previous visits to Cardiff by Mr. Spiers and Mr. Arrowsmith have paved the way for this season of revival. Among the workers are not a few who were converted during Mr. Hammond's last visit, some nineteen years ago.

Twice last week Mr. Hammond spoke at the docks to crowds of men. At certain hours of the day when the tide is out large numbers of men are unemployed; these gather and chat together. Having nothing to do they are very glad when anything turns up. They gathered round Mr. Hammond as he sat on horseback, and listened most attentively. Mr. R. Cory, who is host to Mr. and Mrs. Hammond, was present. It is believed that a great deal of good was done. Cardiff has more than doubled its population since Mr. Hammond was there seventeen years ago. He will continue his visit during the present week.

HEXHAM Y.W.C.A.—The annual gathering was held on April 1. After tea about 380 assembled in the Town Hall, and earnest addresses were delivered by Rev. G. Barlow, Miss Driscoll (Liverpool), Miss Moyce (Newcastle), &c. The platform was a strongly representative one, and both clergy of the Established Church and Nonconformist ministers and friends expressed cordial sympathy with the work. The Chairman, Mr. L. C. Lockhart, spoke warmly of the excellent organisation of the Y.W.C.A., and expressed his pleasure at learning from the report that it took in all corners of the earth.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.

These brethren continue to meet with much success in their evangelistic tour through the Southern States. As to the work in San Antonio, Texas, a correspondent of the New York Independent says:—

Probably the most important and lasting result of their visit here is the starting of a Y.M.C.A. Mr. Moody was invited to luncheon, at his hotel, to meet some fifteen or twenty of the most prominent business men of the city. He gave them a talk on the importance of a Y.M.C.A. for San Antonio, and urged the rich business men of the city, regardless of denomination, Jew or Gentile, &c., to give the young men a building. The suggestion was adopted, and already over $10,000 has been subscribed. A lot will be bought, and a $20,000 building erected immediately. The money is expected to be subscribed and paid in within the next week: and reading-rooms, bath-rooms, gymnasium, and library will be furnished. Since Mr. Moody left, a Y.M.C.A. has been constituted, with over one hundred members. A paid secretary will be employed. We will long remember the visit of Moody and Sankey to San Antonio in 1886.

MOBILE, ALA.

Writing to the same paper from this place, a correspondent says:—

A growing spirit of unity had prevailed for some time previous; a growing desire to subordinate everything else to the work of saving the unreached multitude of our city. Months ago the Protestant pastors, Episcopalian and all, joined in the petition to the evangelists to come. When the matter was decided, systematic and diligent work of preparation was begun at once. Business men "took stock" in it, giving money and labour cheerfully. Union prayer-meetings were held daily in the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, continued services were conducted by the pastors in many of the churches, Christians were revived, and gave themselves with new zeal to personal service, converts were added to the company of the saved, and a wide-spread interest was awakened in the community before the evangelists came. A ten days' mission, conducted by the Paulist Fathers, Deshon and Doyle, immediately beforehand, contributed to the general awakening.

The iron was hot when the first blow of the evangelist fell, and every blow told mightily. Such spontaneous enthusiasm and outpouring of the people was phenomenal. All classes and colours and conditions of men were represented. Merchant princes and paupers, gamblers and gentlemen of the world, fallen girls, and queens of society, Catholics and Protestants, Jews and Gentiles were there, sitting side by side, listening, sometimes with laughter, often in tears, to the words of warning and of life as they fell in sermon or song from the lips of the evangelists. Such scenes and sounds were startlingly new to thousands in this gay, easy-going, pleasure-loving city of the Gulf. Well might Mr. Moody say, as he stood on the platform last night, flanked by ministers of all denominations, including "our brother in black," surrounded by the vast choir rising tier on tier, and facing such an audience on the floor and in the galleries: "It is the Lord's work, and it is marvellous in our eyes."

DEAF AND DUMB.—The Dublin Protestant Deaf and Dumb Association is one which has a peculiar claim on the sympathy of the Christian public. It is acknowledged, as a result of the work of the Association, that "the moral condition of the adult deaf and dumb is at present infinitely superior to what it was thirty years ago." Services specially suited to these afflicted ones, and which are greatly appreciated by the spiritually minded, are continually being held. There is also a reading-room where they can meet together, and care is taken to find employment for them, and to help those in sickness and distress. Mr. Maurice F. G. Hewson is the missionary and secretary; his address is Christian Union-buildings, Lower Abbey-street, Dublin. He is himself both deaf and dumb, and is a devoted Christian and worker in behalf of his fellow-sufferers. From personal knowledge we cordially commend him and his work.

THE PURITY CRUSADE.

In future records of the history of the Church Militant, the year of grace 1885 will fill a conspicuous niche, as a period in which the opposing forces of good and evil were brought into sharp collision, and when the cause of truth and righteousness achieved a glorious victory. Many agencies have been at work, and many circumstances have conspired to bring about this crisis in the struggle that is ever being waged between light and darkness. In the great drama no mean part has been played by the young but vigorous Gospel Purity Association, the first report of which lies before us.* It attracts us by the admirably designed and chastely tinted cover, and our interest is in no wise abated by the perusal of the stirring events that crowd its hundred pages. Here we have, in a compact and well-expressed narrative, a bird's-eye view of the fight for social purity that raged in our land throughout the bygone year; that culminated in the revelations of The Pall Mall Gazette, and the passing of the Criminal Law Amendment Bill. We have an interesting and outspoken account, not only of the rise and rapid growth of the Gospel Purity Association, but of many kindred efforts; of the "great judicial scandal" in connection with the notorious Jeffries case; of The Pall Mall disclosures, and the agitation that followed; of the second judicial scandal, as many believe it to be, which consigned Mr. Stead and Rebecca Jarrett to the felon's cell, while no serious attempt was made to bring the real criminals to justice.

Many readers will welcome the portraits of some "leaders and advocates" of the Purity movement. The foremost place is deservedly occupied by Mrs. Josephine Butler, to whose long sustained and courageous devotion to a noble cause much of the present success of the crusade is due; the other portraits are those of Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Mr. J. B. Wookey, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., Mr. W. T. Stead, Professor Stuart, Mr. Charles James, Rev. H. Price Hughes, Sir R. N. Fowler, Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, and Mrs. Wookey. As the Secretary of the Gospel Purity Association, Mr. J. B. Wookey has borne a large share of the burden and heat of the day, and our readers will be glad to see his portrait transferred to these columns. His rousing and courageous utterances, in many parts of the kingdom, have done much to awaken and educate public opinion on this subject, as well as to warn and to save young men from the dangers that meet them on every hand. The work of the women's branch, carried on chiefly by Mrs. Bradley and Mrs. Wookey, is also recorded in this volume, which we heartily commend, as well fitted both to excite thankfulness for the successes of the past, and to nerve for the struggles on behalf of right thinking and holy living, in the time to come.

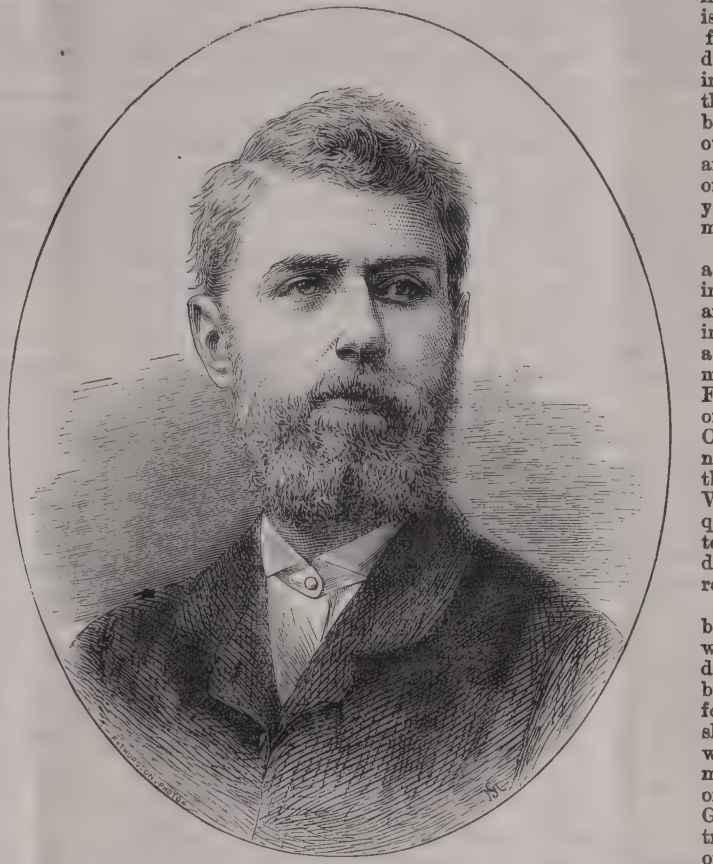
REV. W. HASLAM IN ONTARIO.

A deep and earnest movement is in progress at St. James' Church, London, Ontario, in connection with meetings held by Rev. W. Haslam. Large congregations have assembled, and the plain truth has had a telling and quickening effect. A meeting for praise held in the school house was not only interesting to a degree, but showed what had been the effect of the messages delivered in the previous days. The service on Sunday evening was one long to be remembered. At its close the Lord's Supper was partaken of by 235 communicants.

A powerful, and yet quiet factor in this work has been that portion of it carried on by Mrs. Haslam; her meetings "for women only" have been thronged with ladies from all parts of the city, who have listened with much profit to her clear and persuasive expositions of God's Word. As one of the results of the work in this beautiful church and parish, arrangements are being made for the holding of a simultaneous mission in all the city churches during Lent, to last eight days.

YOUNG WOMEN AT KINGSLAND.

The second annual meeting of this Institute was held on Tuesday evening, of last week, at the Mildmay Conference Hall. The statement of the Hon. Treasurer showed that during the past year the Mission has rapidly grown; the various meetings and classes have been well sustained; the several clubs have met a real need, and 1645 girls have come under the direct influence of the Mission. The district nursing department was shown to have been a great success; nearly 300 cases have come under the care of the nurses during the year. Testimony to its value was borne by the Hon. Surgeon, who, in a letter referred to the good results he had seen in the patients he had visited. The visitation among the factory girls has been much appreciated by some of the employers. Larger premises are already needed, so that a larger number of girls may be brought under restraining and saving influence. We heard with regret that there is a great lack of funds; we hope this need may soon be met, especially in view of the approaching Easter Holidays, during which period of leisure and danger it will be sought to throw a protecting shield over young women.



MR. J. B. WOOKEY.

The chairman, Mr. C. Ernest Tritton, warmly commended the Institution to public support. Mr. J. E. Mathieson, pointed out that the pressing need of such an Institute was seen in the fearful increase of intemperance, the growing lawlessness of the age, the absence of home comforts among the poor, and defective sanitary arrangements. Mr. G. Soltau pleaded for earnest Christian ladies to take up some branch of the work as a life-work; he told of one poor girl who had been in prison 120 times, but is now a happy Christian, Mr. George Holland gave some account of his own work among the girls in George-yard. The neglect of these working girls, he said, would surely become a national danger, and mistresses would do well to manifest greater interest in those who served them. He asked the friends present to back up Miss Robarts in her noble enterprise, which he believed to be one of the most important efforts in all London. Mr. Robert Paton added earnest words, telling of several recent cases of God's saving power through the Gospel.

Y.W.C.A. HOLIDAY FUND.—In the appeal in our issue of April 1 it should have been stated that the Hon. Secretary of this branch is Miss F. M. Fraser, 4, Inverness-terrace, London, W.

A GROWING WORK IN CAPE TOWN.

Most interesting accounts of the work in connection with the Soldiers' Home, and Workers' Association, Cape Town, continue to reach me. Our newly-appointed missionary is working well in the barracks, on board the ships, in hospitals, and in the town. The soldiers attend the Home in large numbers. There is, Mr. Howe writes, an earnest spirit of inquiry among them, and real desire for the Word of God: several profess conversion. The public meetings for civilians as well as soldiers are crowded; members remain for the after-meetings, and many instances of blessing are known. Three Gospel meetings are conducted on Sunday evenings at the same hour, in different parts of the town, by workers connected with the Home.

Our hearts are filled with thanksgiving to God for providing a house in the town as a centre for work among young women. There are touching incidents connected with this gift. It is devoted to the Lord's service by a father, in memory of two much-loved daughters, his earnest desire being that in the house which was the home of their childhood, many young lives may be helped and saved. It is given to our Ladies' Association of workers, and is what we have long needed in order to begin special work among young women, and for workers' meetings.

A member writes: "Mr. Howe had a very beautiful consecration meeting in the new house; we had much prayer and praise: it was a very full meeting." Another says, "I felt it to be a solemn, as well as thanksgiving meeting, for it is a great charge our Father has committed to us. The cry of every heart was, 'We praise thee, O God!' Means and workers are needed now, and we are asking for them in full belief of the promise. When I first heard of the gift, I felt quite awed, it was such a direct answer to prayer. Truly He gives 'abundantly.' We had been asking for a room, and He has given us a house."

This house of twenty rooms must be furnished and prepared for the work waiting to be begun. Much is being done in England for young women in business; nothing as yet has been done for them as a class at the Cape. I shall most thankfully receive and forward contributions from friends who may desire to help us in this work, or that among soldiers and sailors. Gifts of books, Gospel papers, and tracts will also be most acceptable for our libraries, ship-bags, reading-rooms, &c.

Particulars regarding our work and proposed Y.W.C.A. may be obtained from Rev. Andrew Murray, Wellington, South Africa; Dr. W. S. Eccles, Upper Norwood, as well as from myself.

(Mrs.) M. S. Osborn.

BOURNEMOUTH Y.M.C.A.—The report of this Association speaks of satisfactory progress in regard to the work of the past year. It is somewhat remarkable as recording the deaths of their late President, Earl Cairns; of the late Secretary, Mr. A. V. C. Boisseau; and of a member of the Council, Mr. Jones Loyd. The new Cairns Memorial House is rapidly approaching completion. Help is asked towards the expense of furnishing.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS.—A sale of work on behalf of this excellent institution is to be held in the Agricultural Hall, Islington, May 6 to 12. Rev. A. O. Charles, the energetic director of the work, is providing a varied and attractive display. A feature of unusual interest will be the reproductions of historical buildings and costumes. We regret to observe that there is to be "a military camp;" this warlike adjunct we should think could have been well dispensed with. Much more to our mind will be "The Little Boys' Village," where the lads will be seen at work. The Homes are doing a good work, and we trust this effort will be well supported. The office is Bank-buildings, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

Notes and Comments.

Next week we shall give a portrait and sketch of Mr. William Quarrier, of the Orphan Homes, Glasgow.

Owing to the large space occupied by the report of Rev. Joseph Cook's very valuable Boston Monday lecture—the last of the current series—we are obliged to omit many communications in our present issue. During the continuance of the approaching May Meetings we hope to provide enlarged space.

Instead of giving, as customary, a complete list of the "May Meetings" in one issue, we have thought it would better suit the convenience of our readers if we furnished the current list from week to week; the first instalment will be found on a succeeding page. Our publishers have, however, prepared the list in its complete shape in neat pamphlet form, and any friends wishing to possess a copy can obtain one by sending a halfpenny wrapper for postage.

By the lamented death of Mr. William E. Forster, M.P. for Bradford, a prominent figure disappears from the political stage. Mr. Forster will be chiefly remembered as the author of the Education Act, and by his term of office as Chief Secretary for Ireland; but his strong sympathy with every good cause, and his unbending fidelity to his convictions of duty, earned for him the high esteem of all sections of the body-social and politic.

Our Notes on March 25 with regard to the prospects of the Church of Ireland, in the light of possible future events, appear not only to have given offence to The Record, but also to have been quite misunderstood by several clergymen who have written to us on the subject. That the circumstances under which the now celebrated responses to The Record's queries were written, were "well calculated to lead to exaggeration," we are still satisfied—exaggeration, not as to statements of pure fact, but as to the probable outcome of political events. The tone of some of the replies, indeed, bears witness to the fact that in some cases at least it was difficult to write calmly with regard to possibilities of so painful a kind.

That we should be accused of want of sympathy with the Irish clergy, as one good clergyman accuses us, is another matter; and we are sure the majority of our readers will be as surprised as we are at the charge. The Christian has ever been an uncompromising opponent of the Church of Rome in all its developments and off-shoots, and it would, therefore, be impossible for us to look upon the probabilities which give so much anxiety to our Protestant brethren in the sister island, without sharing that anxiety, and feeling deeply for those upon whom it must primarily press. Loving the truth as it is in Jesus, we must necessarily deplore anything which seems to point to an increase of power in the cruel hands of Rome. At the same time we cannot put aside our faith in God, and believing, as we do, that the truth in Christ must triumph, we cannot despair of the result. This trust in the ultimate purposes of God with regard to his people only deepens our sympathy, however, with all who have to pass through troubled waters in its defence. The Lord's arm is not shortened that He cannot save, and He will bring our Irish brethren through, in his own way and in his own time; all the more surely, it appears to us, if they but trust to Him, instead of leaning upon any arm of flesh.

The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin has given some strange advice in his time, but perhaps none more remarkable than that which finds a place in his recent Lenten Regulations. These are indeed days of toleration, but it is hardly to the Church of Rome one would look for directions to read the Bible; yet Dr. Walsh is found saying:—

> The reading of religious books, such as the "Sacred Scriptures" and the "Lives of the Saints" and also of good scientific, literary, and historical works written in a spirit of truth, is to be encouraged. Parochial libraries are most useful for the promotion of true knowledge and should be everywhere established.

We all know what the phrase "written in a spirit of truth" means, when a Roman Catholic dignitary uses it, and how science is filtered down and history is garbled to suit the Romish juvenile mind; but that the reading of the Bible in any shape or form, Douay or otherwise, should not only be sanctioned in Ireland but positively recommended is almost beyond comprehension: all the more that nothing is said about the inability of the reader to understand the Book without the aid of a priestly interpreter. Surely this singular change of front must have followed deep and anxious consideration; and, as the Romish Church in Ireland has hitherto strenuously opposed the circulation of the Holy Scriptures, and in many cases has not been content even with forbidding their perusal, we are anxious to learn what can be the motive of the noteworthy utterance. Meantime we can have no better wish for Ireland than that her people may take the Archbishop at his word. Bibles are not difficult to obtain in the sister island; perhaps the day may yet come, and more speedily than we have ventured to hope, when Rome will find that they are difficult to get rid of.

With much regret we learn that Mr. Archibald G. Brown, of the East London Tabernacle, has been ordered by his medical advisers to take a few weeks' complete rest. The severe strain of the winter's work among the London poor has told on our devoted and hard-working friend, and he has had to succumb—for a brief space only, we trust. His loved work, it is feared, may suffer financially by his absence, and it would, doubtless, cheer our brother's heart to find on his return that it has been amply provided for. During that absence we are informed that communications to Mr. Brown's residence, 22, Bow-road, E., will receive due attention.

At the Thames Police Court a few days ago a man said to be starving, and who certainly was in receipt of a trifling amount of relief from the Mansion House Fund, was fined two shillings, with the alternative of a term of imprisonment, for the terrible offence of not having sent his hungry and ragged children to school. It goes without saying that he had no money for the luxury of a fine, and he was removed to the cells, to be released, however, when a charitable person came forward and produced the two shillings on his behalf. In another case, the other day, from a family the entire earnings of which amounted to only ten shillings per week, the large sum of one shilling and twopence weekly had to be set apart for school fees, or summonses would have resulted. These instances are far from being exceptional.

Education is a very good thing, but surely it was never intended that it should take the place of food; and when we reflect that hundreds of these unfortunate people who at present are starving must either send their children to the Board-school or themselves go to prison, we are not surprised that Mr. Llewellyn, M.P., should have brought in a bill empowering committees of ratepayers to exempt parents from liability for school fees, in cases of poverty. Perhaps if Mr. Llewellyn's bill went further, and provided that food should be found for the children in such cases, even our keen-sighted political economists would be unable to discover in the measure anything very contrary to the teaching of Christ, however much they might find in it opposed to economics of the Gradgrind school.

An unknown thinker has wisely said that events are the fruits of which ideas are the flowers, and the reflection is as true of the individual as of the nation. David well knew the close connection between the thought, the word, and the deed; and day by day it becomes us to ask God not merely to regulate our outward lives, but to cleanse the thoughts of our hearts. When we think how far the roots of the thought may reach, we shall be very careful not to place before others, and especially young minds, that which may feed the tiny rootlet of an impure or sceptical idea, and assist in the development of unhealthy flower and diseased fruit.

There is to-day a deplorable tendency to under-estimate the triumphs of the Cross of Christ. On all sides we hear desponding complaints of the vast organised forces which sin brings against the banded armies of the Lord, of the amount of evil around us, and of the huge extent of the enemy's country not yet fought over or traversed. And yet, when we bear in mind that sin is blatant and goodness quiet; that a crime is telegraphed almost round the globe, whereas an act of mercy and charity is only rarely recorded; that Christianity commenced, so to speak, in a corner, with only a handful of advocates and adherents leagued against a world plunged in darkness and sin, surely there is good ground for "the shout of them that triumph," and for taking courage in the evident fulfilment of the Divine statement: "It is my Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

An important All Day Convention at Exeter-hall in connection with the Young Women's Christian Association is to be held to-morrow (Friday), when subjects of the deepest interest bearing upon its work will be considered. We trust there will be a large muster of Christian ladies. Particulars of the Convention programme will be found in our list of forthcoming meetings.

Mr. J. S. Curwen, who must be in sympathy with so-called artistic singing, in an address delivered recently at Mile-end, spoke of the modern chaotic talk of filling empty places of worship by the devices of orchestral bands and like measures, and of supposing that churches and chapels were filled with worshippers when they were filled with people. Men ought to be moved and drawn to worship, and the best way of doing this was to teach them to use their own voices in sacred song, and to have plain music, the simplicity of which would render it attractive and effective. It is well that we have such a testimony from one who can speak with musical knowledge.

The Christian.

Price 1s. 4d. per 100 of any One Number; or, 1s. 4d. for Assorted Packet of 100.

10.—SHALL WE GATHER AT THE RIVER?
Shall we gather at the river,
Where bright angel-feet have trod?
SHALL WE MEET BEYOND?
Shall we meet beyond the river,
Where the surges cease to roll?

11.—SHALL WE SING IN HEAVEN?
Shall we sing in heaven for ever?
Shall we sing? Shall we sing?
WHO ARE THESE IN BRIGHT ARRAY?
Who are these in bright array,
This exulting, happy throng?

13.—JESUS, LOVER OF MY SOUL.
Jesus, Lover of my soul,
Let me to Thy bosom fly.
JESUS, WE LOVE TO MEET.
Jesus, we love to meet where Thou art near,
We worship round Thy seat with holy fear.

14.—JERUSALEM, FOR EVER BRIGHT.
Jerusalem, for ever bright,
Beautiful land of rest!
THE SAVIOUR LIVES.
The Saviour lives, no more to die;
He lives, the Lord enthroned on high.

15.—BEHOLD THE LAMB OF GOD!
Behold the Lamb of God!
O Thou for sinners slain.
AND IS IT TRUE?
And is it true what I am told,
That there are lambs within the fold?

16.—HOW CAN I KEEP FROM SINGING?
My life flows on in endless song,
Above earth's lamentation.
OH, SING OF HIS MIGHTY LOVE!
Oh, bliss of the purified, bliss of the free,
I plunge in the crimson tide opened for me.

17.—JESUS SAVES ME ALL THE TIME.
Jesus saves me every day,
Jesus saves me every night.
WHITER THAN SNOW.
Lord Jesus, I long to be perfectly whole,
I want Thee for ever to live in my soul.

18.—IF I COME TO JESUS.
If I come to Jesus
He will make me glad.
LEAD ME TO JESUS.
Lead me to Jesus, lead me to Jesus;
Help me to love Him, help me to pray.

19.—COME TO THE SAVIOUR.
Come to the Saviour, make no delay:
Here in His Word He has shown us the way.
RING THE BELLS OF HEAVEN.
Ring the bells of Heaven! there is joy to-day
For a soul returning from the wild.

20.—THERE IS A LAND.
There is a land, a beauteous land,
Where ransomed saints in glory stand.
I'M A PILGRIM ON THE ROAD.
I'm a pilgrim, pilgrim on the road,
Happy pilgrim on the road.

A PRACTICAL SUGGESTION.

A Gentleman engaged in preaching the Gospel speaks thus of this novel Series of Gospel Tracts:—"I take as my subject for the evening the Question on one of the Leaflets, such as 'What think ye of Christ?' The Scripture Texts quoted on either side of the 'Question' serve as 'points' in my Address; they are—

1. 'Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.'
2. 'God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, CHRIST DIED FOR US.'
3. 'Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows. . . He was wounded for our transgressions; He was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed.'

"The Hymns, of which a verse or two are given on the Leaflet, are sung at the Meeting; and at its close every member of the congregation receives a copy of that Leaflet as he passes out of the door. This plan is repeated until I have thus run through the whole Series of sixteen Tracts."

150 copies of "PLAIN QUESTIONS" may be had for Sixpence—either Assorted, or of any one kind. Or 1000 copies for 2s. 6d.; post-free, 2s. 9d.

NEW WORK FOR TEACHERS OF THE YOUNG.

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS,
AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM.

A Book for Sabbath School Teachers, Parents, and Preachers to the Young. By Lucy J. Rider and Nellie M. Carman. Contains over Sixty Outline Lessons, Forty-three Diagrams for the Blackboard, and Twenty-five Popular Children's Hymns with Music. 220 pages. Crown 8vo. Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"Training is the great requirement of the present age. Every calling in life demands preparation; natural ability, and irregular, unguided development, are not enough. As soon as a person has chosen his life-work, he begins to prepare himself for it. So, when a person has decided to follow Christ, and become a 'fisher of men,' training should begin at once. It is not enough to have become a Christian—to have in view a life of work for God; but one should, even in childhood, be 'about his Father's business.' Therefore, as soon as a child is 'in the way he should go,' he should be 'trained up' in that way. We do not leave a child to himself in his physical and intellectual growth; neither should we disregard his need of help in spiritual development. Yet how little direct attention is paid to the child's spiritual needs after his conversion! . . . We seem to expect the lambs to flourish if treated in the same way as we treat the sheep. . . . A farmer's boy, whose business it was to tend sheep, contrived a plan by which his lambs should be in better condition than those of his neighbours. Instead of keeping all the flock together, he put the lambs in a smaller enclosure within the fold. His care was richly repaid. Equally successful are the special efforts put forth for young converts in the Church."—Pages 23, 24.

READING THE APPOINTMENTS.

A Poem suggested by the Appointments of Ministers to the various Circuits during the Methodist Episcopal Conference. By the Rev. Alfred J. Hough. Printed as a Four-page Quarto Tract for General Distribution. With Full-page Illustration. Price 2s. per 100; 17s. 6d. per 1000.

"A racy little poem, in which the bishop of a Methodist Episcopal Church is made to read the Appointments for the next three years, and the preachers listen to their several assignments with mingled feelings. The latter part of the poem represents The Bishop as assigning to preachers their places in the City of the Blest, recognizing their services according to their true value; and here the preachers' wives and other unnoticed workers find honoured places."

Primitive Methodist World.

⁂ This Poem may also be had as a Booklet for enclosing in the modern square envelope, price 6d. per dozen, 3s. 6d. per 100.

THE DEACON'S WEEK.

Or, A Week of Prayer turned into a Week of Practice. By Rose Terry Cooke. Printed as an Eight-page Quarto Tract for General Distribution. With Full-page Illustration, and five smaller Engravings. 3s. 6d. per 100; or 500 for 17s. 6d.

"A clever little story, showing how for one week, instead of meeting together for prayer for certain objects each evening, the members of a church had a week of practice. At the expiration of this time they met, and the lot fell upon one, a deacon, to give his experience. It was not the best of records, as he said himself; but it was very instructive withal. The little book should be widely read, and will be found interesting and profitable."—Nonconformist and Independent.

⁂ This story may also be had as a Booklet for enclosing in the modern square envelope, price 1s. per dozen.

A TIMELY TRACT FOR MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

Christian Commonwealth.

LONDON: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS;
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

Our readers may remember that in The Christian for April 1 we called attention to the piteous case of a starving woman who, for taking a few turnips from a field to satisfy her hunger, was sent to jail for twelve months, with hard labour, by a bench of magistrates, who certainly failed to temper justice with mercy. We are glad to say that a few nights ago, in the House of Commons, Mr. Childers announced that he had advised a remission of eleven months of the sentence.

"The Religious Attitude of Educated Hindus" is the topic of an able paper in this month's Chronicle of the London Missionary Society. Than this, no subject of greater importance is coming to the front. A crisis in the religious history of India, it is believed, is at hand. Hinduism with the educated is becoming a thing of the past. Unhappily faith in the supernatural is going also, and European infidelity finds a ready propagandism, so that many, we are told, believe that India will be one of the great battlefields of Christianity and unbelief. If the Christian Church is equal to the emergency we need not be afraid. What we have to fear is a Rationalised, accommodative, emasculated Christianity.

In the above-mentioned paper, the writer, who has been labouring for many years among educated Hindus, quotes the following remarks which are often made by Brahmins and others :—

> "No other religious teacher spake as Christ did about taking away the sin of the world." "The New Birth, as taught by Christ, is something altogether different from the teachings of other religions, and especially of Hinduism." "The religion of Christ is nothing if not something far higher than all that has preceded it." "I am convinced that Christ does indeed stand without a rival." "Many of my former difficulties and prejudices have vanished, and I have been drawn nearer Christ. I would accept Him fully if I saw his teachings manifested in Christians, and so could be satisfied of its power."

In these times of conflict of opinion and of controversy, the marginal reading in the Revised Version of Col. iii. 15, may usefully be called to mind—"Let the peace of God arbitrate in your hearts." Peace from God, through Christ, will preserve the heart from the heat of parties, and from self-originated passion and prejudice. It will pass judgment as an impartial arbitrator amidst conflicting differences. It will mediate wisely, form opinions tranquilly, and look at all sides of a question.

The world wants wise, firm, impartial government. "The liberty of the subject" is an evangel where the government is a tyranny; but the subject may himself become a tyrant, and "the liberty of the subject" will then become a phrase covering the tyranny of the strong over the weak; the deception of the foolish and inexperienced by the designing and the fraudulent. The modern idea that the people are the source of power, and that they must be governed just as much and just as little as they please, is as unreasonable as it is unscriptural. "He that ruleth among men must be just, ruling in the fear of God." There have been monarchs who in some degree have fulfilled this Divine ideal of a king. But they have been the rare exceptions. No dynasty, no succession of rulers, have ever done so. But the ideal anticipates the actual. The Son of Man is the prospective King. "I will overturn, overturn, overturn, until He shall come whose right it is, and I will give it Him."

Every day reveals some fresh sign that his coming is nigh at hand. Meanwhile the purpose of God in the Gospel is, not to leaven society with Christian principles, and so to make the world a safe and pleasant place to live in without Christ; but to take out from the Gentiles a people for his name—a people "called, and chosen, and faithful." "And the kingdom and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdoms under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High : his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him."

All who are interested in the subject of "Thrift among children" may find guidance and encouragement in an article by Miss Agnes Lambert in the current Nineteenth Century. In France, since 1874, over 23,000 school savings banks have been opened, and children have deposited nearly half a million sterling. Birmingham followed with two school penny banks in 1876, and £217 in deposits; last year it had 86 such banks, and £3000 were deposited. Liverpool and other towns are following. It is contended that generosity is not hindered but promoted; that the poorest child thus learns self-reliance; that habits of waste are not formed, and that a most educating process goes on. Few movements would better save the people from the Socialism which would weaken honest independence than these school banks.

"The Popery of Protestantism!" In how many ways it manifests itself! One of the most palpable is "the administration of the Sacrament," or (in its modified form of expression) "of the Lord's Supper." The idea of a priest administering is in violation of the Lord's command, "Take this and divide it among yourselves. Drink ye all of it." The communion rail, with the priest or minister inside, and the people kneeling outside, is a Popish relic, and would not exist another day in many churches but for ancient precedent and old associations.

Nevertheless, the body is more than its raiment. There may be real communion with Christ and with his people, though the form be faulty; and there may be no real communion even though the form be faultless. We therefore think it is a grave mistake to abstain from showing forth the Lord's death in union with other believers, because their form is incorrect.

All pretences are contemptible, but the pretence of spirituality most of all. There is an artificial spirituality, whose seat is only in the intellect, which talks or writes about "the spiritual man," but is not spiritual. The test of spirituality is love. God is a spirit, and God is love. They that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth, speaking the truth is love. A spirituality on stilts, lifted up above the heads of its fellow-men, but having no living sympathy with their hopes and fears, their strength or weakness, stiff and constrained in all its movements, will never produce a life like that of the Son of Man. No man was ever so human as the Lord from heaven. The more we are filled with the Spirit, the more we shall love the world of men for whom God gave his only begotten Son.

The following letter from Lord Bramwell appeared in The Standard of Friday last. Having quoted from The Standard, and severely commented upon, the expression which his Lordship disclaims having used, we gladly insert this contradiction, and express our sincere regret that his words should have been misunderstood :—

> Sir,—In your report of the debate in the House of Lords, on March 19, I find you make me say, "Let there be not only abstinence from work on Sunday, but from meetings for religious worship." The latter part of this is quite wrong—unintentionally, of course. I said the exact opposite, viz., that Sunday was a proper day for such meetings.
> Your obedient servant, Bramwell.

> Athenæum Club, April 8.

At the risk of appearing to censure ourselves, we must remark that sufficient care is not always taken to ascertain the truth, or otherwise, of newspaper statements and reports of an unfavourable kind. A striking instance of this has just come under our notice. A correspondent in Southport wrote to us quoting and severely criticising a statement he had seen in a newspaper, to the effect that a certain Y.M.C.A. Cycling Club had, or was about to have, "a Smoking Concert." Loath to believe it, we wrote at once to the Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. referred to, asking if the report were true; the reply was that it was quite incorrect : that the Y.M.C.A. Cycling Club did have a concert, but not a smoking one, and that another cycling club in the same town had a smoking concert: the two had evidently been confounded.

How the mistake arose we cannot say, but we believe many derogatory reports are equally baseless. It behoves all the followers of Jesus Christ to be slow rather than quick in crediting evil rumours concerning others. Above all, if they feel it a duty publicly to rebuke wrong doing or wrong speaking, the utmost pains should be taken to know that they are building on a foundation of fact. Otherwise their reputation for fairness and veracity will inevitably topple over with the castle in the air which in their haste they have erected.

The following extract from a speech lately made by Mr. William Aird, contractor for the Tay and Forth bridges, should be carefully considered. Referring to trade depression and foreign competition, he said :—

> Intemperance is the greatest evil we have to fight against. If the working classes of this country want to keep their position against the foreigner, they must be steady, industrious, and frugal. Being engaged in so many places, and travelling all through the country, I see the effects of intemperance. At the Forth Bridge we are very much troubled with it; at the Tay Bridge we are not troubled with it at all. The reason of that is that at the Forth Bridge we have a public-house sitting almost in the middle of the works. We cannot get quit of it, and we cannot get the men to keep out of it. At the Forth Bridge works we were lately sinking large caissons 70 feet in diameter. The men worked short shifts, and when they came up they felt a little elevated owing to working under an air-pressure. Having six or eight hours to themselves, they went to the public-house, and instead of being able to go back to work they were quite incapacitated by drink. That was the way the Belgians and Italians had a preference over our countrymen in working at such a job. It was not that the foreigners were better men than Scotchmen or Englishmen, but because they were more steady. The Italians, instead of going away and passing their time in a public-house, went to bed and rested, and they were all ready for work when the time to begin came round.

Mark the words, "We cannot get quit of it." When will Christian feeling awake and indignantly demand that the control of the drink traffic shall be in the hands of the people who suffer from it?

A MISSIONARY FAREWELL.

Farewells are supposed, as a rule, to be times of sadness and regret; but we have observed that many of the missionary farewells we have seen in recent years have been marked by very different characteristics. There has been, especially on the part of those departing for foreign shores, a pervasive feeling of gladness, almost of triumphant delight, that the time had come when they could obey the great Master's call to go and preach the Gospel to those sitting in darkness and the shadow of death. This was the prevailing keynote of the very interesting and largely-attended dismissal meeting at Harley House on Tuesday afternoon last week.

We had to hail the coming as well as speed the parting guests. Mr. Guinness said his first duty was to express the gratitude and joy with which he and Mrs. Guinness had welcomed back their children from the Antipodes after a prolonged absence. He proceeded to refer in some detail to the evangelistic labours of his eldest son, who is still at the other side of the globe. Extracts were read from letters written by Mr. Harry Guinness, recounting the goodness of God in owning his Gospel messages in different places to the conversion of many. He was able to say with confidence that over eleven hundred had decided for Christ as a result of his eight months' evangelisation in Tasmania and elsewhere. At present Mr. Guinness is ministering at the Temple built by Mrs. Reed in Launceston. He hoped soon to visit New Zealand, starting work probably with Mr. Thomas Spurgeon at Auckland, then going to Wellington, Christchurch, and Dunedin, and reaching Melbourne in May.

Turning to mission fields nearer home, Mr. Guinness referred to the calico map of the world, hanging on the wall behind him—a map which, for convenience, he commended for use at missionary meetings—and stated that fresh workers were now starting, or had just started, for North, Central, and South America, for North and Central Africa, and for Western and Central Asia. There were some forty missionaries going to swell the ranks of the workers in these parts of the great world field. Of that number twenty-five belong to Bishop Taylor's Central African Mission, two of the twenty-five (Mr. and Mrs. Cooper) proceeding from Harley House. Eighteen in all are just now leaving Harley House for the foreign field. Mr. and Mrs. Fanstone were bound for Brazil, where Mr. Fanstone has already laboured in the Gospel, while supporting himself by teaching. Mr. Barrow was far on the way to Jamaica; Mr. and Mrs. Pos, with Miss Colville, had that day arrived at Constantine, N. Africa. Four young sisters, Miss Reed, Miss Hammon, Miss Vining, and Miss Day, were present at the meeting, and were to start with Mr. Glenny for North Africa, on the following evening. Dr. Kasparian goes to found a Medical Mission at Van, Armenia, and Mr. Stevens proceeds to Australia. Others were designated for the United States. Miss Spearing, who had returned from the Congo, had joined the Baptist Mission labouring in that region, and returns thither. Mr. and Mrs. White, who have been home on furlough from the Congo, are also on the point of returning. Such is the briefest outline of the arrangements mentioned by Mr. Guinness, which means, we trust, the lighting up of the Gospel torch in many a dark spot, and the bringing of pardon and peace to many a weary and burdened soul.

Mr. R. C. Morgan gave, in a brief address, some details of what he had seen in North Africa and Spain. His remarks will be found to be embodied in the "Letters from Abroad" that have appeared or will yet appear.

Mr. E. H. Glenny, hon. secretary of the Kabyle Mission, said he had just received a telegram from Tangier stating that a new station had been opened at Azelia (about eight hours by mule from Tangier), with a population of 2000. Miss Emma Herdman and Miss Constance Caley are to take up their abode at this remote place, and evangelise among the people. Mr. Glenny proceeded to give some deeply interesting details of the medical mission work at Tangier carried on by Dr. Churcher, showing the way in which the hearts of the people are reached through the work of healing accomplished on their bodies. Much more might be done if the doctor were fully equipped with surgical instruments. In giving a review of the remarkable progress of the Mission to the Kabyles and other Berber Races during its short history, Mr. Glenny stated that for the last thirty months they had sent out new missionaries at the rate of one a month. God had graciously supplied all their needs through his stewards as they arose, though they scarcely ever had any surplus in hand. As the best statement of the present position of the mission we may reproduce the following circular letter which Mr. Glenny has issued in view of his departure:—

> Nearly two and a half years have elapsed since, for the third time, I visited Algeria, taking with me a party of missionaries to work among the Kabyles. Since then God has enabled us, through your kind liberality, to send forth twenty-two more labourers into this dark yet promising harvest field.
> It is generally thought that Gospel work among Mohamedans is almost impossible on account of their fanaticism, prejudice, and hatred of the truth; but we have found that this is not the case in North Africa, and though the people are fanatical and prejudiced there are many who will gladly listen when Christ is preached in words of wisdom as well as love. Their readiness to hear has astonished those who have previously laboured in other Mohamedan lands. The Scriptures are received, read, and valued, and in some cases purchased. What has been done is but initial work, and much patient toil will be required to carry it on to maturity. More labourers need to be sent out, and new centres established in those districts which are still totally without the Gospel.
> On April 7 I start on my fourth journey to North Africa, taking with me four additional sisters to work among the Mohamedan women, to whom we have such ready access, and who so need to be loved and won for the Saviour. After placing the four sisters in their respective spheres in Algeria, I hope to visit Mr. Baldwin and his earnest fellow-labourers in Tangier, and consider what steps should be taken to more effectually make known the Gospel among the perishing millions of the Empire of Morocco.
> Then, D.V., I return to Algeria and see the self-denying labourers in Oran, Tlemcen, Algiers, Kabylia, and Constantine; and, lastly, visit the Regency of Tunis, in whose capital Mr. and Mrs. Bureau are working. I would ask your earnest prayers that this long journey may lead to very blessed results for the peoples in the countries through which I shall pass—that the missionaries may be cheered and helped by my visits, and thus better fitted for their work—that great wisdom may be given in the consideration of any plans that are proposed, so that God in all things may be glorified, and souls saved.
> I am very desirous that when absent from England and unable to hold meetings, &c., and thus awaken and sustain an interest in the Mission, that all its increasing needs may be met. We require about £3000 a year, but seldom have £10 in hand, and at the present time have not been able to send the usual remittances for March to the missionaries. However, we can say, God has supplied our need and we expect Him still to do so. Will you kindly send any help you are able to give here to me as usual, and it will be acknowledged by those who carry on the work in my absence.
> Edward H. Glenny, Hon. Sec.

Before the meeting closed, the friends present were much moved and charmed with brief words from each of the four sisters leaving for North Africa, and who have been for some time in training at Doric Lodge. With great self-possession, propriety, and calm confidence in God, as well as joyful expectation of coming service, they told how they had been led of God to give themselves to this work, and asked to be borne up by the prayers of Christians who tarried at home. Dr. Eccles made a fervent appeal for help, and a collection was made towards defraying the cost of Mr. Glenny's missionary tour.

The evening meeting was a crowded one. Mr. G. Gillett told the following romantic story:—About fourteen years ago a lad knocked at the door of his brother-in-law, Mr. Braithwaite. He could not speak a word of English, and the servant, thinking he was a beggar, ordered him away. He came another day, with the same result; a third time he came, and Miss Braithwaite saw him, and, by the aid of what Greek she knew, and having a genius for language, she made out that he had worked his way from Constantinople, and thought if he came to England he should be educated as a medical man. Mr. Braithwaite, when in the East, had become acquainted with this youth's father, and thus, knowing his name, he had come to his house with this strange expectation. His sincerity and industry were tested. He received the medical education he desired. He is now Dr. Dubraschin. He had had a year's experience at Mildmay, had settled in Constantinople, opened schools and a medical mission, and, said Mr. Gillett, "he has prevailed on my niece to become his wife." These circumstances had led many of their friends to feel an interest in Constantinople. Mr. Gillett then referred to Dr. Kasparian, who afterwards addressed the meeting, followed by Mr. Steven, who is going to Australia and India; and by Mr. White, who, with his wife, was rejoicing that they were returning to the Congo, of which he gave most interesting information.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Four new distilleries are projected—three in Scotland, one in Ireland.

Drawing-room Temperance meetings have been held in Edinburgh during the winter.

Spennymoor.—The medical officer here reports an extensive use of opium by miners' wives.

The Governor of New South Wales has promised to favour the issue of a Royal Commission on the drink traffic.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union recently held very successful meetings in various towns in Yorkshire.

Temperance Sermons were preached in 130 churches in the diocese of Canterbury on the recent Diocesan Temperance Sunday.

The Second Reading of the Ulster Liquor Traffic Local Veto Bill is fixed for June 30. It provides for either restriction or prohibition.

The Budget is anticipated with great interest, both by Temperance people and "the trade." An increase of the drink taxes is not improbable.

Mr. Charles Knight, Chairman of the Executive of the Irish Temperance League, died on Thursday, April 1. His loss will be severely felt.

Mr. Caine has been returned to the House of Commons for Barrow. To the Temperance party in the House he has always been a tower of strength.

Mr. W. Noble spoke, on March 12, to an immense audience at San Francisco, on the life work of Mr. J. B. Gough. On the day following he left for Honolulu, en route for Australia.

The Liverpool Church of England Temperance Society's lady missionary is at work, and regularly visits the police-courts, and the homes of women convicted of drunkenness.

At an influential meeting of Glasgow citizens, on April 1, strong resolutions were passed calling on the magistrates to refuse all new applications for licences, and all others where the law had been wilfully broken.

Mr. Beavan, in The Manchester Guardian, cites numerous authorities to prove the Welsh Sunday Closing Act a fair success. He asserts that the accounts of the Cardiff drinking clubs are grossly exaggerated.

Dr. Coley, Newcastle-on-Tyne, urges the closing of all public-houses at 9 p.m. in towns, and 8.30 in the country. He argues that this simple measure would stop half the drinking, and nine-tenths of the drunkenness.

Dr. David Brodie, in The Medical Temperance Journal, for April, shows the evil effects of alcohol on respiration, and speaks of "the terrible significance of this interference with this most essential of all the vital functions."

Our Seamen.—Sailing from Sydney to New Zealand, the captain of the steamer told Mr. Froude that he engaged Norwegians, Germans, Swedes, and Chinamen, as seamen, &c., because of their sobriety. He would not have English, Scotch, Irish, or Americans, as they so often got drunk.

FEMALE INEBRIATES.—The number of the Homes for Female Inebriates is steadily increasing, and the fact of the increase is convincing evidence of the sad necessity for such establishments. The brief report of the first year of a new institution at West Holme, Hounslow, is before us. With unpretending modesty it tells the simple story of a year's work. "We can only testify to the improvement plainly to be seen in the healthier tone both of mind and body of those with us; while we trust that in more than one case the benefit derived will be of a lasting nature." The "Home" can accommodate six ladies on terms which may be ascertained from the Honorary Secretary, Miss H. S. Pollock, Hanworth, Middlesex.

ITALIAN AID SOCIETY.—We are sorry to see from the report of this Society, instituted for the special assistance of the Protestant Orphanage for Girls, that there is some danger lest this institution (Collegio Ferretti) should have to be closed for want of means to carry it on; there is a deficit of no less than 7761 francs. It would be sad, indeed, were such a work, so long carried on with such good results, to be discontinued. The immediate result would be the casting upon the world of nearly forty poor girls, most of them very young orphans, and homeless. Those who can do anything to prevent the stoppage of the work should send to Miss Mary B. Reynett, 3, Cranley-place, Onslow-square, S.W.

Young Men in London.

Young Men in Hackney.

The second annual meeting of this branch of the Y.M.C.A. was held on Wednesday evening, last week, at Morley Hall. The programme for the evening included an exhibition of gymnastic exercises by members of the Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A., with musical accompaniment.

The report read by the energetic secretary, Mr. F. L. Porter, stated that the spiritual work of the branch has been kept well to the front; many young men have been awakened and led to decision for Christ. The open-air Sunday services have been productive of conversions at almost every meeting.

Among the speakers was Sir Guyer Hunter, M.P., who said he was convinced the society was doing a grand work, and came to express his heartiest sympathy. Mr. Michael Young eloquently pictured the remorse of a wasted life. He pointed out the danger of substituting amusement and recreation for solid reading and useful studies. Admiral Sir W. King-Hall, in an address on Christian manliness, deplored the rapidly-increasing Atheism of the day, and urged most strongly the study of God's Word. He warned them against gambling, giving instances of its ruinous consequences.

More singing was followed by an address from the chairman, Mr. W. Millar, who, as a fifty years total abstainer could fittingly plead the cause of Temperance. Then came the gymnastic performance, which seemed to create considerable interest. One or two other brief addresses followed.

Young Men in Stratford.

The first anniversary of the establishment of the Conference Hall and Y.M.C.A., West Ham-lane, was recently celebrated. At the meeting held in the afternoon, under the presidency of Mr. J. G. Barclay, Leyton, there was a good attendance. The Chairman said the work had been very progressive, and constantly increasing, and, although that hall was said to contain something like 2000 people, and the rooms below were very spacious, there seemed to him likely to be a want of room rather than the reverse. There was only one point left them to consider in regard to the building, and that was that there was still a debt upon it. It behoved all of them who were interested in the work to do their utmost to get rid of this debt, which he confidently hoped to see cleared off within the next twelve months. They might truly say there were many seals to the ministry of those who laboured there.

Mr. Boardman, in an earnest speech, dealt with the work as set forth in the report, of which the following is an extract:—"Since the opening on January 23, 1885, there has been a growing work of increasing interest and blessing. The services in the large hall have been well attended. The preachers have, for the most part, been voluntary workers. During the year over 250 anxious persons have been individually dealt with. The Mizpah Band (established especially to rescue intemperate men), now numbers over 400 members, meets every Saturday evening, sometimes going out into the streets singing the songs of the Gospel, and inviting people to come in. The Male Choir of the Band has conducted Gospel services of song and testimony in different parts, and marked blessing has attended these services. The Women's Mizpah Band has been instrumental in inducing many a a wife and mother to give up the drink, and eventually leading them to take Christ as their Saviour. The Y.M.C.A. shows a constant growth in numbers and importance. The devoted Secretary is always on the alert to interest and instruct the young men. Many of the members are engaged in open-air and mission room work; over 100 Gospel meetings have been conducted by the young men themselves. Their physical welfare is cared for in the gymnasium, football, and cricket clubs. From the first, through the kindness of friends interested in the work, the Y.M.C.A. fees, and moneys placed in the boxes, the income has met the expenditure."

Rev. R. P. Pelly confessed that when the hall was first built, and knowing that Stratford people ran after every new thing, he began to think he would lose his congregation. He was glad to say, on the contrary, that his church was as full as ever, and he learned that the Conference Hall was full likewise. This fact taught him that in these great centres of population there was plenty of room for all who desired to do the Lord's work. He was glad to say this Conference Hall had already been useful, and he believed it would be more useful in the future for holding unity meetings on various subjects. Rev. J. J. Elvy also delivered a brief and encouraging address.

Mr. E. R. Cook, M.P., remarked that as Mr. Pelly had said, there was plenty of room for every possible kind of Christian work. When they looked at the enormous amount of worldliness around them on every side, they not only wished all the members of the regular Army of Ministers and all Christian workers every success, but they were bound to wish every blessing to the "regulars" of every other corps. He spoke of the great help the hall would, in his opinion, be to other churches, and dwelt on the advantages to be derived by young men from joining the Association; he was exceedingly glad that the Association was trying to give young men a high view of life. There was enormous scope for Christian effort in the neighbourhood, and he was glad to believe that some of those who might come there for material advantages would find that greatest possible treasure, a knowledge of Christ, and would then go forth as missionaries to spread that knowledge abroad. Rev. R. Ross and Mr. Burnett Tabrum also spoke.

A meeting was held in the evening, at which Mr. S. Gurney Shepherd presided, and Mr. R. C. Morgan, Lord Radstock, Mr. E. R. Cook, M.P., Mr. R. Paton, Rev. J. Knaggs, and Mr. J. Wilkinson gave addresses.

Young Men at the Mansion House.

Anniversaries, we suppose, have a twofold use. They are regularly recurring milestones on the road, when account may be rendered of the distance travelled, and the work done, through the mercy of God. They are also occasions when the workers may cheer one another, in view of the journey and the service that lie ahead. In both of these aspects the annual meeting of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., held at the Mansion House, on Thursday evening, was most satisfactory. The proceedings were full of "go" and heartiness from first to last, and everybody seemed glad to be there.

In addition to giving the use of the fine Egyptian Hall for the meeting, Lord Mayor Staples showed his warm interest by presiding, till another engagement called him away. He was not content even with that; his words of appreciation at the good work that is being done for young men in the Great City were most pleasant to hear as coming from the lips, and evidently from the heart, of its Chief Magistrate. Said he: "You have given the right help at the right time to the right people, and I hope there is a long career of usefulness still before you."

Mr. Robert Burn's secretarial report was brief and businesslike. It was an innovation on a time-worn custom, to eschew the reading of a formal, statistical document, and give, instead, a running outline of the work, couched in warm, living extempore speech; an innovation, though, that we hope will be catching. The work and methods of the Y.M.C.A. are, we assume, familiar to our readers, and we need not go into details. Mr. Burn told us something of the social element, which is designed to impart to the rooms at Aldersgate-street as much as possible of a "home" character—a great thing for the many city young fellows who have no home worthy of the name. Many a wanderer, and many a prodigal son is drawn within the walls by the social receptions, and restored by loving sympathy and counsel to the paths of uprightness and prosperity. The intellectual repute of the Association is well sustained by the long array of classes and lectures during the winter season. In the summer the physical man is developed by the varied forms of healthy and enjoyable recreation. Last, but not least, comes the spiritual work which is always kept to the front. Many, as Mr. Burn truly said, are led to spiritual decision at the critical moment of their commencing London life, and are thus shunted on to "the up-line," when there is the greatest danger of their going the way which, for a time, seemeth good, but which leadeth down to the death that never dies. The junior section has over 100 members enrolled, and the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society is developing into a nursery for the mission fields of the world.

As to matters financial, Mr. Burn would have had to report a serious deficit, but for the generous gifts of several of our Christian City merchants, which left the balance-sheet with 3s. 2d. as a nest egg for the work of the coming year. Mr. Burn pleaded for more annual subscribers, even of small sums, so that the association might not have to fall back periodically on those kind givers who have so frequently come to the rescue.

There were five set speeches in the programme. Happily, however, for our mental digestion, one of the proposed speakers was detained elsewhere; enough was left for any ordinary intellect to take in, and recollect and work out. Rev. W. H. Dearden spoke of the importance of reaching young men, of their special needs arising from the frequent isolation of their lives, and of the power of sympathy in winning them for Christ. Mr. Samuel Morley expressed the special interest he felt in the prosperity of the Aldergate-street institution, because of its proximity to the great business establishments of the City. His remarks as to the need of enlarged premises, and the probability that something substantial would be done in this direction, were greatly cheered. Mr. Morley was very emphatic as to the necessity of upholding the religious element in the work. Rev. William Cuff said it was his maiden speech in the Mansion House, but he did not exhibit any nervousness that we could detect. He was thorough in his advocacy of the Y.M.C.A., and in the recognition of what it has accomplished. "But success must not make us proud, or self-satisfied, or indifferent. We must move on." Finally, Herr Von Schluembach was more eloquent than ever in his account of the wonderful openings for Y.M.C.A. work in Germany and America, and the great success that has attended their efforts it the past.

We could, perhaps, have got along with a little less speechifying, but we should certainly have been sorry to have missed any of the truly exquisite song of the blind students from Dr. Campbell's college at Norwood. It was inspiring to a degree, and we could but heartily echo the closing prayer of Rev. P. Carmichael, of Highbury, who entreated the Lord to make up to these afflicted brethren and sisters for the loss of their eyesight, by a deeper spiritual illumination of the soul.

Our occasional protests against the superfluity and incongruity of votes of thanks to chairmen at religious meetings are like the voice of one crying in the wilderness, and we despair of ever seeing them disestablished. If they are to be inflicted upon us, the thing could hardly be better done than it was on this occasion by Mr. T. A. Denny and Mr. R. Paton; and no chairman could reply with more dignity or appropriateness than did Mr. George Williams, on his own behalf and that of the Lord Mayor.

AMONG RED INDIANS.

Dear Sir,—Since I last wrote upon the subject of the Red Indians, we have decided on commencing a work amongst the girls. The Indians are not only poor, but weak and helpless, easily led by the white man, either for good or evil. There is a large amount of sickness amongst them through insufficient food and clothing. They are left to dwindle away and die out, less cared for than the beasts that perish. The Christian religion, we hear, has not made great progress amongst them. Can we wonder they should not embrace the faith of the white man?

A lady, long accustomed to work amongst the Indians will open a Home for Girls on our land here very shortly. At a future time a Home and Industrial School for Boys is contemplated, for which a sum of money has already been promised, and help from Government may be obtained, but that will take a long time to organise. In the meantime we are commencing in a small way, and trust that the Lord will abundantly bless it. We shall be glad to receive any little presents of warm clothing, flannel and serge, prints, &c., for the poor women are miserably clad at all seasons; also dolls, books, pictures, &c. I have asked Miss Macpherson, Home of Industry, kindly to take charge of anything of this kind and bring them out with her when she comes to Canada. Small parcels might come through the post. Address Dr. Rolston, Mount Holstein, Beulah P.O., Manitoba. C.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—April 18, John xvii. 14—26; April 19, xviii. 1—14; April 20, xviii. 15—27; April 21, xviii. 28—40; April 22, xix. 1—15; April 23, xix. 16—30; April 24. xix. 31—42.

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH.—Mr. W. Benson, the evangelist of the mission in connection with Christ Church, Westminster-bridge-road, reports that during the past year he paid 2355 visits to Homes, &c., held 198 open-air meetings, and 272 indoor meetings, taken 106 pledges, and given away 31,500 tracts and books. This is his eleventh year of labour in connection with Rev. Newman Hall's Church.

IRISH DISTRESS.—Mr. Tuke visited Clifden on Saturday, and he was informed by the clerk of the Clifden Union that the distress is growing keener in that district, and that unless speedy help be forthcoming deaths from starvation will be the natural consequence. Already the people have been obliged to feed their cattle on the potatoes intended for seed, and the weather being stormy it is impossible for boats to ply to Galway.

PACIFIC GARDEN MISSION, CHICAGO.

This Mission is located just on the corner of Clark and Van Buren-streets, Chicago, Illinois. It is in the midst of a population of 30,000, of whom it is said fully nine-tenths gain a livelihood from crime in various forms. It is one of the dark spots on earth. The neighbourhood abounds in brothels, saloons, gambling dens, and other places of evil. Here, in this place of almost unexampled depravity, and in startling contrast, one of the most useful and wonderful missions of America has been established.

Col. J. R. Clarke is the founder, leader and chief supporter of this work. His history is a striking example of the special providence by which God schools his obedient children for their life work. He lost his property in the great fire of 1871 and panic of 1873. After giving up to his creditors his entire property, he was still 60,000 dollars in debt. While he was under this cloud, his health being seriously impaired and suffering great mental distress, he was led to a careful examination of his religious life. He saw the comparative unfruitfulness of his past life, and he resolved henceforth to devote himself to the active service of his Lord.

Thus, while struggling in almost absolute want, he found it in his heart to begin his wonderful and self-denying work for the vicious classes, who have their haunts near the corner of Clark and Van Buren-streets. His wife, who had long been an earnest Christian worker, has laboured faithfully by his side during the years since. The mission was begun in 1877, in a little room in Clark-street, with an audience of sixty persons, of whom three professed to be converted. Now the attendance is 300 nightly, 500 on Sunday nights. Last year 3668 professed to find the Lord, 500 intemperate men, and some fallen women. The attendance last year was 100,000, in five weekly services. This year there will be an attendance of 150,000, having seven services weekly. The industrial school for sewing has an attendance of 80 to 100 young women every Saturday afternoon.

The expenses of the work have been almost wholly paid by Col. Clarke. When he opened the Mission he was, as has been said, in want even of the necessaries of life; more than this, he was in debt to the amount of 60,000 dollars, and was in poor health. He prayed earnestly to the Lord for restoration of body, and the prayer was answered. About this time he heard of a mining property in Colorado which he could buy. He secured the refusal of it for a few days, and, with the co-operation of a number of Chicago capitalists, who gave him a share for his labour and expert knowledge of mining, he bought and sold the mine, and within the space of one month he had nearly 100,000 dollars in cash as his share. He paid the 60,000 dollars of debt, and has since used the remainder in supporting the Mission. Ten missions in Chicago and elsewhere have been established as a result of the work. Twelve of the converts are preaching the Gospel either in churches, missions, or evangelistic work. Mr. Cooper, one of the workers and converts, conducts with very great success, as practically an adjunct of the Mission, a free reading-room and coffee-house.

Mrs. Clarke is a constant visitor to the prisons in Chicago, and has distributed about 4000 papers in the past year. 35,000 tracts have been scattered over the neighbourhood in a single year. The meetings are usually conducted by Col. Clarke, who preaches a short sermon and gives opportunity for other converts and workers to speak. The personal experiences of the converts are often most thrilling records of the work of God. It seems hardly credible that some well-dressed, gentlemanly-appearing man, whose shining face and impressive manner give evidence of the truth of his words, was but a few short years or months since an outcast, a drunkard, gambler or friendless tramp; that he was as wretched and vile in personal appearance as that ragged and unkempt fellow who sits next to him and listens so intently to his words. There are many such testimonies; and as one and another tell of the goodness of God, of the sorrow and darkness of the past, of the joy of the present, of reunion with wife and children from whom sin had separated them, of the delight of the mother whose prayers have been answered in the salvation of her boy, of victory over temptation, tears spring unbidden to the eyes, and hearts are stirred with unwonted emotion.

No doubt this work was undertaken in much fear and weakness, for it was begun when they had scarcely a dollar, and when in poor health; but God has so manifestly answered their prayers, in restoring their health and giving them the means in the years since, that they have come to be possessed of great faith, and in this respect they are remarkable among Christians. Col. Clarke seems to have no thought of himself. His inner life is revealed by almost unconscious exclamations of praises to God, and the tears which often fill his eyes as he bears testimony to the goodness of his Heavenly Father. This is blended with an intense sympathy for his unfortunate fellowmen. Mrs. Clarke is as remarkable in this respect as her husband. Night after night she stands at the door of the Mission, and greets with a kindly shake of the hand, and a smile and hearty word of welcome, the lost and abandoned ones who have entered the door to hear the glad news of the Gospel; and, when some poor lost one has had his memory stirred by pictures of the innocent past, has turned to rush from the room in helpless despair of ever retrieving it, she has barred his exit, and with gentle persistence bid him trust in the Saviour. "It was your kindness," writes a poor girl who was saved in the Mission, "that led me again and again to the Mission." This would be the testimony of many others if they were asked. The self-denial and faithful effort which it has taken to spend life and means, with no hope or thought of earthly reward, in almost daily contact, for years, with the most wretched men and women, cannot be measured. It is only known in heaven.—Word, Work and World.

[Speaking from a limited experience, our Special Commissioner, who visited Chicago last autumn, can fully endorse the foregoing description of the work at the Pacific Garden Mission. The meeting he attended on an ordinary week evening was most remarkable for the composition of the audience and for the fruit gathered at its close.]

MR. WALTON AT WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

Our hearts are filled with praise for manifest blessing received through Mr. Spencer Walton's ten days' mission at Emanuel Church, Albert Hall, Weston-super-Mare. About eighteen months ago he came to Christchurch parish, when the Lord did great things for us, which made our hearts glad. During this second mission the numbers increased daily until the hall was too small; the last meeting had to be held at the Town Hall. Friday night, when the subject was "Noah and the Flood," was especially a solemn time. Many remained behind every night to the after-meetings under deep conviction of sin, most of whom went away rejoicing in Jesus.

The afternoon Bible-readings were times of great refreshing, the teaching being most acceptable to believers, and oftentimes very convicting to backsliders and half-hearted Christians. Many will bless the day when Mr. Walton came to Weston.

ENGLISH BISHOPS.—The Graphic of last week publishes a full-sized plate engraving of the whole bench of English Bishops. The likenesses are remarkably good, and the picture a most effective and interesting one.

CLIFFORD COTTAGE MISSION.—The first anniversary of this Mission at 8, Rice-lane, Egremont, Cheshire, conducted by Miss Owen and Miss Moore, was lately held. Both meetings were well attended, and the presence of the Holy Spirit was very manifest to all. A pleasing and interesting feature of the work is the number of conversions amongst the children. Meetings for children are held twice a week, and a goodly number have given their hearts to Jesus. In connection with this work, a Cottage Mission has been started at Seacombe. This is right in the heart of the place, and has already been owned of God in the saving of souls.

DAYBREAK AT TRYFAN.

This morn at dawn the many waters spake,
The Glyder streamlets and the wind-moved lake,
Benglog's cascades, and all the nameless rills,
Rippling from rock to rock adown the hills;
And when I rose, Nant Francon's lonely vale,
The mountains and the winding Ogwen stream
Were hid in driving mists, ghostlike and pale,
As are the long-lost faces in a dream.
Deep dread did reign, as if dark death passed by,
Hushing the plover's plaintive childlike cry,
And gloom fell o'er my soul till I was sad;
But as I gazed along the miry lane,
A missel thrush, regardless of the rain,
Burst into matin song, and made me glad.

MR. VARLEY IN SUNDERLAND.

Seldom has such wide-spread interest been occasioned in Sunderland as that produced by the visit of Mr. Henry Varley. The Y.M.C. Association invited him to conduct a ten days' mission, which commenced on the 4th instant. The buildings in which the meetings are held are crowded; the Bible readings, held daily at three o'clock, fill to overflowing the large hall of the Subscription Library; the evening meetings draw together deeply impressed audiences.

On Saturday night 3500 persons crowded the Victoria Hall to hear Mr. Varley give his deeply instructive lecture on "Billy Bray." On Sunday night the large theatre was unable to hold the people, being crowded out half an hour before the service began. The preacher spoke with great power and acceptance. Large numbers have confessed Christ. The interest is spreading throughout the country.

BEGGARS IN ROME.

Many are the Christians who are to-day found in Rome who ask to be informed upon all the minutiæ as to the few blocks of stone which compose all that remains of a notorious heathen's baths, but who are culpably ignorant of the grand work which Mrs. Wall is prosecuting among the beggars of that interesting city. When once seen the impression of that work will long linger in the memory. Although many of them are aged, their regard for her comes little short of veneration. They had hitherto been thought to be intractable Ishmaelites, but Mrs. Wall has amply proved that if only a few volunteer lady helpers would come out and co-operate with her, and the funds so willingly furnished by friends both at home and in Rome would be proportionately increased, the work is almost limitless.

The mission press and colportage work bears fruit every day. Mr. Wall baptized a man (with several others) who was formally an avowed infidel, but who was won to Christ, with his wife, by one of the Scripture texts which Mr. Wall has caused to be posted in great numbers upon the walls of Rome. A new hall is wanted sorely for the Central Mission in the Piazza in Lucina. Mr. Reginald Ratcliffe was present at a recent Sunday morning meeting, and Rev. W. L. Lang gave an address on "Continental Mission and Colportage work" during the week.

MR. CHARLES INGLIS, during the past month, has been holding Gospel meetings in Manchester, and the suburbs of Dublin. Meetings have been held in some places twice a day; the Bible lectures for Christians each afternoon were a great help, while not a few unsaved ones have been brought to Christ, night after night.

FLOWERS FOR HOSPITALS.—The readers of The Christian having flowers at their disposal are earnestly asked to help the work of the Flower Mission at St. Paul's Church House, 10, Clareville-grove, South Kensington, S.W. Any flowers sent to this address will be thankfully received for the hospitals and infirmaries of the South-west district. Particulars of this work will be gladly sent to any desiring them by the Hon. Sec. Senders of flowers should enclose name and address.

MR. C. J. BROOKS.—The poor of the parish of Emmanuel Church, Maida-hill, have just been called upon to part with a true friend in the person of Mr. C. J. Brooks, who has laboured amongst them as a Scripture reader for nineteen years. On the 6th inst., Mr. Brooks had his farewell meeting, at which Rev. J. Gosset Tanner (the vicar) presided, and spoke very highly of the earnest and self-sacrificing work of their feiend who had served them so long. Dr. Norman Kerr, in the name of the poor of the parish, presented Mr. Brooks with a watch. Other presentations were made by the vicar; but among the most interesting of the evening's proceedings were the testimonies of those who had been brought to Christ through Mr. Brooks's earnest labours.

"LIVES IN PLEDGE."

Sir,—In the deeply interesting communication in your issue of March 25, by Mr. James Bowker, under the above heading, he, in the last paragraph, says that "every person shares in the guilt who knowingly benefits by purchasing at places where cruel cheapness is the rule." As similar opinions have been expressed in your paper on several occasions, permit me, as a general consumer, to ask how I am, in practice, to avoid sharing in this guilt?

My experience of men of business tells me that they will only pay the market value for anything, and as the competition for work, whether needlework or other, is so keen (partly due to the unfortunate objection to becoming servants, who are in great demand), such work can only be obtained at starvation wages.

If therefore I purchase goods at a shop where I have to pay a high price for them, I have no guarantee that the poor seamstresses or workers in factories have received better remuneration for making the goods than those who work for other establishments where the same articles can be purchased more cheaply. In my opinion the balance merely goes into the pockets of the employers of labour, i.e., the tradesmen, who, in many cases, are not content to make an honest livelihood, but wish to become rich in a few years, and retire from business. We have only to look at many of the residents in our London suburbs in proof of this.

I fail to see, therefore, how, by paying high prices at expensive shops, I shall be benefiting the poor seamstresses in any way. My duty to my children, and above all to the Lord, is not to squander the means He has given me, which I should be doing if I were to pay high prices for goods I can obtain more cheaply, at the cost of extra trouble.

D. J.

NOTE BY MR. BOWKER.

In the pages of The Christian attention has from time to time been called to practical methods of dealing with the difficulty put forward by those who, like "D. J.," have been anxious to free themselves from part responsibility for the premature decay and shortened life, or for the impure life, of myriads of underpaid toilers. The most practical method, and one which is productive of immediate results, is that of direct communication with the worker, or that of indirect communication, not through selfishly cruel middlemen, but by means of agents who have no other interest than that of the well-being of the worker. To "D. J." and others who really wish to keep clear from connection with the dread consequences of starvation wages, and who desire to help seamstresses and others, whilst at the same time expending economically and thriftily the means given them by God, Mrs. Heckford, 6, The Minories, E., and Mrs. Hart, 43, Wigmore-street, W., will gladly give such assistance as will enable them to some extent to do what they desire. In a little while, too, Mr. F. Verinder, of 8, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C., will be prepared to furnish addresses where "shirts without shrouds" can be obtained. If "D. J." acts upon these slight hints, and carefully avoids "slop-shops," and marts where articles of clothing are sold at prices which cannot possibly allow of fair remuneration to the makers, one Christian at least will be honestly endeavouring to alleviate somewhat the lot of the labouring poor.

All this, however, implies personal trouble and a determination to do each day, not the gainful thing, but the just thing; but if Christians will not take such trouble, can we expect others to do so? There is to-day a large establishment, worked by a company paying a high per centage, where a man's suit of clothes, made of fairly good cloth, is sold for one guinea. Out of that guinea a starvation wage is paid to the worker. Ought a Christian man to obtain clothing there, at the cost of a starving machinist, who has to eke out her miserable pittance in the midnight streets, or should he take a little trouble to find a shop where the workpeople are, at any rate, fairly paid?

BIBLE-CLASSES AND DISCUSSION.

Sir,—While sympathising with the natural distress of your correspondent, whose letter appeared last week, may I point out that the advantages to a teacher are neither few nor small, which follow from knowing what is at work in the minds of those who attend the class. Although set speeches and pert contradictions ought not to be tolerated, yet is it well for the teacher to part from the class under the impression that all his utterances have been implicitly accepted as true, when in reality the young minds are brooding over sceptical difficulties, and moral difficulties, and in short, difficulties of all sorts?

I have before me the last report of the Christian Evidence Society, and I commend to the notice of all teachers the following passage from a talk with a converted sceptic:—

"Tell me how it was you became a sceptic."

"I was brought up by Christian parents, and went to Sunday-school. My first difficulties arose in connection with the little I knew about Hell. I was terribly afraid of it, but could get no information from my teacher about being kept from hell. So I gradually left the school; I felt I was not wanted there, and that there was no one to answer my question."

From this time he drifted further and further into unbelief. Ultimately he was converted, and became a Sunday-school teacher, and he adds, "I have often had sceptical questions brought to me by boys ten and twelve years of age."

I fear it is of little use now for us to hope that our message will never be challenged, even when we are teaching those much younger than ourselves. My own plan, both in Sunday-school and Bible-class, is to forestall objections as far as possible; to mention incidentally, and as a matter of course, such corroborative evidence as we have, of the historical portions of Scripture, and never to shirk the fact that the origin of evil, the reconciliation of predestination with man's free-will and other kindred topics are mysteries, inexplicable now, to be made clear only in the light of eternity. I think the aspiring youth who would not believe what he could not understand might very easily be handled, that position being manifestly untenable as could quickly be demonstrated. Which is best, for us to fit ourselves to meet the sceptical objections of the young men, or for them to drop out of our reach because "there is no one to answer their questions?" To meet these seems to me peculiarly the province of a

Bible Class.

THE MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY have removed their depôt from 8, New Bridge-street, to more commodious premises at Bridge House, Blackfriars-bridge, E.C.

NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—At the last meeting of the Western Board held in Glasgow, it was reported that up to March 31 subscriptions to the Semi-Jubilee Thanksgiving Fund had been received to the amount of £2149. A specimen copy was submitted of the Gospel according to St. Mark in Wen li Chinese, the first Gospel printed at the Society's own press in Hankow, from which during the last three months upwards of 30,000 Testaments and Gospels have been issued. The agent in Japan reported the proposed issue by the three Bible Societies of a Pocket Edition of the Japanese Scriptures complete in one volume.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

SERVIA.—In December last there came a request to the British and Foreign Bible Society that 5000 New Testaments might be printed in Servian for distribution among the wounded and prisoners of the Bulgario-Servian war. The colporteur has been greatly helped by one of the officers, and the soldiers were most eager to receive the books, which they read very diligently.—Anzeiger.

FORMOSA.—Since the cessation of French hostilities, Dr. Mackay has returned to this island; he is employed by the Canadian Presbyterian Mission; he has rebuilt the church which was destroyed, ordained two native pastors, and with their aid has begun the instruction of 500 catechumens, and general evangelisation. He wishes to make the church entirely native.—Christianisme.

BERLIN.—In February a House of Protection for girls frequenting public schools was opened. It is for poor children whose parents are out working all day; they find here a friendly home, dinner, and tea, supervision in their school-work, and recreation, returning to their own homes in the evening, for which the parents pay about 1½d. per day. Parents and children are most grateful for the benefit.—Evan.-Anzieger.

BASLE FOREIGN MISSIONS.—This Society has been enabled to carry on its work successfully in China, notwithstanding the excitement caused by the recent French war. In India, during the past year, the Mission has lost, by death, three useful workers, and in Africa also about the same number have succumbed to the climate. Several new men have gone forth to fill the gaps, and altogether the work is prospering.—Anzeiger.

A NOVEL MISSIONARY.—Near Yokohama, a poor blind man has just been baptized. He goes in the evening when people are returning weary from their work, with his stick and little fife, up and down the street. According to the custom of the land, when he is beckoned into a house he tells a story to amuse the inhabitants. As most of the Japanese stories are indecent the blind man has begun to repeat Bible and Gospel stories.—Anzeiger.

HAMBURG.—The Rauhe Haus, near Hamburg, has issued a report of its work from 1882 to 1885, which gives an insight into its continued successful development. The Boy's Refuge contains 111 lads; in addition to the usual public school instruction, they are taught garden and field work, baking, bookbinding, basket, mat, and brush making, carpentering, shoemaking, and tailoring. In 1885 the boys' work brought in nearly £900. The girls are to be removed to a new Home in May. The "Brothers" who receive training at the Rauhe Haus are engaged all over Germany in reformatories, orphanages, coffee-houses, or as town missionaries, &c, Requests for Prayer.

On behalf of the Scottish Evangelistic Association, that God's richest blessing may rest on its labours, and that its agents may be endued with power from on high, to tell the glad tidings of salvation out of full hearts and consecrated lips.——For the salvation of an aged relative.——For the conversion of an only son, on whose behalf the mother is greatly troubled.——For blessing on special services for children at Duffield, Derbyshire, April 22 to May 2, by Mr. H. M. Trickett.——For blessing on mission services in Charlton Kings Chapel, Gloucestershire, commencing April 18.

REV. C. W. BANKS, long the most prominent representative of the Calvinistic Baptists, died on March 25, at the age of 80. For a long period he edited The Earthen Vessel, the periodical associated with Strict Calvinistic Baptists.

THE FRIENDS OF PURITY ought to know, says The New York Independent, that a Bill has been reported favourably in the New York Legislature which is nothing more nor less than a Contagious Diseases Act. It is an infamous proposal, and citizens who do not believe in state regulation of prostitution should send in their protests at once.

THE FRENCH PASTORAL RELIEF FUND has since 1875 made grants amounting to £1067 to 149 Protestant pasteurs located in country districts, where, through the poverty of the people, the ministers are often placed in peculiarly trying positions. To assist such ministers is a worthy object; and when it is remembered that the Archbishop of Canterbury is the Patron of the Society, and that there is a large and influential committee, it is surprising that the relief thus afforded should amount only to the small sum of less than £100 a year! Professor Gustave Masson, Harrow-on-the-Hill, Middlesex, is one of the Hon. Secretaries.

RAILWAY MEN.—The annual meetings of metropolitan railway officials took place on April 1 and 8. Stirring addresses were given by Lady Hope, Rev. W. R. Mowll, Dr. Schofield, and Mr. Spencer. This Mission endeavours to reach each man individually. The sick and injured are visited either in their homes or in hospital, and the Lord has greatly blessed these visits. The Hon. Secretary will send names of men to any wishing to help in sending Gospel packets to the men monthly. Letters for convalescent homes will be most welcome. Miss Jackson, Hon. Secretary, 21, Stanley-gardens, London, W., will gladly give any information.

Notes on Daily Readings

SUNDAY, APRIL 18.—DEUT. XXXII.

4.—He is the Rock, his work is perfect.—“ Rather, ‘ the Rock, perfect is his work.’ The term Rock stands absolutely as the first and leading word. This epithet, repeated no less than five times in the Song (15, 18, 31, 37), represents those attributes of God which Moses is seeking to enforce—immutability and impregnable strength.”—Sp. Com.

5.—They have corrupted themselves, their spot is not the spot of his children.—“ The verb is in the singular. Render, ‘ It hath corrupted itself before Him (i.e., the perverse and crooked generation understood from the context); they are not his children, but their blemish ’ i.e., the generation of evil-doers cannot be styled God’s children, but rather the shame and disgrace of God’s children.”—Ibid. “ Spot is used here in a moral sense, as in Prov. ix. 7 ; Job xi. 15, xxxi. 7 ; equivalent to stain. The rebellious and ungodly were not children of the Lord, but a stain upon them. This verse is the original of the expression ‘ children that are corrupters,’ in Isaiah i. 4.”—Keil. The contrast between these two verses is very striking: the perfect character of God, and the utterly corrupt character of man.

6.—Is not He thy Father that hath bought thee ?—Keil renders these latter words, ‘ that hath founded thee ’ (or, acquired thee), and adds, “ It denotes here the founding of Israel as a nation by its deliverance out of the power of Pharaoh.”

15.—But Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked.—“ This word Jeshurun, found again only in xxxiii. 5, 26, and Isa. xliv. 2, is not a diminutive but an appellative (from the verb ‘ to be righteous ’), and describes not the character which belonged to Israel in fact, but that to which Israel was called. The prefixing this epithet to the description of Israel’s apostasy contained in the words next following is full of keen reproof.”—Sp. Com.

43.—Rejoice, O ye nations, with his people.—After such fearful threatenings of judgment to apostate Israel, the Song closes with mercy to the Gentiles, i.e., to believers from amongst the Gentiles (Rom. xv. 10), and the last strain is one of hope and promise even to rebellious Israel. He “ will be merciful to his land, and to his people.”

MONDAY, APRIL 19.—DEUT. XXXIII.

5.—And he was king in Jeshurun.—The R.V. renders this in its margin, “ there was a king in Jeshurun ;” and Keil translates, more accurately, “ and He became King in Jeshurun,” adding, “ the subject is not Moses but Jehovah, who became King in Jeshurun.”

7.—Hear, Lord, the voice of Judah, and bring him unto his people.—It is difficult, remembering Jacob’s blessing of Judah (Gen. xlix. 10), and the distinct promise there given of Shiloh coming and the gathering of the people to Him, to resist the conviction that this promised Messiah, “ the Lion of the tribe of Judah,” is the one referred to in the words, “ bring him unto his people.”

8.—Of Levi he said.—Simeon is omitted altogether in this blessing of the tribes. “ This omission is explained by reference to the words of Jacob concerning Simeon (Gen. xlix. 7). This tribe, with Levi, was to be ‘ scattered in Israel.’ The fulfilment of this prediction was in the case of Levi so ordered as to carry with it honour and blessing ; but no such reversal of punishment is granted to Simeon.”—Sp. Com. Let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy holy one.—The reference is to the high priest’s breastplate (Exod. xxviii. 30), through which the Lord communicated his will on special occasions to Israel. It is probable, therefore, as commentators think, that “ thy holy one ” here is not the Lord, but Levi, the tribe to which Aaron and the priesthood belonged, as undoubtedly in ver. 9 there is an allusion to the faithful conduct of this tribe at Sinai (Exod. xxxii. 26).

13.—And of Joseph he said.—As Simeon is omitted, the two sons of Joseph are both brought in under this head, and their extension of territory and increase in numbers is strikingly predicted, showing that “ the birthright was Joseph’s ” (1 Chron. v. 2). The allusion to Joseph, their father, as the one who was “ separated from his brethren,” points him out, as so often afterwards, as a remarkable type of Christ.

TUESDAY, APRIL 20.—DEUT. XXXIV.

4.—I have caused thee to see it with thine eyes.—“ This sight of every part of the land on the east and west was not an ecstatic vision, but a sight with the bodily eyes, whose natural power of vision was miraculously increased by God to give Moses a glimpse, at least, of the glorious land which he was not to tread, and delight his eye with a view of the inheritance intended for his people.”—Keil.

6.—And He buried him in a valley . . . but no man knoweth of his sepulchre to this day.—“ The burial of Moses by the hand of Jehovah was not intended to conceal his grave, for the purpose of guarding against a superstitious and idolatrous reverence for his grave ; for, with the opinion held by the Israelites that corpses and graves defiled, there was but little fear of this. But, as we may infer from the account of the transfiguration of Jesus, the intention was to place him in the same category with Enoch and Elijah. There can be no doubt that this lies at the foundation of the Jewish tradition mentioned in the Epistle of Jude concerning the contest between Michael the Archangel and the devil for the body of Moses.”—Ibid.

10.—There arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses.—Until He came whom Moses foretold (xviii. 15), in comparison with whom Moses was but “ as a servant,” “ faithful in all his house ; ” but Christ was not only founder of the house (as God), but “ Son over his own house.”

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 21.—JOSHUA I.

2.—Moses my servant is dead ; now therefore arise.—“ It is impossible altogether to pass by the typical application of this verse. Moses, representing the law, is dead ; Joshua—or, as that name is written in Greek, Jesus—is now bidden by God to do what Moses could not, lead the people into the promised land. Joshua was Moses’ minister, as Christ was ‘ made under the law,’ but it was Joshua, not Moses, who wrought out the accomplishment of the blessings which the law promised.”—Sp. Com. Perhaps the best New Testament light upon the typical meaning of these opening words of Joshua is to be found in Rom. viii. 3 : “ For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son,” &c. Compare also as to the expression, “ Moses’ minister,” Rom. xv. 8 : “ Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God.”

4.—From the wilderness, &c.—The promise is renewed in its largest form as originally given to Abraham (Gen. xv. 18) ; but Israel, though free to claim as theirs “ every place that the sole of their foot should tread upon,” within the limits indicated, never went “ unto the great river Euphrates ” until, for the punishment of their sins, they were brought as captives thither, and hung their harps upon the willows.

8.—This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth.—Compare this with the directions to Israel (Deut. xvii. 19) concerning any future king, that he should “ write him a copy of this law in a book,” and should “ read therein all the days of his life.” “ Not to depart out of the mouth ” is to be constantly in the mouth. The law is in our mouth, when we are reading it intelligently for ourselves, or conversing about it with others, or meditating upon it, as well as when it is being more publicly proclaimed. The allusion probably is to the ruminating animal, the clean beast, the type of the Israelite indeed. Comp. Jer. xv. 16 : “ Thy words were found, and I did eat them ; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of my heart.” See also Ezek. iii. 1 and Rev. x. 10.

THURSDAY, APRIL 22.—JOSHUA II.

1.—An harlot’s house, named Rahab.—“ In the face of the parallel passages, the rendering advocated for obvious reasons by the Targum, Josephus, &c., and followed by some modern commentators, viz., ‘ the house of a woman an innkeeper,’ cannot be maintained. Rahab must remain an example under the law, similar to that (Luke vii. 37) under the Gospel, of ‘ a woman that was a sinner,’ yet, because of her faith, was not only pardoned, but exalted to the highest honour. Rahab was both admitted to be of the people of God, intermarried into a chief family of a chief tribe, and found a place among the best remembered ancestors of King David and of Christ. She is regarded by the Fathers as a type of the Christian Church, which was gathered out of converts from the whole vast circle of heathen nations.”—Sp. Com.

5.—Whither the men went I wot not.—“ Rahab acted wrongly when she told a lie and said that the spies had gone ; and the action was acceptable to God only because the evil that was mixed with the good was not imputed to her. Yet although God wished the spies to be delivered, He did not sanction their being protected by a lie.”—Calvin. We must judge of the acts of Rahab and Jael not by one standard of Christian knowledge, but by that of the dark and lawless times in which they lived.

18.—This line of scarlet thread.—“ The use of scarlet in the Levitical rites, especially with those more closely connected with the idea of putting away sin (Lev. xiv. 4, 6, 51 ; Num. xix. 6), naturally led the Fathers, from Clement of Rome downwards, to see in this scarlet thread, no less than in the blood of the passover, an emblem of salvation by the blood of Christ.”—Sp. Com. The words of Clement are thus translated by Bishop Lightfoot : “ And moreover they gave her a sign, that she should hang out from her house a scarlet thread, thereby showing beforehand that through the blood of the Lord there shall be redemption unto all them that believe and hope on God. Ye see, dearly beloved, not only faith, but prophecy, is found in the woman.”

FRIDAY, APRIL 23.—JOSHUA III.

4.—Yet there shall be a space between you and it.—“ The ark, . . . the special shrine and seat of God’s presence, went before (see Num. x. 33) to show the people that God through its medium was their leader. They were to follow at a distance, not from reverence, for when the ark stopped close to the river they would have to pass close by it ; nor merely that it might guide them in the right path ; . . . but that the people might the better observe and mark how the miracle was accomplished.”—Sp. Com.

10.—Hereby ye shall know that the living God is among you.—“ Hereby ” points on to the next verse. It was the miraculous recession of the waters of Jordan before “ the ark of the covenant of the Lord of all the earth,” that was to them the pledge and assurance that “ the living God ” was among them, and as “ Lord of all the earth ” would drive out the guilty nations of Canaan and make room for them.

12.—Now therefore take you twelve men out of the tribes.—This is more than an anticipation of iv. 2, as many commentators think. These twelve men were to be first of all witnesses of the details of the miracle in a way that the people at a distance behind could not so clearly be. It was important that the withdrawal of the waters should be seen to coincide with the priests’ feet, the bearers of the ark, touching the water. Only men on the spot could distinctly testify to this. These twelve have their New Testament counterpart in the twelve chosen to be witnesses of Christ’s resurrection, and whose personal knowledge of the facts is the foundation of Gospel testimony (Acts i. 22).

17.—The priests that bare the ark . . . stood firm on dry ground in the midst of Jordan.—A striking type of the abiding nature of the efficacy of Christ’s work, which stays the waters of judgment till all the Israel of God are passed over.

SATURDAY, APRIL 24.—JOSHUA IV.

6.—What mean ye by these stones ?—There was to be a double memorial of Israel’s passage of the Jordan : twelve stones brought up out of the bed of the river, and set up “ in the place where they lodged,” and twelve other stones (ver. 9) “ set up in the midst of Jordan in the place where the feet of the priests which bare the ark of the covenant stood.” The number twelve in each case identified the memorial with Israel. So is there to the Israel of God a double memorial of that great event which was typified by the ark of the covenant rolling back the waters of Jordan, viz., the death of Christ. There is first the memorial of his death presented to us in the Lord’s Supper, but not only for an occasional but for a continual remembrance. “ It is from the bottom of the river into which He went down to make it the way of life for us, that we bring back the precious memorial of his love, and of the place in which He fulfilled his work.” —J. N. D. Then there is, secondly, the bringing down of Christ’s risen ones into his place of death, by practical mortification. “ Your life is hid with Christ in God . . . Mortify therefore ” (Col. iii. 3, 5.) It is after “ the power of his resurrection ” that the Apostle speaks of “ the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death ” (Phil. iii. 10). Thus Christ’s people cherish (and that not at the Lord’s Supper only) “ a perpetual memory of his precious death until his coming again,” and at the same time are (or should be) themselves practical memorials or standing monuments of their identification with Him in his death. “ Continually mortifying all evil and corrupt affections, and daily proceeding in all virtue and godliness of living.”

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

THIS Society is employing nearly 130 earnest, faithful, and experienced Readers—most of them in the poorest localities in the Metropolis—who visit from house to house and room to room, bringing the Word of God to the poor, the sick, the erring, and the outcast; they also help generally in the spiritual work of their respective parishes.

Unless speedy help is received several grants must be withdrawn for want of funds.

EAST-END MISSION WORK.

TO make provision for continuing the Evangelistic work so successfully carried on by the Rev. Thomas Jackson during the past eighteen months, at the Clapton Park Theatre, the Mission-hall (known as the Clapton Park Tabernacle) has been purchased, and is being enlarged at a total cost of £2500. The building will provide sittings for 550 persons, and the school-room will accommodate 350 scholars. There will also be four rooms for caretaker, and needy servants' free registry office; six rooms for the use of mothers' meetings; working men's free library and reading room; free night school for adults, Band of Hope, Gospel Temperance, benevolent and tract societies, Good Samaritan union, soup kitchen, &c. The opening services will (God willing) be held on April 21. Many men and women who have been led to Christ at the Theatre services are giving out of their small earnings to the building fund, and in order to carry on, unfettered by any debt, our work among the poor, the perishing, and unsaved we desire to raise the whole amount by Good Friday. Will friends, wh oare interested in Gospel work among the masses, kindly help us.

Donations will be thankfully acknowledged by Mr. B. Mooney, 41, Powerscroft-road, Lower Clapton, E., Treasurer; Mr. W. Johnson, 124, Elderfield-road, Clapton Park, E., Secretary; or by Rev. T. Jackson, 41, Powerscroft-road, Lower Clapton, E., Missionary.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

INSTITUTED 1772.
President: G. WILLIAMS, ESQ.
Vice-Presidents: A. PEASE, ESQ., M.P., S. D. WADDY, ESQ., M.P., Q.C., and J. H. GLADSTONE, ESQ., Ph.D., F.R.S., &c.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, ESQ.
Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night, and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN.

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

King's-court Mission, Suffolk-street, Borough.—A few Christian workers have been carrying on this mission for some years, but are sorely in need of funds. The work comprises preaching in and out of doors, prayer meetings, a Sunday-school of 160 children, junior and senior Bands of Hope, Lads' Institute three nights a week, Penny Bank, &c. The hon. secretary is J. Benford, 57, Webber-street, Blackfriars-road.

THEATRICAL TEA MEETING.—Mr. W. Forbes held another of these meetings for theatrical employés on Wednesday last week, at Waterloo-road Chapel School-room. After tea, hymns were sung and addresses given by Mr. Shirley, M.P., Mr. Valentine, M.P., Rev. W. H. Tickell, and other friends. The Bible Flower Mission sent bouquets of flowers with texts attached.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, April 10, 1886.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

SIXTEENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Mr. C. W., near SEVENOAKS.

For special reasons, this patient has asked me to publish his case, but to withhold his name and address, giving it privately only, to any person that I please.

It is nearly two years since he applied for advice. He had lost a father and several brothers in the prime of life by Consumption, but hearing of a patient in the village who had derived great benefit from my treatment, he was encouraged to come.

Always delicate himself, he had had a Winter Cough for years. Oppression at the chest, pains in the side, expectorations mixed with blood, excited alarm.

In two months he had greatly improved. A tonic of Quinine and Iron, with Glycerine, had strengthened him, and relieved neuralgia which was troubling him. His chest felt stronger, and he was soon able to do a little work.

In another month he was so much better, that he says:—"I have been trying to do without medicine, but find I must not yet. I am not so well without it."

In a few weeks he was able to leave off all medicine. The following is an extract from a letter received in September:—

"At length, by perseverance, and the blessing of God, and your good advice, I entirely recovered my health. It is my firm conviction, and that of my wife, that had I not placed myself under you, my work on earth was done.

"I had a daughter, six years of age, who had ailed from her birth, and I found that the seeds of Consumption were sown. I gave her a little of my medicine. It acted like magic, and by the time the first bottle was gone, she was well and hearty, and has continued so since. I recommend your treatment wherever I go. Wishing your really useful life may be much prolonged for good, I am," &c.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

MR. WILLIAM QUARRIER, GLASGOW.

urs is an age of philanthropic progress. The pirit of Christianity is filling men's hearts with rmpathy, and urging them to do something to elp the helpless and care for the friendless. he need of such action is pressing. The bitter y of the outcast is heard on all sides. A wail sorrow comes from the reets and highways. It hard to know of suffering en and women, but it is ill harder to know of the isery of children. The oung should be happy, et to many of them happiess is a feeling unknown. ow, as in the days of Mrs. rowning, the question ay be asked :—

o ye hear the children weeping, O my brothers,
re the sorrow come with years?

o that pathetic question any a noble response has een made. Among others, ILLIAM QUARRIER, of lasgow, heard the cry of e weeping children, and s devoted his life to drying their tears.

In this sketch we shall ek to tell something of ow Mr. Quarrier was led engage in his great work, ow he prospered in it, and ow God's blessing rested his self-denying labours. he story is full of inspiraon and interest. It is a mance in the record of a osaic century, and another oof of the power of faith remove mountains.

Forty-eight years ago a y of eight stood, bareoted, bareheaded, and umb with cold, in the reets of Glasgow. He d tasted no food for a y and a half. His eager, ploring eyes looked in vain to each passer-by r help. He wondered in a boyish fashion hy nobody pitied him, and thought if he could ve a copper to the starving how differently he ould act. Then came the resolution that when got to be a big man, and earned enough oney, he would comfort and care for the waifs the street. That boy was William Quarrier, d the childish determination was the first step wards the work of later years. The philosophic poet Wordsworth said truly, "The child is father to the man."

(From Photograph by Messrs. J. A. Brock & Co., Glasgow.)

Mr. Quarrier's mother was a widow and very poor, so he was sent at an early age to do something for himself. The only work he found was putting heads on nails, which gave him employment for a year or two. At ten he was apprenticed to the shoemaking trade, to which he applied himself with such vigour that at fourteen he was able to take up house with his mother. His associations were of anything but a favourable nature. His companions were the boys of the district, rude in speech and rough in manner. They were very fond of the low drama, and learned from it lessons disastrous to morality. Fortunately for the subject of this sketch, he was brought under Christian influences. A lady persuaded him to go to church, where he heard the old yet ever new message of the Gospel, "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life," He believed it, and henceforth Christ was his Master and Christians his companions. The boys on the street reckoned him no longer among their number

With his conversion the desire to help outcast children returned to him. He felt God had called him to that work, and set about preparing for it. His plan was to gather enough money to found a Home. He devoted himself with redoubled earnestness to business, with the aim of acquiring wealth to spend on poor boys. He prayed for prosperity, believing he would get it as it was to be used for God's glory. And he did get it. He prospered so much that before long he owned three of the largest boot and shoe establishments in Glasgow. His trust in prayer was deepened by his mother's conversion. When he knew the Saviour's love, he sought to tell her about it, but she would not listen. He kept on speaking to her and praying for her more than seven years. Then she had two strokes of paralysis, and her life was in danger. This made him more importunate at the throne of grace on her behalf. He was not sure that temporal blessings were always according to the Divine will, but he believed the salvation of the souls of relatives was : so he persevered. It seemed hopeless, but faith won the day. His mother's eyes were opened to see herself and to see Christ. She lived long enough to give unmistakable proofs of the sincerity of her change, and died in the joy of the Gospel she had long despised.

The sum of money he sought to amass for the proposed Orphan Home was £20,000. As soon as he got it, he intended to begin work. Though successful in business, his liberal contributions to ecclesiastical and philanthropic schemes prevented his gathering the money so quickly as he had hoped. This disappointment was salutary. It led him out of self, and made him more dependent on God.

One night in November of 1864, he came across a boy crying bitterly in Jamaica-street. His sympathy was awakened. He listened to the tale of distress and relieved the want. That incident lay at the foundation of the first shoe-black brigade in Scotland. A house was rented in a suitable district, waifs were brought to it, and inspired to action by being taught how to help themselves. The movement turned out a success financially and morally. The boys soon became self-supporting, and were put on the highway to better lives. The brigade began with forty, but rapidly grew in size. Its members were bound by certain rules, which kept them together, and furnished a discipline for their unruly natures. That discipline was an active factor in developing the good in them. Mr. Quarrier loses no opportunity of urging the necessity for the general organisation of street children as the best preventive of their falling into crime; and social reformers may yet come to realise the value of his counsel.

Organisation was much, but it was not all. There was a need for home influences and training to be brought to bear on the boys. That need could only be supplied by the establishment of an Orphan Home. But how to establish such a home was a difficult problem to solve. In 1871 Miss Macpherson, of London, who had already done a great deal for outcast children in the way of finding homes for them in Canada, came to Glasgow. She urged Mr. Quarrier to go further than he had yet gone, and consecrate himself wholly to the work he had begun. He had many objections to offer, but she answered them all. She left him with the advice, "Pray to God about it." He did. He felt drawn strongly to devote all his time to the outcast, but, wanting to make sure of Divine guidance, he wished a sign to throw light on the path of duty. If from £1000 to £2000 were sent to him for the building of an Orphanage, he would go forward with the work. On the thirteenth morning after the sign was asked, a letter came from a friend in London, promising £2000. The moment in which that letter was opened and read, was the crisis of William Quarrier's life. He burst into tears. He realised that wife, children, and time were now to be given to God's work. Self, and the interests of self, were swallowed up in a great consecration. Henceforth, as he himself graphically put it in a conversation with the writer, "I rose out of myself." His faith became equal to the burden laid upon it. He felt that whatever money would be required would be sent, and this confidence has not been put to shame.

The Rubicon was crossed: the die was cast. Mr. Quarrier, having put his hand to the plough, was not the man to turn back. He rented a large room, intended for a workshop, partitioned off a kitchen, and brightened up the bare walls with Scripture texts. A homeless boy, without shoes or comfortable clothing, was brought to the fireside, and invited to stay. He was not sure about passing the night there, but the warmth of the fire persuaded him. More came. Once they entered they did not think of leaving. What they all felt was expressed by one little fellow, who, on being asked, Why he did not run away? replied, "'Cause this place is guid." It was good, for food and clothing were furnished, and a tender care was shown towards them which they had never experienced before. During the first year ninety-three waifs were received. Of these thirty-five were sent to Canada, and the others were helped to a respectable livelihood on this side of the Atlantic.

That was fourteen years ago. Many changes have happened since then, but Mr. Quarrier's work has known no changes save those of extended scope and widened usefulness. Opposition was lived down, and scoffers were silenced. Men were forced to see the hand of God in the, to them, Quixotic scheme of the Glasgow shoemaker. Other movements rose and fell, but this one went steadily on, because it was rooted in obedience to the Divine call, and sustained by believing prayer.

Great trials came, but they were faced in a spirit of faith. The most trying of them all, perhaps, was the City of Glasgow Bank failure. It struck a blow at trade and private prosperity, the effects of which are still keenly felt. Every institution in the country suffered. When Mr. Quarrier heard the disastrous news a cloud of darkness swept into his mind, but light entered with the text, "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls; yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation." All the Home funds were in the bank, and some hundreds were required at once. But the money was forthcoming. It was sent in without touching what had been deposited in the bank. That year of gloom was the brightest in the history of Mr. Quarrier's work. He asked God that it should be so, to convince men that the Lord does not depend on circumstances to carry out his plans. Thus did God honour his servant, and set afresh a seal on the efficacy of prayer.

Statistics are not attractive reading, but they serve a useful purpose: they form a test of the prosperity of an undertaking. Judged by this standard Mr. Quarrier's work is highly successful. He has built twenty houses in Bridge of Weir at a cost of £50,000, and City Homes at a cost of £12,000; and the annual expenditure of his various agencies amounts to something like £10,000. He has long ago outgrown the idea of £20,000 sufficing. Nearly 2,200 children have been sent to Canada, where they begin life under favourable auspices; and an equal number has been distributed through this country. No child is sent abroad unless the £10 necessary for his or her passage and outfit are in hand. In this way it is left to the Lord to decide how many or how few should go. Th number despatched in 1872 was 35, and i 1885, 340. There were 500 in the Bridge Weir, and 100 in the Glasgow Homes whe this sketch was written, but since then a larg band has left for Canada. These figures te much, but they do not tell all. That all ca never be told till the day when the tasks earth shall be fully measured.

The collection of the money is carried on in way characteristic of the man. No subscriptions are called for; no donors get furthe publicity than the publication of their initia and the sums they give; and the account checked by a trustworthy accountant, a issued in a yearly report. No endowment accepted, as it would imply a want of faith i God. A year or two ago £8000 was offered fo that purpose, but it was refused. There is n committee of management. Mr. Quarrier is sol director of the enterprise; but the buildings a vested in trustees. Never much more and neve much less than a fortnight's supply is in han Dependence on the Father's care is the rulin principle of the whole movement.

The man who has done and is doing so muc is worthy of high honour. He is a national benefactor. He did not seek fame, but it has com to him. He is known and loved througho Scotland. He has no pride in his success. H looks on himself as God's instrument, and neve forgets to give his Master the glory. His ra talent for organisation, his great busine abilities, and his unflinching perseverance, a consecrated to the task he has found in lif Trust is the mainspring of his actions; an his faith has removed mountains.

Mr. Quarrier owes much to his wife. Sh has been a true helpmate to him for thirty year The Bridge of Weir Homes derive much of the pleasant home-feeling from the charm of he manner and the kindness of her heart. He daughters are growing up like their mother.

Our friend is still eager to enlarge the scop of his work. It is his aim to make the Home national in the widest sense of the word; orpha children are welcomed from any part of th country. A church is to be built at Bridge o Weir, to seat 1000, and cottages to hold 40 children. To do this £30,000 are required God's treasury is never exhausted, and hi stewards will supply his servant with th necessary money.

If we were to do justice to this wonderfu movement we should have to devote a whol number to it; but we cannot do that. Th reader will learn something more by turning t the account of a visit lately made to the Glasgow Home by our own representative. We ca only thank God that such a man as Willia Quarrier has been raised up to care for th homeless children of Scotland, and pray that h may be increasingly blessed, and made a blessing

ON RELIGIOUS PERIODICALS.—A German pasto says, that after many years' experience, he has prove that a family that reads a religious paper requires much less looking after and attention than one that doe not. The readers of such literature are, as a rule, less fault-finding and less given to gossip.—Wahrheitszenge

WALDENSIAN CHURCH MISSIONS IN ITALY.—A appeal is being made by this faithful and histori "Church of the Valleys," for assistance in carrying o and extending their evangelistic work throughout th land. There are at present more than forty settle congregations, and thirty-six missionary stations, besid nearly two hundred localities which are frequentl visited by evangelists. Colporteurs, schoolmaster evangelists, a Bible carriage, Sabbath and day schools, ar among the agencies employed for consolidating an propagating the work. The annual expenditure i £11,000, which is devoted solely to the Waldensia Missions in various parts of Italy, and not to the sustenance of the pastors and schools of their own valleys Mr. D. AT MR. QUARRIER'S GLASGOW HOME.

(BY OUR OWN REPRESENTATIVE.)

The short, wintry afternoon was drawing to a close as I turned from Queen-street Station, Glasgow, to seek James Morison-street, where Mr. Quarrier's City Home and Night Refuge stands. I did not know the way, so I asked guidance from an elderly gentleman. He cheerfully gave me the needed direction, and, as he did so, volunteered the remark, "Wonderful man, Mr. Quarrier, sir! The most wonderful man in Glasgow!" The Western Metropolis has not a few wonderful men; but before that evening closed I was quite prepared to endorse the opinion of my courteous guide.

Ten minutes' walk brought me to a large building, which a legend in huge letters told to be the City Home and Refuge. A pull at the bell drew to the door a smart boy, who led me into an office where the renowned philanthropist sat busy at work. He rose to receive me with a smile and a cordial shake of the hand. His time was limited, as he had to go to Bridge of Weir at five o'clock, and it was then past four. He kindly allowed me to put questions, the answers to which form the substance of the accompanying article. The conversation was very pleasant. It revealed much of the nature of the man. His unaffected simplicity, broad grasp of details, firm belief in his mission, and unfaltering dependence on God, stood out in bold relief as he rapidly ran over the story of his life.

His sympathy with the lot of poor children is real, because he knew when a boy the pinching pathos of poverty. His widowed mother and two sisters made a scanty livelihood by doing fine sewing. He helped a little, too; but their united earnings could not keep the wolf from the door. At the pin-factory he got eighteenpence a week for putting heads on pins. There was no compulsory education or Workshops Act in those days. Knowledge and its joys were blessings unknown to the humble poor. But the resolute perseverance which marks the man dwelt in the boy. He pushed steadily on and up; diligent as an apprentice at the shoemaking, and by and by energetic enough to start a shop on his own account at an early age. He was converted at seventeen. That change revived the determination of childhood to do something for the homeless and outcast. The nobler ambition to help took the place of that of getting on. He still sought to get on, but only that he might the sooner reach what he now looked forward to as the work of his life. As he grew in worldly possessions, he grew in faith. His faith was greatly strengthened by an experience he passed through five years after his mother's death. His sister died, leaving three children. Her husband had pre-deceased her. There was nobody to care for the orphans. Mr. Quarrier's business was good enough to support his own family, but not good enough to support this addition to it. He took them to his house, however, and asked God for an increase to meet his larger expenditure. He got it, and along with it, a trust which in time was strong enough to take charge of hundreds of orphans, believing that "our Father" would give bread to feed them all.

I was very much struck with his narration of the mental struggle he had after the interview with Miss Macpherson (referred to in the preceding sketch). It furnished the key to his history; it showed how he was trained to cast the burden of every care on the Lord. Prayer was and is to him a reality. It is not the mere offering up of certain petitions, but a child's confidential intercourse with his Father. He told God all about his desire to enter at once on the task of setting up a home for the homeless. He wanted a sign to give light in his perplexity. This he afterwards regarded as savouring of impertinence, but his earnestness carried him away at the time. Perhaps he was right after all. God likes to be tried by his people; and, at any rate, what followed that eventful night showed that William Quarrier was being led in the right way.

As so much has been said about the man, I feel no regret in turning the reader's attention to his methods of operation. Mr. Quarrier is methodical in all he does. His time is valuable, and has to be carefully mapped out. Five days in the week he attends at the City Home from three to five o'clock to hear applications for the admission of children. He employs no special agents to search for the outcasts; missionaries, Bible-women, and police-officers, look well enough after that department of the work. They bring the waifs to him. In his office a big book is kept, in which each case is carefully recorded. His workers in the Home are converted men and women. They get no regular salary. They are supplied with food and clothing and a certain allowance for pocket-money. They are expected to work for the Lord, and not for money. This plan seems to succeed admirably. From what I saw of them I had no difficulty in believing them to be full of consecration and zeal.

After Mr. Quarrier went to catch his train, Mr. Burgess, the governor of the Home, conducted me through its different departments. The boys' dormitories are large and comfortable. They are kept spotlessly clean. Here orphan and forsaken lads of fourteen to eighteen years of age, unable to earn enough to keep them in lodgings, are sheltered. They go out daily to their trades, and return to their meals. At the end of each week they hand over their wages to the superintendent, and get a penny out of every shilling to use as they please. They have all the advantages of a home training. At night they are taught the three R's, as well as to know their Bibles. Their religious education, as might be expected, is specially emphasised.

The young women's department was instituted to help girls out of work, and to furnish them with a temporary home. They are trained in it to be domestic servants. It is they who do the household and laundry work. Thus a double purpose is served—the Home is kept bright and clean, and the girls are prepared for earning an honest livelihood. I got a glimpse of the laundry, where a group was busy washing, and of the sewing-room, where another company was eagerly stitching. As I looked at them I felt that the institution was a home in reality as well as in name. Boys and girls seemed quite happy, and wore the air of comfort so painfully absent in the waifs of the street.

A notice of the Home would be incomplete without a reference to the evangelistic work carried on in connection with it. Its largest room is a hall, capable of holding 500. Here nightly meetings are held, which prove a channel of blessing, not only to the boys and girls, but also to the working classes in the neighbourhood. Richard Weaver, Fiddler Joss, George Williams, and many other honoured evangelists have done good work in it. Quite recently Christopher King and his wife attracted large audiences by their presentations of Gospel truth.

When I left the Home two thoughts filled my mind. One was, the old gentleman is right after all; William Quarrier is the most wonderful man in Glasgow; and the other was, even Professor Tyndall might be convinced that God hears and answers prayer if he saw and heard what I have been privileged to see and hear.

ECUADOR.—It is said that there is in this State a Romanist church for every 150 inhabitants, and that 10 per cent. of the population consists of priests, monks, and nuns. 272 days in the year are either fast or fête days; a quarter of the wealth of the State belongs to the Church, and the priests have control in all branches of the Government. After that it is not difficult to believe that 75 per cent. of the population can neither read nor write.—Témoin de la Vérité.

BAPTISTS in Poland and on the Russian frontier are increasing. Twenty-two persons were baptized in Derschlag, on February 13, and as many more are expected to follow them. This Church was formed only three years ago, and now numbers 116 members. A young Rabbi, who is connected with many influential Jewish families, and whose prospects were very good, has sacrificed them all by accepting Jesus as his Saviour and Messiah. He was baptized in Warsaw.

BIBLE STUDIES.—11.

GOD'S LAW OF SEPARATION.

(1) "God divided the light from the darkness" (Gen. i. 4). "What communion hath light with darkness?" (2 Cor. vi. 14). "Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness. . . . Let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breast-plate of faith and love; and for an helmet the hope of salvation" (1 Thess. v. 5—8).

(2) "I will put enmity between thy seed and her seed" (Gen. iii. 15). "Jesus said unto them, If God were your Father, ye would love Me. . . . Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do" (John viii. 42—44). "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you" (John xv. 19). "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution" (2 Tim. iii. 12).

(3) "There was a thick darkness in all the land of Egypt . . . but all the children of Israel had light in their dwellings" (Ex. x. 22, 23). "I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on Me should not abide in darkness" (John xii. 46). "He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life" (John viii. 12). (a) Light in adversity. "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom . . . yet I will rejoice in the Lord; I will joy in the God of my salvation" (Hab. iii. 17, 18). "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord" (Job i. 21). (b) In bereavement. "Sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him" (1 Thess. iv. 13, 14). (c) In perplexity. "I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight" (Isa. xlii. 16).

(4) All the firstborn in the land of Egypt shall die . . . but against any of the children of Israel shall not a dog move his tongue . . . that ye may know how that the Lord doth put a difference between the Egyptians and Israel (Exod. xi. 5—7). "Surely He shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence. He shall cover thee" (Ps. xci. 3, 4). "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him, and delivereth them" (Ps. xxxiv. 7). "The very hairs of your head are all numbered" (Matt. x. 30). "Nothing shall by any means hurt you" (Luke x. 19). "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God" (Rom. viii. 28).

(5) "The pillar of the cloud . . . came between the camp of the Egyptians and the camp of Israel; and it was a cloud and darkness to them, but it gave light by night to these" (Ex. xiv. 19, 20). "Hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne" (Rev. vi. 16). Contrast: "If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence" (Ex. xxxiii. 15). "Blackness of darkness for ever" (Jude xiii.). Contrast: "The Lamb is the light thereof" (Rev. xxi. 23). "Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called . . . Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God" (1 Cor. i. 23, 24).

(6) "When the Lord shall deliver them before thee, thou shalt smite . . . destroy . . . make no covenant . . . neither shalt thou make marriages with them" (Deut. vii. 1—3; see Ezra ix.; Neh. xiii. 23—28). "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers . . . come out . . . and be ye separate . . . and I will receive you" (2 Cor. vi. 14—18). "Only in the Lord" (1 Cor. vii. 39). "Ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light . . . and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them" (Eph. v. 8, 11).

MINISTERING CHILDREN.

It has frequently been urged in the columns of The Christian that what is wanted to-day is not so much a charity which contents itself with the giving of money, but rather that practical sympathy which shows itself willing and ready to help in other and more troublesome ways. So it is encouraging to find that an association has been organised, having for one of its main objects the development in our young people of that habit of usefulness which results in thoughtfulness for the well-being of others. There is so much misery all around us that we are glad to welcome every accession to the ranks of those who are labouring to lessen it; and there is no reason why the charity of children should not become an important factor in modern philanthropic work, if only it be guided into proper channels, and kept free from anything like ostentation and display.

That the warm heart of a child becomes in only too many cases thoroughly hardened by the luxurious surroundings of a wealthy home, it is not difficult to believe; many young people grow up into utterly selfish men and women simply because pity and sympathy have withered within them for lack of opportunities for development. Wrapped in costly attire, fed upon rich food, surrounded by everything beautiful, accustomed to have every want anticipated, the child of wealthy and thoughtless people must find, in a story of the sufferings and sorrows of the denizens of the garrets and cellars of our city slums, a similar element of improbability to that which makes the fairy tale agreeable reading. Anything, therefore, which will take the young people out of an atmosphere of ignorance, and tend to cultivate in them the habit of usefulness, and a tender regard for others less happily situated, is worthy of encouragement; not only because it must result in the alleviation of misery, but also because, as Lady Brabazon has said, "the habit of usefulness is calculated to be a greater blessing to those who acquire it than to those who are benefited by it."

Very different now would have been the lot of the deserving poor if the present generation of rich people had been trained from childhood not to let a day go by without its record of loving labour for the sick and needy, work perhaps simple and slight in itself but grand in its motive. It is not too much to believe that the condition of both rich and poor in the next generation will be greatly improved if the children of the present day are taught to find not merely a duty but a pleasure in anything calculated to lessen misery and to relieve want and pain. The simple and healthy luxury of doing good, unlike other luxuries, does not injure those who yield to it; and perhaps the best way of battling against that unworthy indulgence, which is telling so injuriously upon our national life, is to commence with the children in the years when the heart is sympathetic and receptive, and to teach them, practically, that true nobility consists in being the minister rather than the master of others. It is, therefore, to be hoped that the Ministering Children's League, recently originated by Lady Brabazon,* and which already has some thousands of members working away in aid of the suffering and needy, may continue to extend its borders, for its objects are only such as can be heartily commended by everyone who desires to see the example of Jesus followed by those who call upon His name.

The League has been formed "in the hope that, under the providence of God, it may prove an humble instrument for the diffusion of happiness and the alleviation of misery, and that it may lead, in some small degree, to the moral improvement of the rising generation." As all its members beseech God to make them like the Master, loving, kind, and useful to others, "for Jesus' sake," the answer to the petition will come in increased opportunities and in enlarged powers, and will bring us nearer to the time foretold by the prophet, when all our children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be their peace, that being the promised heritage of the servants of God.

THAT AWFUL NIGHT.

When Dr. John Duncan, of Edinburgh, was old and frail, a little girl, of whom he was fond, came one day to see him. Looking out of his bed, he observed her sitting on the floor, looking at him. "Oh, missy, are you there? What are you at in your Bible lesson at school?" "We've just finished the Passion Week." "Oh, lassie, lassie, there was never a week like that since the world began, and there never will be a week like it again! That was the week of weeks—there never in the universe will be a week like that! There are in the heavens a heap of fixed stars, and probably all of them have suns or planets round them; but never in the universe of God did there take place such things as took place that week on this earth! It is a wonderful place, this earth." What Dr. Duncan said of the whole Passion Week might be still more truly said of that one night which began with Gethsemane, and ended with Calvary—that night on which Jesus was betrayed.

Let us try to picture to ourselves the shifting scenes of that awful night, the darkest in the world's history. In the quiet upper room the shadow is already falling over the spirit of the blessed Saviour, as, looking round upon his beloved apostles, he exclaims: "One of you shall betray me!" We follow Him to the Garden of Gethsemane; great drops of blood are falling to the ground, while he cries, with an exceeding bitter cry, "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me." Then, in quick succession, follow the traitor kiss of Judas; the desertion of his apostles, leaving Him utterly alone in the midst of his murderous foes; his hurried trial before Annas first, and then before Caiaphas and the Sanhedrim; and the thrice-repeated denial of the once brave and boastful, but now weak and cowardly, Peter.

He is dragged in haste to the judgment seat of Pilate. We watch the conflict in the Roman governor's breast, between a sense of justice and the fear of the people, and hear him in the end delivering Jesus to their will. We go with him in his brief visit to King Herod—a visit that brought so little satisfaction to the king, but so much mockery and pain to the Saviour. We shudder as we listen to the soldiers mocking Him, as we see them covering Him with the purple robe, and driving the sharp thorns into his brow. At last the cross is laid upon his weary shoulders, ere his hands and feet are nailed thereto. All these scenes flit before us; and so vigorously did the murderers pursue their bloody work, that almost by the breakfast hour on Friday morning, the cross, with the Holy Victim on it, is lifted up between earth and heaven. Oh, awful night! Too dark to gaze on, too terrible to think of, were it not for those bright beams of self-control, and grace, and patience, which all night long shone forth from the blessed sufferer, drawing us close to Him even in his hour of deepest humiliation, an forcing us to fall on our knees before Him exclaiming, "Truly this is the Son of God.'

Never was sufferer so shamefully treate before or since; but never was sufferer s patient. That silence of Christ in th midst of injustice and ridicule (and wha two things are harder to bear?), oh, how i touches us! He feels it all, for He i intensely human. He has but to say th word and a lightning flash would consum his foes. "Put up again thy sword into it place. . . . Thinkest thou that I cannot no pray to my Father, and He shall presentl give me more than twelve legions of angels But how then shall the Scriptures be fulfille that thus it must be?" Infinite power i held back, as it were, by infinite love an patience. As I watch the Lord Jesus o that awful night, I understand, in som measure, the great patience of God. I ofte wonder why God bears so long and so quietly with such a Godless, wicked world. Now see light on that great mystery. He bear with wicked men for their own sake, that by his long-suffering, He may lead them t repentance. He bears with them for hi Church's sake, that through much tribulatio his ransomed ones may learn obedience an reach perfection. And all the time He i calmly working out his own great an gracious plans. Having studied the patienc of God as exhibited in the Lord Jesus, I the turn to gaze upon myself; and how sad th contrast! Oh, my Saviour, forgive me fo my impatience under the little provocation and disappointments of my life! Teach m how calm and quiet and happy a man ma be, at all times and in all circumstances, if h be on God's side, if he drink in the spirit o the blessed Saviour.

Never did sufferer bring such glory t God and such blessing to men by his sufferings. Darkness seems to gather round th last hours of Christ's earthly life. It was dar when he bowed beneath the awful load o sin in Gethsemane. It was still dark when He was led to Annas and Caiaphas. The sun hid its face, as if in shame and sorrow when he was hanging on the tree. And a last He was laid in the darkness of Joseph' tomb. But darker than the gloom of Gethsemane, or Calvary, or the sepulchre, is the mystery which gathers round the suffering and death of Christ. He did no sin, and yet He was treated as a sinner. He was the only innocent one upon the earth, and yet He was the greatest sufferer the world had ever seen. It pleased Satan to see Him suffer; but it also pleased God to bruise Him, and to put Him to grief. There is no way of clearing up the mystery which gathers round that awful night, if we refuse to believe that Christ was a substitute and a sacrifice—that He was bearing the sins of others. It was our burden Christ bore in Gethsemane. It was my sin that nailed Him to the cross. Around Him, as He lay in Joseph's tomb, gathered all the hopes of a redeemed humanity. By his sufferings, on that awful night, he brought glory to God; He magnified his law, and made it honourable; and He wrought out a perfect salvation for sinful men. We may well rejoice and praise his blessed name, that, by his cross and passion, a way of escape is open to us from our sin and from the results of sin for ever.

Do you wish to see the fruit of Christ's sufferings on that awful night? We look through the door that was opened in heaven, and lo! "a Lamb" stands "on the Mount Sion, and with Him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written on their foreheads. . . . These were redeemed from among men, being the first-fruits unto God, and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile; for they are without fault before the throne of God." Jesus died, but rose again, and lives for us in glory. "Wherefore He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them." As the suffering, but now exalted, Saviour is held up before men, in the glory of his person and his work, He divides them into two classes. Some join with the mocking throng around the cross, or pass by in indifference, as if his death was of no concern to them. Others hasten, in penitence and faith, to shelter beneath that cross—the only place in God's universe where a guilty soul can be safe from the wrath and curse due to it for sin.

If the sin of others, laid upon Him, brought such suffering on that awful night to the holy Son of God, "how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?" Oh, my Saviour, I come to Thee now; shelter me in thy wounded side; keep me close to Thyself for ever!

Sweet the moments, rich in blessing,
  Which before the cross I spend,
Life, and health, and peace possessing
  From the sinner's dying Friend.

Here I sit in wonder viewing
  Mercy's streams in streams of blood;
Precious drops, my soul bedewing,
  Plead and claim my peace with God.

APOSTOLIC PREACHING OF CHRIST.

By Rev. WILLIAM GUEST.

In the recently published "Life of Adolphe Monod," there is a letter which was addressed to him by Professor de Félice, the author of the "History of the French Protestants." "It seems to me," says the Professor, "that at the present time the broad and vast moral principles of the Gospel ought to occupy in the pulpit a larger place than they have done for some years, and some endeavour is required to connect them with Christian dogma; M. Vinet often said to me that this is one of the main forces of Christian preaching."

M. Vinet, one of the foremost theologians of this century, judged by his own writings, must have meant such a preaching of Christian doctrine as would carry with it obedience to the will of God. Paul affirmed that his apostleship was for obedience to the faith among all nations. This at the beginning was the power of Christian preaching. The precepts and spirit of the Sermon on the Mount and the glad tidings of the Gospel were conjoined. Has there not of late years been a disseverance? Is there not often such a setting forth of Christ's redeeming work as to make moral principles appear foreign to it? In tracts, books, and sermons, when the truth of Christ is used to inspire a holy life, there is often objection taken as though this was not the Gospel. Truly, it is not the Gospel if the message does not begin with the testimony of the great sacrifice for sin, and clear proclamation concerning Him who "made peace through the blood of his cross." But if it ends there it fails to declare the full doctrine of Christ.

In addition to these considerations, we need a Gospel which will help us to confront the dark and threatening problems of our times. We may, as Christian witnesses, fail to awaken that steadfast hope which is the very essence of our religion. There is a duty of rejoicing in the Lord in the darkest hour, and the triumphs of the past justify that rejoicing. The questions have lately come to me: Is there any present defect in our testimony? What was the doctrine made prominent in Apostolic preaching? What is the pattern it supplies? May we not be virtually exaggerating one aspect of truth by too much losing sight of another? Thus influenced, I have read through the Acts of the Apostles specially to obtain an answer to these inquiries; and, for the confirmation of the faith of many, I lay the result before Christian brethren.

Assuredly we may aver that primitive preaching was concerning no dead Christ, however much it magnified the grand reconciliation of his death. Nor was it a merely an historic Jesus, after a Socinian fashion. Before Pentecost the world's doom seemed to thoughtful men to have come. The destruction of Judaism was hastening; the Roman Empire was diseased unto death by its own vices; and in every habitation there were groans over the injustices and miseries of the times. Yet Peter's words, in the first sermon after the Spirit's illumination, closed with a ring of exultation. Nor was it the vision of a distant future that awoke the note of triumph. It was that the gates of hope for men were then being opened: "This Jesus, being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear." And the crowning word that ended the memorable sermon was: "God hath made this Jesus, whom ye crucified, both Lord and Christ."

Christ, our anointed Master, who, according to the prophets, should be "exalted, and extolled, and be very high," was the perpetual theme of Apostolic testimony. Not only to Israel, but when Peter was privileged to open the door of salvation to the Gentiles, he preached peace by Jesus Christ, and added, "He is Lord of all" (x. 36). The God-man, the new Head of humanity, He had been exalted with God's right hand to be a "Prince and Saviour" (v. 31); He alone could give the [Greek] salvation for which Jewish rulers professed to be looking (iv. 12); He claimed "the obedience of faith" (v. 32, vii. 39); He was seen by Stephen standing in heaven to succour and receive his witness (vii. 56); He is preached by Philip to the Samaritans as the Christ, the risen Son of God (viii. 5); He has been ordained to be the Judge of quick and dead (x. 42); and He fulfils the great Messianic prophecies (x. 43). (The designation "Jesus" by itself was only used on rare occasions by the Apostles after Pentecost, and then when they turned back to the Lord's human life in the world's history).

When Saul of Tarsus is called, it is that he may bear Christ's name, his glorious name, in which every knee should bow, and to which every tongue should make acknowledgment of majesty, before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel (ix. 15). On Paul's first public appearance as a disciple in the synagogues of Damascus, his testimony was that Jesus of Nazareth was the Christ, the Son of God (ix. 20). When he proclaimed "glad tidings" at Antioch, in Pisidia, they not only bore relation to the forgiveness of sins, but emphasised the resurrection of Jesus, and the summons of obedience to Him as the Son of God (xiii. 32—46). When he gave to the Philippian jailor the great response, his reply was concerning a Person upon whom the awakened one should believe (xvi. 31). The charge brought against him in Thessalonica was that he preached "another king, one Jesus" (xvii. 7). In Athens, Jesus Christ as the appointed Judge is represented as the prominent point of his teaching (xvii. 31—32); and in Corinth he knew nothing but Christ and Him crucified, i.e., Christ the substance of his ministry, the Christ who had been crucified.

There is thus, on the part of the Apostles, a consistency in their preaching of Him who had taken to his Divine attributes his creature's nature, and had become, by the wondrous union, the new Head of humanity. They thus gave to the human race a magnificent hope, a new righteousness to plead; and, on the basis of reconcilement through Christ's expiation, sought to bring men under the spiritual sway of a new authority by the constraining force of an infinite obligation.

Doubtless there is a theoretic agreement on this aspect of Apostolic preaching. But may there not be a practical difference? Is not our modern Christianity too much regarded as an opiate of peace, instead of a vital force of life? Is not our blessed Lord thought of as merely bringing safety, rather than a salvation which places man under a new authority? Partial and one-sided Christian beliefs cannot effect the vital change of the complete religion of Apostolic days. Distorted teaching must issue in distorted lives. Pleasant it is to tell of the finished propitiation, and proclaim to sinners the Gospel of peace. But have we not to conjoin the Saviour and the King? Blessed is the unambiguous Apostolic testimony that "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us," but of what avail would the passover have ultimately been to a Hebrew who refused to come out of Egypt? And should we not teach that by the powerful blood of the great Paschal Lamb we have to be "separated" under a nobler leadership than that of Moses? Our nineteenth century Christianity is with many proceeding ill, and must end ill. Thousands of honest-minded men, moreover, are caring less and less for sectarianisms, but they are crying out for the essentials of primitive Christian teaching: after hearing a Gospel of half-truths they go into a world where animal appetites, and false maxims, and spirits in aërial deeps, tempt on every side, and they feel that the half-truths are not enough to meet the conflict. Man wants not only the new affection which the Gospel evokes, but the power of a new allegiance to a rightful Lord, and the habitual reliance on an all sufficient Friend. It is the full glory of the Gospel doctrine which meets man's necessities, his fears, and his warfare; and sometimes I could have wished that in the immortal Dream, after the matchless description of Christian losing his burden before the cross, it had been added that he there saw a new Lord of his life, and an all-powerful Companion and Guardian, who would never fail him in the conflicts of his pilgrimage, and would assuredly open a passage to the Land that towered above the heavenly hills.

Fellow believers! we ourselves need this testimony in these years of our waiting for the full redemption. Heretical corruptions threaten; onsets of infidelity alarm; false professions betray; a spirit of lying more than ever is abroad. But our religion has lived through times equally threatening, because He lives to whom all things are in subjection. It is not enough that we look for his re-appearing; we may do this with quivering lips, and with hands folded in faithless indolence. Our Redeemer is the Fulfiller, the Succourer, the Consummator. Men should see in these last days that our boast in Him is our passion. His place at the "right hand of the Father" is a permanent one. It assures us that no events can surprise Him; that no fear can agitate his heart; and that there are no limits that can interfere with the penetrating of his presence through all these wearied times. Surely then, now, as in Apostolic days, panic should be far from us, and our Eternal Head should be the testimony, the inspiration, the motive, and the exultation of the Church.

Tunbridge Wells.

"AS HINDS' FEET."

TO THEM THAT TARRY BY THE STUFF.

David says, and Habakkuk repeats, "He equalleth (2 Sam. xxii. 34, mar.) my feet as hinds' feet, and maketh me to walk upon my high places." The occasion in each case was remarkable. It was when the Lord had delivered David from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul. And when, although Habakkuk's figtree should not blossom, and everything in field and stall should fail, yet he would rejoice in Jehovah, and joy in the God of his salvation. "The hopes of the prophet," says Canon Cook, "were specially founded upon the promises of God, which assured 'great deliverance to his anointed, to David, and to his seed for evermore.'"

On the other hand "the feet of the lame are not equal." But God's "eyes behold (his soul delights in) the things that are equal." He charges Israel, through Ezekiel, thus: "The children of thy people say, The way of the Lord is not equal: but as for them, their way is not equal." How is it with the Israel of God to-day? Are our ways equal? God is giving us a great revival of missionary enterprise; and the Church of Christ is putting her right foot forward. We will call that right foot, "Going;" the other foot is "Giving." And each must be put forth alternately: Going—giving; going—giving; going—giving; going—giving. Then indeed she will sing, "He equalleth my feet as hinds' feet, and maketh me to walk upon my high places." And heaven and earth will respond, "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of them that preach the Gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things."

Nothing is more awkward, undignified, and ineffective, than the progression of one whose feet are not equal, who has one leg shorter than the other. Yet this ungainly spectacle is looked upon with pained surprise and with malignant pleasure by good and evil angels respectively, as they perceive that the Church puts forth her "going" foot willingly, if not enthusiastically, but limps upon her "giving" foot. The blood begins to circulate healthily through the former, but the latter is put down tentatively, with pain and pricking, as when we step upon a foot which is still "asleep."

In other words—there are more who are ready to give themselves to missionary work than there are to provide the necessary means. There might be much surer walking on our high places if those who go and those who give did their work equally.

In David's day the fighting men wanted to deal unequally with those who tarried by the stuff. But that born ruler among men, ruling in the fear of God, decided that, "As his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff: they shall share alike." And from that day and forward he made it a statute and an ordinance for Israel.

But in these latter days they that tarry by the stuff have become the more numerous and influential party, and seem willingly ignorant, or at least willingly forgetful, of David's ordinance.

Foremost among our prayers should be, Lord, equal thy Church's feet like hinds' feet, that she may walk upon her high places. Grant that they who go down to the battle, and they that tarry by the stuff, may be of one accord, of one mind; that they may remember thy words: Two are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labour. For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow; but woe to him that is alone when he falleth, and hath not another to lift him up. Again, if two lie together, then they have warmth: but how can one be warm alone? And if a man prevail against him that is alone, two shall withstand him; and a threefold cord (for "Lo, I am with you alway") is not easily broken.

If the two feet go equally; if the givers keep pace with the goers; if they who tarry by the stuff are faithful stewards towards those who go down to the battle; if all learn the wise man's lesson that two are better than one: the promised presence of the Third shall not be wanting; for where even two are gathered in his name He will be in the midst, and assure the victory.

A STORY of SUFFERING and SERVICE.*

> "She, laid apart from every common ill
> By trials long and sore, awoke to rest
> In recognition of the Highest Will,
> So bowed her head, and henceforth lived as blest."

With the sense of a holy awe upon us, as of having been in the presence of a saint of God, and caught a glimpse of the power and the calm, and the holiness and the hush within the veil, we would bring before our readers the Life Story of Bella Cooke, which has just been given to the British reading public. From beginning to end it is a story of wondrous faith-dealing, a "record of loving kindness and tender mercies"—a complete refutation of the too oft-accepted theory of the connection between sin and suffering, and a living, marvellous testimony to the truth—"He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might He increaseth strength."

Born in 1821, at Hull, Bella Beeton exhibited in early years the workings of the Holy Spirit in her heart, though she does not seem to have been a remarkable child. After a very definite conversion to God, she began earnestly to work for Him, until bodily weakness—the presage of the experiences of after years—laid her aside for a time. Then came her union with a godly man named Cooke, a bright and happy home in Derbyshire, removal to New York, sickness, death in her home, poverty; then, for a brief space, returning prosperity until, in 1849, her husband died of the cholera.

And now comes the wonderful demonstration of the will of the Father concerning his child—the dealings of Jehovah with a suffering, stricken widow, with four children, all, to human seeming, dependent on her feeble exertions. But though sick nigh unto death, she is raised again; and this not once, but many times. Though the cupboard and the cellar are empty, faith does not fail, and the supply of bread and coal is never wanting, though it comes at the extreme moment. The God of the fatherless and the widow sends friends to her after the Divine pattern. As we read on in this story of a beautiful life, tears, praises, adoration, and wonder, succeed each other. Over thirty years of suffering, and every year bringing the soul nearer to God—so near, that it seems at times as if the now bed-ridden invalid must have gone to Him in a divine ecstasy.

But let the words of friends speak. Her pastor says: "Let me call the reader's attention to the following characteristics, viz., her resignation, usefulness, thankfulness, and cheerfulness." As to her usefulness, "She is never unemployed. Many churches and benevolent institutions have profited by the skilful work of her fingers. Her hours and days of pain are spent in earnest work for the Master. She is ever ready to instruct the ignorant, to comfort the sorrowing, and to relieve the needy." She is the willing almoner of the Lord's people. "Every Christmas and Thanksgiving Day witness busy scenes in her little room. I have seen turkeys, chickens, and vegetables, piled up in one corner sufficient to provide dinners for more than one hundred families of the poor!"

"Many a storm has swept athwart her sky, but yet the sunshine of heaven rests on her heart. She has been fed from the Divine table, and clothed from the Divine wardrobe." Her cheerfulness attracts the children to her beautiful little room, and "to them she is always 'at home.'"

Writing at the end of 1882, Mrs. Cooke herself says: "I have sent New Year Bible-class mottoes to our Bible-classes and teachers, . . . 'Christmas Letters' to the Free Home for Incurables and Convalescent Home, and to over fifty of my lady friends. Thus another year's work is done, and I thank my heavenly Father for all his goodness to me in permitting me to do a little for Him, for the bodies as well as the souls of many." Then follows a list of her collections in kind for the poor. The moneys received in 1882 by this invalid missionary amounted to 1482 dollars, "all of which was prayerfully distributed." During the same year friends made 3210 calls to the bedside of this suffering, rejoicing pilgrim! During the severe cold of January she was thinking how she could get bedclothes for the poor. "At 5 p.m. that day I had six pairs of blankets, and when the bundle was opened I shouted for joy." From the chamber of pain come hallelujahs of joy and praise, the widow's cruse runs over with "the oil of gladness," enriching countless lives, and God is magnified on an instrument with broken strings.

From her bed-chamber in New York, Mrs. Cooke sent our Queen a copy of the American edition of her book, which was graciously acknowledged. We earnestly commend "These Memories of my Father's love, written in prayer and pain." May they speak to the hearts of all who read them, whispering a Father's tender care; breathing the spirit of the faithful God and Comforter, and inspiring tried ones with fresh hope and courage in this sometimes forgotten truth: "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth."

We ought to add that a beautifully executed portrait of Mrs. Cooke is given, and the artistic design on the cover makes the book externally attractive.

"RECONSTRUCTED" PUBLIC-HOUSES.

Dear Friends,—By the good providence of God, two public-houses, the "Royal Naval Rendezvous," and the "Napier Inn," adjoining the Sailors' Rest, at Devonport, have fallen into my hands. We have long been crowded out at Devonport; over 1000 seamen slept in the house last week, and over 454,000 have been housed here since God gave us the place in 1876. Our Christian seamen have been earnestly asking God to "enable us to shake out a reef or two," and the answer has come—first, in the very unusual opportunity of purchasing two public-houses, and, second, in the liberality of a Christian lady, who has promised me £1000, on condition that these public-houses are bought, pulled down, and a block for Christian and Temperance work built on their site. This done, our Sailors' Rest would be almost doubled in size, accommodation provided for our sailor boys, more sleeping accommodation for the men, and a small hall for our Gospel tea-parties, &c.

The sum wanted to complete the whole is £6000. People tell me that times are bad, and money scarce, but "Jehovah Jireh" has ever been my motto, and ever will be. Who will send a shot flying against these public-houses? The thousand-pound shot has made a large breach, and a couple of hundred-pounders have followed, with some ten and five-pounders. All are wanted. The shilling shots are valuable, too. Will your readers enable us to demolish and to build for God?

Yours in Christian work,
Sailors' Rest, Devonport. Agnes E. Weston.

ST. GILES'S CHRISTIAN MISSION.—The Sunday-school anniversary services were held at the Mission Chapel, on the 11th inst., and on the following Tuesday evening the annual tea and public meeting in connection with the above schools took place in the same building. Mr. George Soltau presided. The report, read by Mr. Goodwin, Secretary, showed marked progress in every direction. Practical addresses followed the reading of the report.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—Dear Sir,—Permit me to appeal to your readers for grants of tracts for use by our 990 members, or the means wherewith to purchase them. Last year we circulated 9,991,481 in the 649 towns and villages where our members laboured, including 710 races, fairs, and other special gatherings. Of this number 795,777 were received as free grants from 114 donors, their published price being £604 4s. 7d. During the thirty-three years of the Society's existence we have circulated 18,607,620. At present our stock is very low, while we have applications for free grants from forty-two of our members. Hence any help your readers can give will be greatly valued by Yours faithfully, Gawin Kirkham, Sec.

LETTERS FROM ABROAD.—8.

BARCELONA.

Having spent a delightful week at Figueras and its neighbourhood we arrived on Saturday night, March 6, at Barcelona. On Sunday we visited in the morning the meeting of Brethren, under the pastoral care of Mr. Payne, and in the evening heard the Wesleyan minister, Rev. Robert Simpson. Quite a hundred hearers were present, from forty to fifty of whom were Christians, and remained after the close of the service to celebrate the Lord's Supper. It was delightful to see the harmony existing amongst the three pastors, Mr. Payne, Mr. Simpson, and Mr. Empaytaz, a Swiss missionary, who, however, was absent from Barcelona, so that we did not have the advantage of seeing his work.

As an instance of this harmonious co-operation, they all united in the compilation of a hymn-book, which is used at each of their places of worship. Mr. Simpson, however, has found it necessary to add a supplement, containing hymns more of the "Songs and Solos" character, to meet the needs of his congregation. They have established a Cottage-hospital, and unitedly direct it. During the last four or more years this labour of love and work of faith has yielded very blessed fruit; not only Spanish, but also English, Scotch, French, German, and Swedish patients have been treated, and remarkable cases of healing, soul-restoring, and conversion are recorded. They likewise hold united monthly prayer-meetings, meet together with their flocks annually for celebrating the Lord's Supper, besides visiting each other month by month for mutual prayer, fellowship, and conference on matters of common interest. A special manifestation of their united action was seen in the Conference held during our stay in their midst.

The schools, superintended by Mr. Payne, have been in existence for several years. They used to be free, and then many more names were on the books. But the attendance was not so regular as now, when most of them pay their monthly peseta (10d.), with extras, adding about a fourth to that amount. There are nine schools, at Barcelona, Gracia, and Barcelonetta, with a total of over 600 children. These are supported by Mr. Müller, of Bristol. The children in the three Wesleyan schools number about 320. These schools are exceedingly well organised, and Mr. Simpson handed us a monthly statement containing fifty items, showing every particular on which it was possible that information could be given. The following is a summary of this work in 1885:—

Sums of Money Raised Locally for the Support of the Work of God.—1885.

2 Village Meetings.
5 Spanish Preachers (Unpaid).

This may seem a comparatively small work, but it is only one of four evangelistic centres in Barcelona, whose influence and fruit extend far beyond any mere tabulated results. Many ripe saints from these congregations and many dear children from these schools have sweetly fallen asleep in Jesus, singing his praises or murmuring his words up to the last, and that in the presence of infidel or Roman Catholic relatives or parents.

"Oh, mother," said one dying boy, "Jesus says 'Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out.'" Then he attempted a hymn, beginning, "To Jesus Christ I would fain draw near;" while almost his last words were, "Oh, Jesus, open me the door." "Oh, mother, put away those beads," cried a dying girl. "Let my sisters come and sing with me. I am bound for heaven." They drew near and sang, and her spirit soared above.

"I have seen the Lord Jesus in all his beauty," exclaimed a young woman, as death drew near, and then joining issue with Paul, continued, "To depart and be with Christ, how glorious! to remain and work amongst the young women, how blessed!"

"What shall I ask in prayer for you?" said her pastor to a dying mother. "Nothing, but that I be made more white, more ripe for the kingdom;" was the reply.

"Do give over that singing for to-night, you can sing again another time," expostulated an ungodly wife with her recently converted husband, a young man who would sing hymns far into the night. "Ah! that is if I get another opportunity," replied the singer; and not content with singing only, he arose and spent some time in prayer. Next morning he returned as usual from his work, and fell dead in his own house from heart disease.

"How may we know we have received the Holy Ghost?" inquired another, in the agony of dying. "Oh!" replied one of like faith as well as nationality, "by the comfort and peace which fill our soul." "Then I've received the Holy Ghost," murmured the sufferer, and a few minutes afterwards was asleep in Jesus.

We might fill many pages with like incidents, but these describe some of the many happy death-beds of Spaniards brought to Christ through one of these Barcelona missions. When we consider that there are such centres pretty well all over Spain, we can rest assured that, if Spain is not being quickly revolutionised, souls are being steadily won for Christ.

All Spain was holding Carnival during the days we spent at Barcelona. The harlot counterfeit of the Church of Christ proves the identity of Rome with the Woman of Rev. xvii. by her encouragement of sin at Carnival time, that she may make money by absolving the sinners during Lent. Abominations and obscenities too awful even to mention were seen in broad daylight and in the chief thoroughfares of Barcelona during our short sojourn there.

After the excesses of Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, the Carnival is "buried" on Wednesday, when the people go for a quiet day into the country, and the city is as still as during the previous days it had been excited and uproarious.

This shop-shutting day was taken advantage of to hold a Conference of Christian workers, and we were surprised to find about fifty, all workers, gathered in the morning from nine to twelve, and, in spite of a downpour of rain, about 130 in the evening. The meetings were held in the Wesleyan room, as being the most commodious, and Mr. Simpson naturally presided. The morning subject was Consecration and Sanctification, with Power for Service. Mr. Payne read a paper by Mr. Empaytaz on the causes of weakness and backsliding in workers, in which the twofold aspect of the Gospel was set forth—the blood of Christ crucified for the forgiveness of sin, and the power of the risen Christ to save to the uttermost from sin.

Mr. Simpson (who, by the way, had recently returned after eighteen months' absence on account of ill-health) defined consecration as our separating ourselves from all sin through the power of the blood of Jesus, and deliberately and entirely yielding ourselves up to God for Himself and for his service—putting ourselves as empty vessels into his hands; and sanctification, as God taking these vessels so given and filling them with Himself, and for his own use. Our lives then flow entirely and constantly from God, and, true to their source, flow back to God, in daily, hourly service.

Then a number of workers put questions or offered remarks more or less relevant to the subject. Amongst them was a sister who said she had learned to trust the Lord Jesus Christ not only as her salvation, but also as her wisdom and power for and in service. Mr. Simpson described her to us as a fully consecrated woman.

Mr. Payne began a very practical address by saying: "If I do not honour God in my house, He will not honour me anywhere. In all my service I never felt in such difficult circumstances as when I tried to bend the will of a little child. Let us not aspire to be great, but to be good wives and husbands at home. When are the angels off duty? The Lord sent one angel to Daniel to show him the course of the coming ages, and another to cook a cake for Elijah. Am I prepared to be anything the Lord desires me to be? Do I want to give up teaching in school to be an evangelist? or evangelising to be a pastor? On the other hand, let us not think work meritorious because it is disagreeable."

The Conference was kept up with unwearied animation for three hours, and in the evening was resumed by increased numbers and with renewed interest.

The evening service was intended to meet the needs of professed Christians, by putting before them in a series of four brief addresses, "The Christian Life." The first address, "The Christian at Home," was given by Mr. Lund, who represents an American Board of Missions in a recently established centre in Barcelona. The second, "The Christian in the World," was to have been given by M. Empaytaz, but he being absent, we were invited to take his place. The third, "The Christian in his Daily Calling," was given by Mr. Payne, and the last, "The Christian in the Church," by Mr. Simpson.

Since our return we have received the following from our dear friend and brother, Mr. Simpson:—

> A few days after you left us, we opened our new preaching local in Pueblo Nuevo. Though seated for about one hundred, some two hundred people, big and little, got in somehow, and as they persevered crowding in long after the place was "packed," we had to shut the door. Four or five hymns were sung, three or four prayers offered, and four addresses given, the service lasting about an hour and a quarter, my colleague, Mr. Smith, spoke on the glory of the Lord filling the temple, the church, the soul. Our Spanish brother. Sr. Cierera, spoke on God's great love and God's great gift (John iii. 16), and I spoke on the necessity of receiving the Word of Salvation which to them was sent (Acts xiii. 26). I went out last Wednesday to the ordinary week night service and found a hundred hearers present. We ardently long for a revival in this village. The Lord hasten it!
> Our girls' school, in the village of Pueblo Nuevo, greatly prospers. During the past quarter it has been considerably more than half way towards being self-supporting.

It will thus be seen that in Spain, as elsewhere, God is blessing and honouring the testimony borne to the great salvation.

JOSEPH OF ARIMATHEA.

A MEDITATION FOR GOOD FRIDAY.

All was over. Out of the darkness with which the Divine Father had curtained the dying agony of his well-beloved Son there had come the cry, "It is finished," and on the central cross of the three that stood on Calvary there hung the lifeless body of the world's Saviour, the dead Christ. A dishonoured death, to be followed, one would suppose, by a dishonoured grave, provided by the coarse hands of Roman officials. Humanly speaking, this would be the inevitable sequence. No friends with power to help are left upon the scene; the only one of the selected band of followers who had remained in faithful love by the cross is absent now, having "taken to his own home" the poor, heart-pierced mother whose Son was dead.

As the French proverb has it: "It is always the unexpected that happens," and so in this memorable case. A new actor appears, one hitherto unnamed in Scripture, but of whom we now have a graphic description from each Evangelist. "Rich," "honourable," "a good man," and "just," Joseph of Arimathea had in this congenial soil hid the good seed which, no doubt, at intervals in the three years' ministry, had been dropped into his heart from the lips that spake as never man spake, begetting there an expectant "waiting there for the kingdom of God," and yet advancing so slowly in outward development that his discipleship continued a secret from all, save his own soul and God. The natural unobtrusiveness of character which is so often allied with the truest worth, probably caused Him to keep all these things and ponder them in his heart, until the time of complete conviction came. Meanwhile He had sat in the Sanhedrim, and heard the illogical arguments by which the rulers would justify their rancour against Jesus of Nazareth, and by some unmistakable means had indicated his disapproval of their cruel verdict.

And now the hour of supreme darkness and desertion had come, when it might have seemed as if this wonderful life had been a failure, a great deceit either on Himself or others; and when the poor Galilean women were left to stand afar off in their helpless grief "beholding" their Lord, as they thought, at the mercy of the "wicked hands" by which He had been "crucified and slain." But the "righteous Father," who had not spared his own Son one drop of agony in the cup of trembling until the "uttermost farthing" of the world's ransom was paid, could spare Him now! Henceforth, no indignity, no touch of sacrilegious finger shall be permitted to that Royal Victim. He shall be taken (not a bone broken) from the cross by loving, reverent hands, prepared for his tomb with a wealth of embalming spices greater than has ever been recorded in connection with any earthly monarch; laid in a new sepulchre amid the surrounding loveliness of a garden. His tomb shall be sealed with an imperial signet, and guarded by an imperial guard from Rome, and by an angelic guard from heaven. And this wonderful change in the course of events is set in motion by Joseph of Arimathea going in boldly to Pilate and begging the body of Jesus—the greatest effort this retiring man had ever made in his life; made now in the face of such formidable obstacles, and leading to an expenditure which would make a striking figure in one of our modern subscription lists, but issuing in an act of loving homage to God's Son in the hour of his direst need. It was an act so brave and beautiful that perhaps there has never been anything of earthly deed more unspeakably precious to the King of kings; and never, in all the intervening centuries will Joseph have ceased to give thanks that he did not miss that unique opportunity.

In the limits of a paper necessarily brief, we can but gather up few fragments of teaching; indeed it would perhaps be wisest to confine ourselves to one—that moral excellence, though it may be of an unobtrusive type, is the best preparation for great occasions of service. Joseph was "a good man." The Bible record, which is careful of its adjectives, only bestows this one, I think, on one other in the New Testament, and that a man in many points very similar to this—the rich Joses, of Cyprus, called "Barnabas" by the Church, because, from his loveliness of character, he was so truly "a son of consolation" to many. It was his goodness that made him so—that exquisite courtesy and tact, that looks on the things of others and aspires to the beauty of holiness, surrounding itself with such an atmosphere of benignant unselfishness, that "for a good man some would even dare to die." It was so with Joseph. He must have been habitually benevolent, or he could not suddenly have risen to such lavishness of outlay; habitually self-sacrificing, or he would not have come forward so bravely in the darkest hour of Christ's history. Had Simon Peter known him in earlier days, he would probably have found great fault with his want of zeal, little dreaming that in this "good man," proving himself "just" in every private relation of life, and "honourable" in the faithful discharge of his more public duties, there was developing, first the blade and then the ear, that should wave as a "full corn in the ear" of loyalty to Christ, when poor, self-complacent Peter should be "weeping bitterly" over his desertion of his best Friend in time of need.

Do let us take heed, in these days of multiplied religious meetings, and conventions, and spiritual excitements (all good in their place and within due limits), that we are not led into disregard of "the daily round, the common task," believing that, in the "room to deny ourselves" that they afford, we shall find the truest culture of that spirit of self-sacrifice, which at one time or other in our lives the Lord is sure to require of us. Joseph of Arimathea, by his habitual unselfishness, was in training for the grand impulse that, when the cause of Jesus seemed most desperate, nerved him to stand by Him at all risks, and to offer to Him the only attention possible, but one so priceless and rare that "wherever this Gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that He hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of him."

SALVATION ARMY.—A little pamphlet, issued by Mr. Edmonds, sets forth in brief an outline of two new schemes commenced by the Army in Scotland, for providing a House of help and love for persons in distress or trouble, and a Home for the protection of women and and the rescue of the fallen. This most commendable enterprise, we need scarcely say, has our best wishes for its success. Help is asked in carrying it out. The headquarters of the Army are 5, St. Vincent-place, Glasgow.

LONDON HORSE-KEEPERS' MISSION.—About a year ago Mr. John A. Arnold, of the London City Mission, was appointed to look after the men employed in the numerous mews and cab-yards in the parishes of Bloomsbury and St. Pancras. Mr. Arnold has been going in and out, taking the message of salvation, endeavouring to gather them to special meetings, &c. Several have professed conversion to God. The annual Horsekeepers' Supper was lately held at the Hall, Orde-street. Two hundred and twenty of the men sat down to the well-served repast. At the close a crowded meeting was held, when various earnest Gospel addresses were delivered.

THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.

The Saviour's foes had worked their will;
"Himself He cannot save"
They mocking said, and saw Him die;
Then sealed and watched his grave.
It seemed the Christ of God had failed,
And sin and death and hell prevailed.

The midnight veiled on Calvary's brow
The cross whereon He died,
And wrapped a tomb where soldier guards
Kept watch by Calvary's side;
There buried lay the Son of Man—
'Twas saddest night since time began.

But night is gone—the morning breaks—
Ne'er dawned such glorious day;
God's angel came; the earth did shake;
He rolled the stone away—
And Jesus rose, the battle o'er,
The victory his for evermore!
Hallelujah!

The women, who in grief are come
Their buried Lord to seek,
Return in strangest, gladdest joy,
The wondrous news to speak—
That Jesus lives—their Master slain
Has conquered death and risen again!
Hallelujah!

Declared the Son of God with power,
Loud let his praises ring!
O grave where now thy victory?
O death where now thy sting?
The powers of darkness all are fled
The Christ hath bruised the serpent's head.
Hallelujah!

All glory be to Christ, our Lord;
Now risen from the grave,
He hath the keys of death and hell,
Omnipotent to save.
The Lamb of God for sinners slain,
Immortal King of kings doth reign.
Hallelujah!

A FURTHER CALL TO PRAYER.

My Dear Sir,—I have been remembering the days of old—1859, '60, '61, &c—when there was such a wave of blessing rolling over our land—Christians of one heart and soul calling mightily upon God for power, and the power was given. What times of refreshing were the Fulton-street prayer-meetings, Carrubber's-close Mission! One remembers, too, Aldersgate-street prayer-meeting, Stafford-rooms, besides the private houses that were thrown open, and evangelists and preachers invited to spend one, two, or three days together, as the Lord should guide. What great grace and power were upon them as they witnessed for the Lord Jesus; their faces shone, though they did not know it. And what results followed: souls saved everywhere; evangelists raised up and thrust forth on all hands, many of whom are now with the Lord.

Many organisations were then started and Churches founded, of which not a few are now dead and formal. Is there not a great need felt by the servants of Christ personally, and the Church of God universal? Are there not yet many stones to be gathered from the heaps of rubbish which shall adorn the temple of the living God? It does often appear to me that what is needed in these solemn times is not conferences for teaching, so much as conferences for prayer. Oh, that the Lord would incline some of his servants to move in this matter.—Yours in Christ,

S. Pyall Diprose.

A CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL.—The report for last year of the hospital at Paddington-green records a gratifying continuance of public sympathy and support, and an extension of usefulness. Two additional cots have been founded, the working classes have contributed over £300, a new iron waiting-room has been erected through the liberality of the chairman, and the committee have secured the freehold of a large portion of the entire property. Further accommodation negociated demands an immediate sum of £4000. The hospital is open to visitors daily between 2 and 4.30 p.m., is free to all necessitous patients, is supported entirely by voluntary contributions, and requires no letters of recommendation. Mr. H. Pearce is the secretary.

For the Young.

FOR ENGLISH BOYS AND GIRLS.

My Dear Young Friends,

I suppose you all have received Christmas cards, and I am sure you have received, and perhaps given some of Mrs. Grimké's precious text-cards (gold dust as one of our French friends calls them); but I do not think you have ever seen such a card as was given to Miss Mudie one day towards the end of March. She was travelling from St. Etienne to Valence, when, by a lady getting out at one of the stations, she was left alone with a Religieuse or Sœur, as the nuns are called here. This Religieuse had seen Miss Mudie give a little book to the lady who had left, so she came beside her saying, "Will you allow me to present you with a card?" Miss Mudie took it, and read it attentively. It lies beside me as I write. When I tell you what was on the card, you may guess what she said to the Religieuse. Now for the card.

Directions for Travellers Towards Paradise.

Departure.	Arrival.
At all hours.	When it pleases God.

Trains.

Rapid (first-class only).	Poverty, Chastity, Obedience.
Express (first and second).	Piety, Prayers, Sacrament.
Parliamentary (first, second and third).	* Justice in those who rule; Faithfulness in duties.

Price of Tickets.

First class.—Love and self-denial.
Second class.—Longing and struggling.
Third class.—Fear and penance.

Notice!

1. There are no return tickets.
2. No excursion trains (trains de plaisir).
3. Children under the age of reason pay nothing, provided they are held on the knees of their mother, the Church!
4. Passengers are recommended to bring no luggage except good works, that is to say if they wish to catch the train, and to avoid detention at the last station but one! (l'avant dernière station).
5. Travellers are received from all lines.

Now, dear children, I think you will understand the greater part of the mistakes, or rather the dangerous and misleading errors, on this little card. Have you noticed that the name of Jesus is not even hinted at? What text I wonder would you have shown the Religieuse if you had had your Testament in your pocket? I think you would have shown her the verse where Jesus says, "I am the way!" Would you not? And then for the three classes, would you not have shown her where Paul says, "Unto all and upon all them that believe: for there is no difference: for all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." How glad we are that this is true. I suppose Cowper's poems are old-fashioned now, but I would like to quote these lines from them as commentary on this card:—

> Oh, how unlike the complex works of man
> Heaven's easy, artless, unencumbered plan!
> It stands like the cerulean arch we see,
> Majestic in its own simplicity.

In the card you will see that priests, monks, and nuns, alone go in the "Rapid" to Paradise, it is they who make vows of "poverty, chastity, and obedience." Your fathers and mothers, however noble and holy they are, could never, you see, have a place in the "Rapid." But the Bible tells us that the man who went direct to God, not even a chariot of fire and a whirlwind between, left sons and daughters behind him.

Now for the Notices: (1) It is true there are no return tickets, in one sense; but if you look in Thessalonians you will find that "Them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him." We shall not be prisoners in Paradise, but shall follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth.

(2) True, there are no pleasure trains; but God gives us richly all things to enjoy on our way home to Him. Still, now is the time to watch and pray. "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth."

(3) The little ones are safe, not because they are on the knees of their mother, the Church, but because they are

> Safe in the arms of Jesus,
> Safe on his gentle breast.

(4) Now look at the fourth about the luggage, and rejoice with me that we can sing:

> Nothing in my hands I bring,
> Simply to thy cross I cling!

Paul had plenty of good works, but he put them all aside to put on Christ as his righteousness. But what ever is the last station but one? Purgatory. You see it is a station, the card intimates, by which all must pass; and those who have many sins will stop there the longest. You dear young Protestants know well there is no purgatory. If we die in our sins, we shall remain in our sins, and, as the Lord Jesus Himself says, "shall never come where He is." But "there is no condemnation for those who are in Christ."

> What can wash away my sin?
> Nothing but the blood of Jesus.

I do not know what verses Miss Mudie read to her fellow-traveller, but I know she told her and showed her from God's Word, that it is the blood of Jesus that cleanseth from all sin.

I hope this letter will serve to remind you how needful it is for you to be getting ready for work. Now is the time to study carefully and prayerfully God's Word. You see it is not only the ignorant who have to be taught, it is those who have been taught a mixture of truth and error, who have been taught to call evil good, and good evil; who have been taught that the most precious truths of the Gospel are dangerous and blasphemous heresies; whose consciences have been so trained that they do not know what is sin and what is not. Dear children, we pray that the Holy Spirit Himself may guide you into all truth, so that one day you may be among those who turn many to righteousness.—Your sincere friend,

S. R. Geldard.

LITTLE LUCY.

A little child, six summers old—
So thoughtful and so fair,
There seemed about her pleasant ways
A more than childish air—
Was sitting on a summer eve
Beneath a spreading tree,
Intent upon an ancient book
That lay upon her knee.
She turned each page with careful hand,
And strained her sight to see,
Until the drowsy shadows slept
Upon the grassy lea;
Then closed the book, and upward looked,
And straight began to sing
A simple verse of hopeful love—
This very childish thing:
"While here below, how sweet to know
His wondrous love and story;
And then, through grace, to see his face,
And live with Him in glory."

That little child, one dreary night
Of winter wind and storm,
Was tossing on a weary couch
Her weak and wasted form;
And in her pain, and in its pause,
But clasped her hands in prayer—
(Strange that we had no thoughts of heaven
While hers were only there)—
Until she said: "Oh, mother dear,
How sad you seem to be!
Have you forgotten that He said
'Let children come to Me'?
Dear mother, bring the blessèd Book—
Come mother, let us sing."
And then again with faltering tongue,
She sang that childish thing:
"While here below, how sweet to know
His wondrous love and story;
And then, through grace, to see his face,
And live with Him in glory!"

Now underneath a spreading tree
A narrow mound is seen,
Which first was covered by the snow,
Then blossomed into green;
Here first I heard that childish voice
That sings on earth no more;
In heaven it hath a richer tone,
And sweeter than before;
"For those who know his love below"—
So runs the wondrous story—
"In heaven, through grace, shall see his face,
And dwell with Him in glory!"

THE CHOLERA IN SPAIN.

There are grave fears that cholera may again break out in Spain this year. Some months ago Miss Whately wrote that the Mansion House Fund was not used as the donors or as the Lord Mayor would have wished. The letter was not inserted at the time because it seemed to us that it was too late to rectify what had been done. But, as there are such apprehensions of another outbreak of cholera this year, we think Miss Whately's letter will be more timely now than it would have been in December:—

Dear Sir,—So many of your readers have shown their lively sympathy and interest in the sufferers from the late cholera visitation that it is only right that those who aided in the noble collection for the Mansion House Fund should be apprised of the fact that the fund was disposed of in a way which rendered the good done much less sure and less effective than the donors would have desired. The money was, naturally enough, by those who did not know the circumstances, sent to local committees connected with the central one at Madrid. These committees are all managed by the priests and bishops of the Church of Rome, aided by ladies who work entirely under their directions.

We should, I apprehend, be all agreed that in managing a fund of this kind the whole sum should be devoted to actual relief, and that all distinctions of creed or denomination should be overlooked, and the most needy and distressed be sought out, no matter what their religious belief might be. But the practice of those who work in connection with the Church of Rome is wholly different. In the first place, a considerable portion of the money subscribed for charity is usually devoted by them to the outlay on masses and other Church ceremonials. Some years ago, when a collection for local distress in a Roman Catholic canton of Switzerland was made, and sent by Protestants, the whole, as was attested by those on the spot, was sent to Rome without any deduction. And in later years, the collections made for the sufferers in the floods in Murcia have never reached most of the places for which they had been intended.

In the case under consideration, it is known that, though relief was given to some of those in need, it was only to those who were willing to conform to the Romish Church; and none who declined this had the chance of receiving a single penny. This can be attested by friends and workers on the spot. It was the practice, in disposing of the money, to refuse a ticket of relief unless applicant first came to confession; and how hardly this bears on the Protestant converts, almost all of the very poorest class, and exposed to additional suffering from the neglect of their countrymen, loss of work, and persecution in various forms from neighbours and employers, it is easy to conceive.

Those who wish to relieve such as are really in distress will do well to remember that it is only when their bounty is entrusted to those free from the trammels of Romish teaching that they can have any security, first, that relief will be given fairly to all those who need it, of all creeds, and secondly, that all the money placed in their hands for charitable purposes will be spent as the donors intended it.—Yours,

Cairo, Egypt. E. J. Whately.

We inquired about this in Spain, and found that it is quite true. Funds contributed for the sufferers from the floods in Murcia were only partially given to them, the remainder being appropriated by the priests to pay for masses for the dead, for building convents, and other purposes of their own.

HELP FOR EAST-END WORKERS.—The objects of the Episcopal Jews' Chapel Needlework Society are to supply the poor with needlework when other work is scarce, and to give them the means of buying ready-made clothes at the cost price of the material. The work is given to the poor in such parcels as a shilling will be fair and proper payment for; and the clothing is sold at stated periods to the poor of the neighbourhood; if to ladies for charitable gifts, a small charge is added for making. Subscribers receive a needlework ticket for each shilling subscribed. Help in money or materials will be gladly received.

Anniversaries.

The Strangers' Home for Asiatics.

The annual meeting of this Home took place last Thursday afternoon. The attendance was unusually numerous. Sir James Fergusson, Bart., the late Governor of Bombay, occupied the chair, and expressed his deep interest in the objects of the Institution. The report, read by the Hon. Secretary, Mr. J. H. Fergusson, states that of 680 persons in the Home during the year, 627 had been shipped and otherwise provided for during the year. In the report of the missionary (Rev. G. Small) special reference was made to the conversion and baptism of three Christians, one Burmese youth, and a Japanese young man, who had been the first of his country to obtain a masters' certificate in England, which entitles him to command a vessel in all waters. The missionary has paid many visits to ships carrying Indian and Chinese crews, and also to the Ayahs' Home, three hospitals, and a common lodging house.

Brief addresses were given by various friends in support of the work of the Institution.

Young Men at Exeter Hall.

The Exeter Hall Branch of the Y.M.C.A. had an immense gathering last Thursday evening, on the occasion of its anniversary; the possession of the historic place of meeting no doubt lends it a prestige not attainable by other branches that are more humbly housed.

In assuming the chair, the new President, Mr. George Williams, thanked God for the privilege of co-operating in the work during these many years, and of seeing it extend all over the world. "Our Great Moses," he said, "has been taken away from us; may God raise up hundreds of Joshuas to fill his place." Referring to the lamentable death of the Earl of Shaftesbury last week, he said he was sure that feelings of the deepest sympathy would be felt for the bereaved family. He rejoiced in the catholic and unsectarian character of the institution. "If we find a man proselytising in the Y.M.C.A. we put him out of the synagogue neck and crop." After quoting a few statistics of the progress made during the past seven years, Mr. Williams remarked that he thought the £8000 mortgage on the building was not a credit to them, and he hoped an effort would be made to wipe it off.

The report read by Mr. E. J. Kennedy, secretary, was of the usual order, marking progress in all the departments of the work—spiritual, intellectual, social and physical. He had to record conversions of the careless, the restoration of backsliders, the building up in faith and good works of the Christians. Young men coming to town as strangers are searched out and helped in every possible way. Mr. Kennedy is anxious that any friends in the country who know of young men about to come to London should communicate with him with a view to their being seen and cared for. In order that the work may be liberally sustained, it is desired that at least five thousand friends should agree to become annual subscribers of a guinea each.

BISHOP TEMPLE ON "TRUTH."

The word "truth," said the reverend prelate, is the characteristic word with the Apostle John, who says of the Gospel, that "grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." This word seemed to have a fascination for him, and he always carefully records it when it is used by Christ in his discourses and teachings. The word describes the very essence and fundamental principle of the Christian life. It is well that those who profess to be Christians should consider this; because, though we can count on God's guidance in all the circumstances of life, He designs that we should use our minds and intellects in understanding his will. What is the kind of character shown in the man who "walks in the truth"—such a man as ought to be the ideal of the Y.M.C.A.? First of all, he desires to be as open as the day, having no reservations and no concealments. He will seek to be marked, too, by simplicity of purpose and aim—the desire to please his heavenly Father in all things. That at least is his ideal, though he may not attain to it. He is never ashamed of Christ or of Christ's cause; he goes on in a straight course, never swerving aside because of any loss or ridicule that may follow. In his dealings with his fellows he is strictly trustworthy—no fair words contradicted by unfair dealing. His speech is transparent and modest; no equivocation, or praising of himself, or false representation, in obedience to vanity or fear of consequences. More than all, his aim will be in his thought to be true to himself and his deepest convictions, both as to what he believes and what he does not believe. Such fidelity to conviction will inevitably lead a man into "the truth." The power by which men hold fast, and speak, and do and live the truth comes alone from Christ, who gives us his Spirit of truth, and in every time of difficulty or of trial reveals his love to us afresh, enabling us to be really true to Him who is The Truth.

DR. D. FRASER ON "GROWTH IN GRACE."

Having dilated on the wonderful properties of natural growth, he applied them to the spiritual region. First, there is a germ, which is regeneration—no growth in grace without spiritual life. "Grace," in its true Scriptural sense, is not so much the Christian life in its results, as the Divine atmosphere in which that life moves and develops. He thought there were many "insect" Christians, who get out their wings and their feet—they make some kind of profession—but they grow no more. There is a spiritual infancy in which there are many characteristics that ought not to be lost in later life. But there are some characteristics of infancy that ought to be lost, such as peevishness and that instability that cannot distinguish between the new and the true, but runs after every pretty toy and fashion in religious doctrine and life. In order to growth there must be the assimilation of the food and the force provided, both within and without. The fine air and rich soil would be useless to the tree if it did not appropriate the proper elements in these, and embody them in its life. An observance of the due proportions of truth and spiritual experience is better even than rapid growth. Firmness is good, but, pushed to excess, it becomes obstinacy. Even godly fear may become gloom, and good hope may develop into an over-sanguine confidence. Lowliness of heart, tenderness of conscience, steadfastness of purpose, a proper temper, forbearance, and an all-abounding charity, will, if observed in due proportion, enable a man to grow up unto Christ in all things. The Christian life has its sore trials and temptations, and deep shadows, but we are not to be discouraged. It was by a rough and painful path that the Son of God was taught obedience; and it may fare even so with his followers. He who bears "the banner with the strange device, 'Excelsior,'" is the brave and true Christian young man, ever pressing forward to higher levels; not, indeed, to die amidst the snows, but to enter on a purer air, and a more glorious prospect the nearer he ascends towards God.

RECRUITS FOR CHINA.

An interesting episode, between the second and third speeches, was the presentation by Mr. Williams to each of the five young men going out to China—Messrs. Orr Ewing, Stewart, Gordon, Sayers and Wright—of a Chinese New Testament, inscribed by himself as President of the Y.M.C.A. Then Rev. C. A. Fox prayed with much unction for a blessing to rest on them as they went forth to the great foreign field of China, and to crown their labours there with abundant success. The closing address was by Mr. Orr Ewing, on "The Claims of Christ." These claims, he said, come to us with irresistible power because we are his both by inheritance and by purchase. First of all He claims ourselves; then our confession of Him; then our obedience and the consecration of all our powers to his service. To those who thus respond to his claims Christ gives a joy that is unspeakable and full of glory, so that the true Christian life becomes as the very life of heaven upon the earth. Mr. Ewing closed with a most urgent and affectionate appeal to his fellow young men to yield to the claims of Christ; then perhaps he would have the happiness of welcoming some of them out in far off China as workers for the Master and for those whom He has redeemed.

The sweet singers from the Normal College for the Blind, at Norwood, were present, and charmed all ears and hearts by their beautiful rendering of several classic gems of sacred song.

Indian Female Normal School Society.

The annual meeting of this institution was held in St. George's Hall, Langham-place, on the afternoon of Wednesday, last week. Sir Robert N. Fowler, Bart., presided. An extract from the report of the society was read by Rev. A. H. Lash, giving a favourable account of the work done throughout various parts of India. After the reading of the financial statement, and an opening address from the chairman,

Rev. Flavel Cook, D.D., spoke of the importance of woman's work abroad, and pressed upon his hearers the duty of offering themselves when possible to take an active part in this service. Rev. A. W. Baumann, Church Missionary Society, missionary from India, described the desolate and neglected state of the women of India, and set forth the work of the Society in its three-fold aspect, of affording education to the mind, comfort to the heart, and healing to the body.

Dr. James L. Maxwell gave an interesting account of medical missions abroad, and dwelt specially upon that carried on at Lucknow, by Dr. Alice Marston, one of the Society's missionaries. He spoke also of the openings made for the preaching of the Gospel through the aid of medical missionaries. Alluding to the large expenditure connected with the work, he urged upon his hearers the duty of contributing liberally to the funds of the Society, in order to enable it to carry on its various branches of Christian usefulness.

Midnight Meeting Movement.

The twenty-sixth anniversary, on Friday week, in Exeter Hall, was well attended.

Mr. J. H. L. Christien presented the annual report. So far as London is concerned, an effort is made to bring the whole Metropolis under personal visitation; last year's work in this direction afforded considerable encouragement. Large numbers of the fallen are now to be found in the suburbs, and these have to be visited in addition to the more central districts. A very sad feature in the work is the growing increase of the young amongst this unhappy class, more especially at the West-end, while in other localities the evil has assumed the garb of apparent respectability to a large extent. In a description which Mr. Christien gave of one midnight meeting, it was stated that a group of girls could be seen gathered near the door, the eldest of whom did not exceed eighteen, and some, perhaps, not more than fourteen. The fact served painfully to emphasise what has been said very frequently of late, that the fallen of London at the present time are younger in years than formerly. This fact might well fill the hearts of the labourers with despair, if another fact could not also be stated, that never were reclamatory efforts more numerous or more successful than now.

Admiral Fishbourne, who presided, maintained that the class of persons whom the Society was endeavouring to reach were not more difficult to be dealt with than other evildoers. They are already convicted of sin. They feel that their evil life is a terrible burden and slavery, and would be only too glad to escape from it if their new surroundings were such as they could fall in with. One of the most successful workers I know is a Christian woman who takes these poor fallen ones into her own house and deals with them as if they were her own daughters. That is what we want.

Rev. H. Price Hughes said that the very core of the difficulty, and it should be said to the great shame of the Church, was the toleration of a double standard of morality. We blink at vice in a man, but we immediately boycott a woman who falls. We have been afraid to speak from the pulpit on this matter as we ought to have done. The time has come for us to say that there is no man more in danger of going to hell than the whoremonger, for that is what the Bible says. He expressed a strong hope that with the arrival of Sir Charles Warren there would be a revolution at Scotland-yard.

Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston urged increased earnestness in rescue work, and Rev. Eynon Davies said the Church had too long been like the ostrich, hiding its head in the sand, in reference to this evil. Every minister should be on his tower, he said, and speak out the word of the Lord upon it.

Miss Mason's Houses of Rest.

Upon the invitation of the Hon. Henry and Mrs. Noel, the twentieth anniversary of these institutions was held in their drawing-room in Westbourne-terrace on the 13th inst., when the spacious apartments were well filled with an appreciative audience.

Miss Mason, in giving her annual statement, stated that a total of 626 admissions was registered for the past year. Several sick cases had been admitted, and had been most kindly and skilfully treated by the medical officer, Dr. Macauley. It was the privilege of the House of Rest to help almost every centre of mission work in London, and many in the provinces, by keeping in good working order the deaconesses, Bible-women, missionaries, hospital and other nurses for the sick, workers amongst young women and children, &c., employed in these various missions. The meetings and Bible-readings, the issuing of The House of Rest Monthly, the Home and Foreign Mission Fund, were all important branches of the work. Miss Mason gave an encouraging instance of God's goodness in the reception of a donation of £100 from an entire stranger, within a few days of the close of the financial year, when two or three heavy bills had to be met, and the balance in the bank was very small.

Rev. Henry Sharpe spoke of the immense blessing these houses had proved to hundreds of the Lord's labourers whose slender means rendered it utterly impossible for them to alternate rest with their arduous toil amongst the sick and the poor. Rev. J. Denham Smith said there was an all-roundness about Miss Mason and her work which commended itself very forcibly to all who had any knowledge of what was really being accomplished by these institutions. He hoped the last instalment of £500 due on the Eastbourne house would soon be raised by sympathising friends. Mr. Smith said that the House of Rest reports always contained most interesting and valuable reading, as well as details of the work. He suggested that, when a copy was sent, it should never be laid aside unread. He also highly recommended the little serial, The House of Rest Monthly, a copy of which will be sent upon application to Miss Mason, 8, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, N.W.

An interesting feature in the proceedings was the testimony borne by one or two mission workers present who had been inmates of the Homes. One said that more than once she had been nursed through an illness, and had always received the greatest possible kindness from everyone, not excluding the servants connected with the Home. Another spoke of having returned from a foreign mission field, broken down in health and depressed in spirit, poor and homeless. To understand the immense blessing an open door and a kindly welcome were under such circumstances could, perhaps, be only fully appreciated by those who had passed through similar trials.

MR. JOHN M. SCROGGIE IN BRISTOL.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Scroggie has been greatly honoured of God during the fortnight's mission which closed on 12th inst. It is Mr. Scroggie's third visit to this city under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association. We had three meetings daily, Saturday excepted. During the first week Mr. Scroggie gave an address at the noon meeting for prayer, and a Bible-reading every afternoon. At the evangelistic meetings many friends, by standing, signified their desire to accept the Saviour.

The closing day was a memorable one. About 400 friends, including the workers, and those who had professed faith in Christ, met for tea in the large hall. At the public meeting Mr. Scroggie gave an impressive address to the converts. As a result of the mission Christians of every name have been quickened and a greater thirst given for the salvation of souls, while many anxious ones havs passed out of nature's darkness into the light and liberty of the Sons of God.

Mr. Scroggie is about to commence a mission in Dublin. Thomas Jameson, Secretary Y.M.C.A.

WALSALL Y.M.C.A.—A nine days' mission has been conducted here by Mr. Henry Thorne. The meetings were well attended, and a deeply earnest spirit was manifest each night. The large Temperance Hall was crowded to excess on Saturday, when a service of song was given.

CHILDREN IN FOREIGN LANDS.

A pamphlet has been prepared by Mr. T. B. Bishop giving a brief summary of the work the Lord has permitted our "Children's Special Service Mission" to accomplish during the last nine years among the children of foreign lands. As many of your readers have helped us with funds, and with their prayers, they will now join with us in thanksgiving to our Father in heaven for the privilege of printing already some four millions of illustrated Gospel tracts in thirty-two languages, we hope they will be ready shortly in ten other languages.

I desire specially to emphasise the fact that this is a distinctly Gospel work. Each tract contains the way of salvation, explained in a simple manner, and enforced by suitable anecdotes and illustrations, likely to impress the hearts of children; we have had abundant testimony from missionaries that, although prepared specially for children, they are, in many cases, found most useful for adults. I shall be happy to send a copy of Mr. Bishop's pamphlet, and, if desired, specimens of the tracts in various languages, to anyone writing for them to 48, Paternoster-row, London.

The method that our committee has been led to adopt is, not to print the leaflets until we have the money in hand to pay for them; these having been paid for, we supply missionaries, evangelists, Christian workers, and tourists, with the number they require, free of charge, so that those who would be unable to purchase the tracts may feel quite at liberty to ask for what they could judiciously distribute, and those who are better off can send a donation towards printing a new edition. Much preparation work has had to be done in the past nine years, but now that a solid foundation has been carefully laid, we are anxious to rear a noble structure to the glory of God. But it is evident that the sums hitherto entrusted to us will be totally inadequate to supply the needs of this branch of our Society. Each new language into which the tracts are translated means increased funds, and we earnestly appeal for liberal gifts towards this important work. £100 will print 150,000 of these beautiful Gospel leaflets, and to print that number in forty languages would take £4000. Would it be possible to invest £4000 more wisely and profitably than in sowing Gospel seed in the tender hearts of millions of these children?

In some languages 150,000 would be a very small number indeed, and five or ten times as many ought to be printed. What shall we say of Chinese, Japanese, Burmese, and some of the Indian languages? Could not £1000 be judiciously spent in Chinese tracts alone? Who will send us that sum for the perishing children of China? And will not one of the Lord's wealthy stewards invest a like amount on our own little fellow subjects in India? Many who could not give on so large a scale, might easily spare something towards this important effort. We may truly consider this a new way of spreading the Gospel, because a few years ago, scarcely any children could read, therefore, such tracts would have been almost useless. Now everything is changed, all the world over the children are learning to read, and the question is "What shall they read?" Millions of little ones for whom Christ died are fainting for the bread of life. I trust the Saviour's words will be heard in many hearts, "Give ye them to eat." Josiah Spiers.

A GERMAN EVANGELISTIC RETREAT.—I wish to tell Christian friends, who have shown much kind interest in my Mission House in Branderoda, that I have just opened another, on a larger scale, in this lovely spot, hoping that it may soon become a centre for evangelistic work in this part of Germany. The house, part of which forms a small orphanage, is large enough to permit of a few rooms being adapted to the reception of visitors in search of health and rest, united with the comforts and advantages of a Christian house. The moderate charge for board and lodging—five shillings per day, inclusive—may, I trust, in time help to make the Home self-supporting, and enable me to receive a larger number of orphans than is possible as yet. A. von Weling.

MR. HAMMOND IN CARDIFF.

A splendid work of grace is in progress here through the labours of Rev. E. Payson Hammond. This is the third week of the meetings, and a large array of names have been handed in by the workers, as having received blessing. The meetings have increased in interest and in power from the first. It was a grand sight last Sunday afternoon to see one of our large chapels crowded to excess, mostly with young people, while numbers had to retire for want of accommodation.

The work among the young appears to be very deep and real. On every hand is the inquiry "What must I do to be saved?" and workers are engaged, generally to a late hour, in leading the anxious ones to Christ. Those who are thus blessed very quickly set to work after others, and one of the most gratifying sights in the mission is that a number of young converts, Bible in hand, pointing anxious ones to the way of life. All the converts with whom I have personally conversed are remarkably clear as to their reception of Christ.

Every day fresh cases come to hand of blessing being received. A father sends across to say his two boys are converted, and want to do something for Jesus. A lady brings her only child—a sweet little creature of eight years—and says the little one trusted Christ last night. On questioning the child, she answers as clearly as possible, and gives every evidence of love to Christ. Three schoolboys, "chums," all trust Jesus together in one of the meetings, and each succeeding night are seen busy leading others to Jesus. Some who think they cannot speak to others, wish to know if they can sell hymn-books, or distribute tickets, or act as ushers, or anything else to show their love to Christ.

The work is not confined to children. Mr. Hammond holds three meetings every day—one for workers, one for children, and one for adults, It is a great tax upon him, but he sticks to it right well. A number of adults have professed faith in Christ. One interesting case was that of a foreign seaman who came into a meeting two days after his discharge from an Indian ship. He sat in the meeting weeping bitterly, and when asked by a worker what the tears meant, he answered in broken English, "I do vant to be a Christian, my sins are many, very, and I am afraid the Lord won't pardon me!" He had been reading the well-known, and difficult verse in Hebrews vi., and fancying that such was his case: he despaired of mercy. He was quickly assured of God's willingness to forgive, and kneeling down, he cried out for mercy. Very soon he was enabled to trust Christ, and his face was aglow with a new-found joy.

One night a young man came into the meeting, full of doubts and sceptical thoughts, through reading the wretched rubbish of an American sceptic. After a while he yielded himself to Christ, and has continued to give evidence of genuine conversion.

Miss Gorham, from Tonbridge, who has been conducting some Temperance meetings in Cardiff, was present at one of the noon prayer-meetings, and bore testimony to blessing received through reading Mr. Hammond's book, "The Conversion of Children." She described how she had been a Sunday-school teacher for several years without aiming directly at the conversion of the children belonging to her class. Through reading Mr. Hammond's book, she perceived the mistake of her teaching; she then commenced a weekly service for the children, and has now a class of nearly 200 scholars, many of whom she has reason to believe are really trusting in, and living for Jesus.

We have all been cheered by Mr. Hammond's presence and work, and hundreds will have to thank God for sending him to us. The singing from "Gems of Praise" has been a very attractive feature, and thoroughly enjoyed all round. Our friend leaves us this week, and will take a very needful rest. Our prayers follow him.

BELGIUM.—Pastor Anet, of Brussels, says in a letter that none of the members of the Evangelical Churches have taken any part in the recent strikes and riots at Liège. At a united meeting of pastors and delegates from the provinces of Hainault and Brabant, it was declared that the members in the great centres of population, although greatly tempted by misery and excitement, had conducted themselves as Christians.

Notes and Comments.

Our next week's issue will contain a portrait and biographical sketch of Mr. Joshua Poole, Evangelist, better known to many by the familiar sobriquet of "Fiddler Joss."

The "famine fever" has appeared in several districts in Ireland, and the distress continues to increase. The Irish Secretary's Bill will do much to alleviate the sufferings of the people in the Western Islands and elsewhere, but there is much room for the exercise of private benevolence, and we trust that the charitable will remember the pressing needs of the starving in Achill and Arran. Several piteous appeals have reached us, and we have already inserted others. In addition to what we have urged, we need only add that in Dublin there is a ladies' committee sitting at the Mansion House, and that parcels of old clothing, blankets, &c., will be thankfully received at that address, and made excellent use of amongst the sick and destitute sufferers in Connemara and the islands.

It is encouraging to note that there are signs of a reaction in France against the vile literature which has for so long been a disgrace to the nation. Several influential critics have of late done good service in denouncing alike writers and publishers of the abominable works which have done so much to degrade and destroy both young and old, a literature utterly false to the art to which "for art's sake" it has professed to be devoted, and true only to the lowest motive of money-making, even at the cost of the souls of men. How far France must have fallen is evidenced by the fact that a volume, for publishing which the author a few years ago was subjected to a costly State prosecution, to-day might be taken to be a young girls' book, in comparison with those which are openly sold in the shops. Thank God, however, that some pure-minded men are revolting against the impure stream of naturalism. They are in the minority, it is true, but they have God on their side.

The Countess of Aberdeen, at a meeting of the Girls' Friendly Society in Dublin, a few days ago, gave an address which might, with advantage, be taken to heart by many in much higher grades than those to whom the thoughtful and noble words were spoken. "The grandeur of a life of work" is indeed a theme upon which many an eloquent lay sermon has been preached, but the key-note of the sympathetic advice was a high one, and the only firm foundation for a life of usefulness was quietly insisted upon. We quote a small portion of the address here, in the hope that the practical question may reach a wider circle still, and be as bread cast upon the waters. Her Excellency's closing words were these:—

> Our lives would never be complete—our lives would still be wasted if we did not believe in the great reality of an ever-living and ever-present Christ with us, and that is the reality which I would desire to press upon you. I am sure that many of you feel the wondrous blessing of realising that present Saviour day by day. But there are many of us who are accustomed so much to hearing it that we sometimes forget to grasp it for ourselves. Do we all believe really in the presence of Christ here with us, or do some of us only believe in Him as a Saviour who lived and died for the world 1800 years ago? Or is it to us day by day a wondrous joy, a wondrous strengthening power to feel that He is with us, that He is consecrating and beautifying, and sanctifying our common daily life or daily work?

It is stated that Earl Chichester, the well-known President of the Church Missionary Society, who died on March 16, took great pride in the possession of Oliver Cromwell's small pocket Bible. Lord Chichester was descended from the Protector, and had many mementos of his great ancestor; it is pleasant to remember that in one respect, at least, he resembled Cromwell—in his love of God's Word.

It was a fine saying of Miguel Molinos, the monk whose pure Christian life and fidelity to the Saviour brought him in 1685 within the range of the torments of the Inquisition, that "the greatest temptation is to be without temptation," and the thought and its context give satisfactory evidence that Molinos knew his Bible, for he continues, "wherefore thou oughtest to be glad when it assaults thee, and with resignation, peace and constancy, resist it;" words which may be taken as a commentary upon James i. 12, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation," and James i. 2, 3, "Count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; knowing that the trying of your faith worketh patience." And, after all, to the man who is but rarely conscious of being tempted, may there not be ground for fear that he is being "let alone"? It was a wise remark of one of the old Puritans that Satan takes but little trouble with his own.

There are some terrible contrasts in our modern life. A few weeks ago a man was sent to jail for stealing a portion of the refuse from a soldier's dinner, which refuse a contractor intended for his pigs. All around us people are starving, willing to walk miles in the hope of obtaining a cup of coffee and a bit of dry bread, and others are thankful for a slice from a roadside turnip; yet in certain sections of society there is criminal waste which in its selfish indulgence and utter heartlessness is doing much to bring about a day of thick darkness for England. What a ghastly affectation of life is revealed as we read of a West-end trial in which ladies' dresses at £210 and £170 each figured, and such items as £50 "for painting the train of a court dress" were haggled over. Poor Tom Hood's pathetic "Song of the Shirt" apparently had even a more lurid background than that which the sensitive poet gave to it, and reading of this foolish luxury, brutal in its utter disregard of the sorrows and sufferings of others, the unrelieved poor seem to be arched over in fire by our Divine Master's words, "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these, ye did it not to Me."

A singular illustration of that division in the Church of Rome which has set up the English Tablet and the Irish Freeman's Journal, at the head of rival factions, has been furnished by the action of Dr. Bagshaw, titular Bishop of Nottingham, who, after denouncing the Primrose League, and warning the clergy to refuse to absolve any Catholics who attended meetings of the League, as being "most dangerous for Catholics," has now been required by the Pope to withdraw his prohibition. The secret of this wonderful change of front in the representative of an infallible Church may be found in the fact that Cardinal Manning, who represents the educated and loyal Roman Catholics, complained to the Pope that Dr. Bagshaw virtually was "committing Roman Catholics in England to the suspicion of disloyalty to the Crown and constitution," and that Leo X., however much he may be disposed to bolster up disloyalty in Ireland, cannot yet see his way to provoke a storm of hostile political and religious feeling in England. The time seems coming very rapidly when the Saviour's words, "a house that is divided against itself," will be peculiarly applicable to the Church of Rome.

A correspondent wishes to impress on young people the wrong done by robbing birds' nests at this season of the year. He expresses the opinion that this cruel practice is on the increase, but we sincerely hope he is mistaken.

A good brother once found fault with another for stroking the cat the smooth way of the fur. The latter asked if he did not think the Creator intended the creature to be stroked that way. It would be well if brethren in dealing with each other imitated that second brother, and so produced that sense of enjoyment which the feline race express by purring; instead of raising fur and feeling, and eliciting a dangerous amount of electricity, by, figuratively speaking, stroking the cat the wrong way.

A missionary from China said, at the Aldersgate-street meeting, last Wednesday, that they had to be careful not to let our illustrated papers fall into the hands of the Chinese. One of their converts saw a picture in The Graphic representing some fashionable function, in which several ladies were represented in "full dress." The innocent Chinee explained to a companion that no doubt this was a dispensary, and the diseased ladies had removed their upper garments in order to facilitate the doctor's examination! Comment would be impertinent, beyond the hope that no Christian lady will disregard the admonitions in 1 Tim. ii. 9, 10, and 1 Pet. iii. 3, 4.

An article in the current British Quarterly possesses considerable interest just now. In 1786 Carey wrote on "the obligations of Christians to use means for the conversion of the heathen." Dr. George Smith has set forth in this article the results of foreign missions in the century that has since elapsed. The number of professed Christians has increased by 266 millions, and 101 organisations have been originated to carry out Carey's idea. These organisations are connected with churches who give more than £2,000,000 sterling to their objects. The painful reflection, however, is made that the members of these churches do not give a shilling a year on the average for the world's conversion, or only a tenth of what Carey suggested.

The cruelty of the Roman gladiatorial games was an offence to Christians, and a protest at the cost of his life on the part of a Christian from the East brought them to an end. A recent trial in the County Court of Birmingham reveals a state of things in leading theatres which humane persons might usefully consider. In a scene of fairies descending from the clouds, a dancing girl was strapped, then suspended by ropes from a batten, and let down by means of a pulley and windlass. The dancer, whose position was the most perilous, was frightened, but was told she must do it or give up her weekly wage and go. To a second remonstrance the manager was inexorable. Soon after what she feared came: the mechanism gave way and she was precipitated, with serious injuries, forty or fifty feet. This disclosure of cruelty and terrorism "behind the scenes" ought to teach lessons.

Treasurer, Ald. Sir R. N. Fowler, Bart., M.P.
J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J. P., Hon. Secretary.

For 100 years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of nearly 270 Christian men and women.

Funds are urgently needed.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

MARSEILLES.—Strangers' Rests and Mission to Seamen, under the management of Mr. C. E. Faithfull, aided by a local Committee. Each day proves the necessity for such establishments in a city visited annually by 140,000 seamen, besides a large number of passing foreigners. The last few months have been more encouraging than ever since the work was commenced in 1879. Mr. Faithfull, who has the sole pecuniary responsibility, will be very thankful for aid towards £100, required immediately, to meet rentals and Manager's salary. N.B.—Current expenses are almost covered by the receipts from the Rest for board and lodging.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon writes: "I believe you are doing a good work, and ought to be supported."

Help may be sent to care of Editor of The Christian; or direct to Mr. Faithfull, Le Repos, 71, Rue de la Darse, Marseilles.

The Way of Peace Illustrated,
by Fact and not Fiction; Through the Experience of Those who have Found it. A Word for the Anxious.
By Rev. W. POOLE BALFERN, Brighton.
Cloth, 6d.

"The kind of book to give to our ungodly friends, if we wish to put before them a pure gospel message, so stated that they will be attracted to read it."
Mr. Spurgeon in Sword and Trowel.

"This is just the little book needed. The illustrations are so short and interesting that even the most careless will read them with interest, and the most dull can scarcely fail to understand the Way of Peace."—The Freeman.

"Very few books of the size contain wiser or more winning words."—Evangelical Magazine.

"All who have an interest to instruct inquirers as to the way of Salvation will find this little book just what is wanted. The incidents are so interesting that they will be read with interest by all."—Baptist Messenger.

"It is calculated to calm the troubled mind, and stimulate the anxious to follow in the path of those instanced; and is therefore admirable for putting into the hands of such."

3s. 6d. per 100; or 500 for 17s. 6d.

"A clever little story, showing how for one week, instead of meeting together for prayer for certain objects each evening, the members of a church had a week of PRACTICE. At the expiration of this time they met, and the lot fell upon one, a deacon, to give his experience. It was not the best of records, as he said himself; but it was very instructive withal. The little book should be widely read, and will be found interesting and profitable."—Nonconformist and Independent.

"The children of to-day are the Society, the Church, and the Nation of to-morrow. . . . The boy with his whip, and the girl with her doll, will before long rule—real factors in Church and State; and train real lives for the weal or woe of the nation. See the coming mother in that little old-fashioned darling, rocking her doll to sleep, and humming the lullaby tunes which so recently sounded in her own ears! See the voter, the orator, the merchant, the banker, the editor, the senator, in the stout youngster with bootlegs outside his trousers, and uncombed head crowned with torn and twisted cap. Music and oratory, enterprise and money, railroad schemes and political devices, power—social, religious, commercial, and educational, lie all unfashioned and undirected in the little brains and muscles and hearts of the children around you."

SPECIAL CHEAP EDITION.

Unabridged.

With Portrait. In Tinted covers, 1s.
Neatly done up in Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.

"It is the record of a life as strange and eventful as it is impressive and instructive. A more perfect knowledge of such a life cannot fail to strengthen the faith of some and to inspire the zeal of others. The book, apart from its value as a beacon to warn and a light to guide, is studded with passages of beauty—word-pictures, which are not easily forgotten."

Temperance Record.

"It is the most touching, thrilling narrative we ever read. Talk of the sensational in tales, novels, and romances—none of them is so stirring, or is filled with incidents of such extraordinary interest, as this life story.—Bolton Guardian.

Orations by John B. Gough.

BEST EDITION.

Large Crown 8vo. 160 closely printed pages. Consisting of Eleven different Orations delivered in London and the Provinces on the occasion of his last visit to this country. With Portrait. Handsomely bound in Cloth Extra, 2s. 6d.

SPECIAL CHEAP EDITION.

Unabridged.

With Portrait. Crown 8vo., Tinted Covers, 1s.
Neatly bound in Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.

"To those who have not had the good fortune to hear Mr. Gough, these printed Orations will convey some idea of the wonderful dramatic force and eloquence which held audiences of many thousands spellbound."

Good Templar.

"They deal with the subject of Temperance in its varied aspects, and bring many startling facts and illustrations to add weight to the statements concerning the terrible dangers of moderate drinking."

NEW WORK BY

PHILIP HENRY GOSSE, F.R.S.

Crown 8vo., 3s. 6d.

The Mysteries of God.

A Series of Expositions of Holy Scripture.

CONTENTS.

THE ETERNAL PURPOSE OF GOD.—REDEMPTION.—GOD'S BECOMINGNESS.—BAPTISM: JOHN, JESUS, BELIEVERS.—THE RESURRECTION OF THE BODY.—THE UNCLOTHED.—RESURRECTION LIFE.—REWARD ACCORDING TO WORKS.—DAVID'S MIGHTY MEN.—CROWNS.—THE RAPTURE OF THE SAINTS.—CHRIST IN THE PSALMS.—PRIESTHOOD: AARON, MELCHIZEDEK, JESUS.—SCIENCE VERSUS REVELATION.—CREATION.—DEATH.—THINGS COMING ON THE EARTH.—THE NEW JERUSALEM.—THE NEW EARTH.—THE COLONIZATION OF WORLDS.

Opinions of the Press.

"Mr. P. H. Gosse, F.R.S., has long had a notable place among devout students of Scripture, and he still brings forth fruit in old age. A new volume from his pen is before us, entitled 'The Mysteries of God;' and it is a book to be read and pondered."

British Messenger.

"The subjects treated on are of deepest moment, and by no means those which lie on the surface. Redemption is set forth in its past, present, and future aspects, time and eternity both being regarded in the light of the revealed purposes of God. Such books are rare. Mr. Gosse has added another such to the Christian literature of our times, and his work is to be cordially commended, as it must be heartily welcomed by all thoughtful readers who 'delight in the law of the Lord.'"—The Christian.

"We unhesitatingly pronounce this volume to be in every way an able production, simple in plan, but displaying great powers of thought, and full of varied and important information."—The Presbyterian.

"He is intensely evangelical, and makes it his first aim to know the mind of the Spirit. His exposition of the significance of Baptism contains much helpful and precious truth. The chapters on Crowns, and on Science and Revelation, are also fruitful in suggestions."—Baptist Magazine.

"A series of devout studies on the deep things of the kingdom. Mr. Gosse . . . is a very independent as well as very close student of Scripture; and in this volume we have some of the ripe fruits of his life-long study."—The Baptist.

"I have read and re-read; some portions many times over; each time something fresh is seen, and made a blessing to mind and soul alike. . . . Every chapter is of priceless worth; . . . those on 'Christ in the Psalms' have strengthened and confirmed what I previously believed. . . . No words can adequately convey my obligations and gratitude for Chapters xii. and xiii., 'Crowns' and 'The Rapture of the Saints.' They have been made the greatest of blessings to me."

From a Baptist Minister in Cornwall.

"'The Mysteries of God' has furnished us with precious teaching, and subject for much prayerful thought."

"I take much to the book . . . there is something in the spirit of it that I find refreshing. There are two points on which I specially like him: 1. 'Christ as the Head of his people; . . .' I don't know that I have elsewhere found the doctrine so fully stated;—certainly not so originally illustrated. 2. 'Christ in the Psalms.' Mr. Gosse has given me on this head a good deal of new light, and of food for reflection. I very thoroughly agree with him here."

[These two Extracts are from Letters of Ministers of great age and eminence in Edinburgh.]

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.—In consequence of Easter Holidays, advertisements intended for the next issue (April 29) should arrive not later than the First Post Thursday Morning, April 22.

The Atonement that Christendom specially commemorates to-morrow is more than at-one-ment, according to a modern school. The world-reconciling sacrifice atones because it is vicarious—a propitiation. The death of that awful Friday was at once the real bearing of the wages, penalty, and curse of sin, and the absolute surrender of heart and life to the will of God. We must not forget the latter truth. Our blessed Lord was not only the Surety discharging our debt, but our atoning High Priest who resigned for that sacrificial cross the throne of God, and gives to those of us who believe both the freedom of his perfect expiation, and the merit of his absolute obedience to the righteousness of God.

A most important inquiry has been going on in Bradford. The chairman of the district School Board, having solicited communications on "Attendance at Public Worship," has received a large number of able replies. Upwards of fifty of them are printed in The Nonconformist. There is a remarkable agreement on these points: that indifference, not scepticism, is the great evil; that it is not denominationalism in itself which is the hindrance, but the want of a truly Christian spirit; that the pew system is contrary to the mind of Christ; that there would be an untold advantage in an evangelistic activity of laymen; that in Christian churches a wide gulf separates the rich and poor; and a general impression from the lives of professors that Christianity is not worth attending to.

The working-men have set forth their opinions on the above subject. Their replies go in the direction of the foregoing. An influential conference on the matter has been held in the Bradford Rooms of the Chamber of Commerce. It was attended by Conformists and Nonconformists, and issued in a proposed meeting with working-men for further counsel. Our readers will realise that such a movement taken up mainly by laymen, who will be unfettered, is likely to become important, and if fairly developed may bring reforming changes of great value.

The possibilities of popery in Protestantism develop themselves wherever our own consciences are made the measure of others', and we endeavour to bind them down, or even, as we may suppose, to lift them up, to our own measure. We act in the true spirit of Popery if we try to compel others to subject their judgment to ours, or to act according to our wishes without full and unbiassed conviction on their part. In illustration: An intelligent and conscientious young Christian had been convinced that she would be obeying Christ by being baptized as a believer. But she had no desire to leave the ministry under which her soul was being fed, the church whose fellowship she enjoyed, and her sphere of usefulness connected with it. She consulted her Pastor, who did all he could to dissuade her, without at all convincing her that she was wrong. She asked a Baptist minister if he would baptize her, but he would only do so on condition of her joining the church under his pastorship. Both those good men acted popishly. This case is not quoted as of frequent occurrence, but as, we trust, the very rare exception. The liberty of conscience for which our fathers and mothers, our brothers and sisters, of old time bled and burned, is too precious to be flung away by those who still profess to protest against the domination of Rome, and declare that "the Bible, and the Bible alone, is the religion of Protestants."

"Let everyone be fully persuaded in his own mind." Whoever, having reached the age of responsibility, says, "My father believed so and so, and he was one of the excellent of the earth, and I will believe as he believed," dishonours Christ, and helps to re-establish Popery. For Jesus said, "Whosoever loveth father or mother more than Me, is not worthy of Me." And if we refuse to allow our minds to be fully persuaded by the Holy Ghost, because of natural affection, or even because of the reverence due to our parents, we abjure the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free.

It is the will of God that we should be partakers of the Holy Ghost, and know the powers of the age to come, and not be fettered by even the dearest and most honourable ties of earth. Many years ago we met with this cry for deliverance:—

> Earth's love clingeth to me!
> Blessed angels, ye who share
> Heaven's love, pure and strong, oh tear
> These close earthly bands asunder,
> Lest their clasp undo me!

The same longing is more evangelically and scripturally expressed in a verse which, in illuminated letters, graces many a chamber wall:—

> Lord Jesus, make Thyself to me
> A living, bright reality;
> More present to faith's vision keen
> Than e'en the nearest object seen;
> More dear, more intimately nigh,
> Than e'en the closest earthly tie.

They are beautiful words, wonderful words; but, like all words of life, they are "a two-edged sword, piercing to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and discerning the thoughts and intents of the heart." But they bring us into contact with our sympathising and compassionate High Priest, and to the throne where we obtain grace to help in time of need.

THE BEE-HIVE "SWARMING."

We unite in heartiest gratitude to all the many fellow-workers, young and old, who have shared with us the intense joy of fitting our band of dear boys, now started for Canada. It has been delightsome work, and we feel assured it has given the heart of our blessed Master joy. His presence and help have been fully realised, and we have had to rejoice in strong wills broken, and in the sweetness of obedient lives. Some write from Moville, "We hope to show our gratitude by our lives in Canada."

We are preparing to sail by s s. Sardinian, May 20, with one hundred orphan and destitute girls. Mrs. Merry, writing from Canada, says she has Homes for every child, and asks for a continuance of your prayers. A. Macpherson.

Home of Industry.

RATCLIFF WELCOME HOME.—At a recent meeting in the West-end of London, some very interesting details were given of the work at Miss Child's Sailors' Welcome Home, Ratcliff-highway, E. Messrs. Maynard, Douglas, Paton, and others, highly commended the Mission to the sympathy of Christians.

BIBLE READING ASSOCIATION.—A public meeting of this international Association to celebrate the enrolment of 100,000 members, was held in the Lecture Hall, 56, Old Bailey, on Monday evening, April 12. Mr. George Williams presided. Mr. Waters, secretary of the Association, said that many had been led to form habits of reading the Word of God. Up to the present time, 90,000 cards of membership have been issued in home branches and 14,000 in the Colonies, the total being 104,000. There are now 1250 branches in the United Kingdom. The Chairman said a hundred thousand was a splendid advance in four years, but a million at least would be the outcome of the institution. He believed it would become as a fruitful tree, bearing fruit to the praise and glory of God. Mr. E. Towers said there was a prospect of getting this Bible-reading Association into China. Rev. D. Brodie, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in the course of an address, gave some statistics of the work in which the society is engaged, and submitted interesting details of the progress made in countries which were comparatively uncivilised.

DEACONESSES FOR MANCHESTER.

The great success which under God's blessing is attending the Manchester City Mission is a direct token of the Divine favour and approval. A great impetus has recently been given to the work, spiritually and financially, and a most hopeful tone for the future is the pervading spirit of the missionaries. There are eighty-three devoted earnest men and women in actual service in Manchester and Salford, employed in house-to-house visitation, ragged schools, evangelistic and rescue work. The result has been that numbers of men and women in the dark courts and alleys of the back streets have been awakened from a life of spiritual indifference, and pointed to the cross of Christ.

The successful evangelistic services, the vigorous rescue work, special missions to wakes, fairs, and races, and constant daily visitations, is now taxing the bodily vitality of the mission. To obviate this it is purposed to find and obtain the voluntary services of some ladies, in whose hearts the Lord has created a willingness to enlist in direct service for Him. Perhaps they cannot go abroad, but, if only the way was plain, they could engage in the daily visitations of our lost sisters; they could carry the Gospel message to some poor wanderer in his wretched home; they could visit and cheer the sick and suffering, conduct mothers' meetings, teach and help in schools for mill girls, or engage in some other of the many branches which was opening. Many ladies are willing to thus devote their time, talents, and influence to the Master's service; but in their present homes, and under surrounding circumstances, there are inseparable difficulties. It is to meet the needs of such, and also to meet the felt need of the great mission field of this large busy manufacturing town of Manchester, that the City Mission purposes to at once establish a Home for Deaconesses in the centre of Manchester, where those who are longing to add the stimulus of Christian work to the secrets of Christian living, may join a hive of busy toilers, and where all the arrangements will be such as shall aid in the daily return to work, refreshed and strengthened bodily and spiritually.

Lady workers, or young ladies willing to train for mission work, and who would like to join the Manchester City Mission Deaconesses, can have further information from Mrs. Grimké, Hilton-park, Prestwich, Manchester; or Miss Layland Needham, Deaconess-in-charge, 100, Corporation-street, Manchester.

MR. AITKEN AT LEAMINGTON.

A mission has just been held here by Rev. W. Hay Aitken, in St. Mary's Church, the church of the revered Dr. Marsh, and of which his nephew, Rev. Dr. Morgan, is now the vicar. All the services were well attended. There were generally four or five services each day. At 11.30 Mr. Aitken gave most helpful addresses to Christians, and in the evening preached his striking and powerful mission sermons. On the last Sunday the church which seats 1500 was packed, and on the thanksgiving day over 300 partook of the Lord's Supper. Numbers have received blessing, and are praising God.

Services for children were held by Mr. Stephens and Mr. Isaacs, of Ridley Hall, Cambridge; and Mrs. Crouch gave daily addresses to women in St. Mary's parochial room. Each Sunday afternoon Mr. Aitken addressed large congregations of men. The power of the Spirit was wonderful on the hearts of the people, and the whole neighbourhood has been stirred.

MILWALL.—At a recent social meeting, Mr. William Massey received a hearty welcome as the Working Superintendent of the Milwall Juvenile and Adult Mission, Tobago-street. A steady increase in the number of those attending the services was reported. As there is much destitution in the district, old clothing and any other help will be thankfully received by Mr. H. White, Hon. Secretary, Pier Head, Milwall Docks.

REUS MISSION FUND.—The current "Occasional Paper" tells of the progress of the mission work at Reus, under the care of Pastor Antonio Martinez, who visited England last year, and to whose capacity for the position testimony is borne. There are now thirty-six communicants who have broken with the Church of Rome. The pastor visits the port of Tarragona weekly. Colporteurs continue to labour in several villages round. At Villafrance another worker is employed by the Edinburgh Spanish Evangelisation Society, and has been much blest among those who suffered from the recent earthquakes. Miss Nugent, 29, Eaton-terrace, Eaton-square, S.W., will receive any communications of friends.

EVANGELISATION of the WORLD.

CONFERENCE IN THE CITY,

TUESDAY AND WEDNESDAY, APRIL 13 & 14.

The familiar lecture hall of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. looked on Tuesday morning, last week, as if it had been turned into a geographical class-room. On the wide stretch of the wall behind the platform there were arranged maps of the whole world, and others on a more extended scale representing India, China, Asia, Africa, &c.; while on the side walls were still other maps of various parts of the great harvest field of the world. A geography class! Truly, so it was. A company of Christian workers (not very large, but all with the stamp of earnestness deeply impressed on their faces) had assembled that morning from many parts of the great city, and, indeed, from different parts of the world, to study these maps and to consider what could be done for the enlightenment of the yet unevangelised parts of the great round globe that we inhabit, and which has been the theatre of such a wondrous manifestation of the love of God to its sin-stricken sons and daughters.

This being the first of a series of conferences in London on the same surpassing topic, it was, perhaps, not amiss that the proceedings were largely devoted to giving and hearing information from experienced workers, of what God has done in the past. Deeply interesting and encouraging as these accounts were, one could not but be impressed with the smallness of the general results as compared with the work still to be done. At the succeeding conferences we doubt not the programmes will be so framed that the vast and overwhelming spiritual destitution of the larger area of the globe will be made to stand out in bold relief. Only in that way, we suppose, can the Christian Church be made to realise its responsibility, and be induced to move forward as a whole, and take possession of those "regions beyond" in the name of the Lord of Hosts; unless, indeed, God should send a rude blast of persecution upon professing Christian lands, and scatter the disciples, as in the early days of the faith, when they went everywhere, men and women, witnessing for Christ, and seeing signs following.

"TO THE JEW FIRST."

Mr. George Williams, who presided on Tuesday morning, referred to the wondrous fact that the rejection of the Messiah by the Jews had been as life from the dead to the Gentiles. As we Gentiles have thus been admitted into the family of God, with what compassion and tender solicitude ought we to look on the Jews, scattered abroad as they are in all lands, and yet kept distinct; showing to all intelligences the truth of the revealed scriptures, which predicted the events that have come to pass. He prayed that these conferences might result in real benefit both to Jew and Gentile all the world over. It has ever been the aim of the Y.M.C.A. to get young men saved that they might be the means of saving others. Not a few have already gone out from it to the heathen world, but he looked for a large increase of the number of those who will go forth and tell the story of the Cross to earth's remotest bounds.

A CHANGE COMING OVER THE JEWS.

Rev. James A. Bell, Secretary of the London Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, said he was thankful to God that the great subject of Jewish missions had been placed in the forefront of this convention. This was the Divine order—"beginning at Jerusalem." The Archbishop of Canterbury said at a Bible Society meeting last May, that Jewish and Mohammedan missions were the two great Christian problems of the day. What are we doing to carry out God's will with respect to the Jew? No one will say that the Church of God has yet risen to the height of her duty in the matter, though there are some twenty societies now devoted to missions among the sons of Abraham. The Jews are at this moment in a remarkable transition state. In a recent issue of The Jewish Chronicle, a leading Jew in London scoffs at miracles and the Abrahamic history. The question, he says, is whether Judaism will throw off these ancient superstitions, and rise to the highest type of life, or whether it will retain its faith in miracles and sink lower than ever. Another letter, however, in the same paper, refers to the growing weariness of many Jews with the tedium and formalism of their religious ceremonies. The bonds that have hitherto kept them together as a people seem to be breaking up. Here is an opportunity for pressing upon them the claims of the Messiah. The Bible is now being largely circulated and read among Jews—even the New Testament, which is as common in many a Jewish household as among Gentile Christians. One Jewish lady, in a provincial town, who was found reading the Gospel of John, exclaimed: "Oh, it is beautiful; I wish I could believe it!" Many cases could be told in which Judaism is losing its power, and the Gospel is influencing the people. Formerly, at the mention of the name of Jesus, a Jew would spit on the ground to show his utter contempt. Now, everywhere, they begin to claim Jesus for themselves, and to say that we Gentiles have no right to Him at all. The Professor of Semitic Literature at Cambridge, in a discourse recently, said that every enlightened and pious Jew must see and believe that of a truth Jesus is indeed a Saviour to the Gentiles who accepted Him, though He might not be a Saviour to those who did not believe in Him. A German Professor at Bonn has lately spoken in the most glowing terms of the character of Jesus Christ. A learned American Jew, Dr. Isaac Wise, in a recent lecture on Jesus of Nazareth, asserted that the true founder of Christianity was Paul of Tarsus, and that Jesus Christ was a Jew who observed all the Jewish rites and customs. He admitted at the same time that all the improvements and ameliorations found in modern life are to be traced to the character and teachings of Jesus. It is evident, therefore, that a remarkable change in the thought of the Jew about Christ is taking place all over the world. When they are thus turning to the Lord, surely the veil will be taken away, so that they shall soon, as a people, recognise his Divinity and his true Messiahship. They are saying Ecce Homo! May they not soon be led to say Ecce Deus! "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

JEWS IN LONDON AND THE CONTINENT.

Rev. Isaac Levinsohn (of Wilna, Russia) said it had been deemed a very difficult thing to convert a Jew; was it not very hard to convert a Gentile? But nothing is too hard for the Lord, and we must have a stronger faith in Him. There are many prejudices in Jewish minds against Christianity. In Russia there are between four and five millions of Jews. There is in that country a Christian, or "Orthodox" Church, and Jews point to it with indignation when we talk to them about Christianity as being the pure faith. It would be hard for us workers among them if we could not point to something better. Much of the prejudice in the mind of the Jew arises from the inconsistency of professed Christians; Jews say their own religion is better. In this country, however, they see more sincerity and consistency, and they are drawn to the Christ whom Christians seek to imitate. They point to past and present persecutions of Jews by Christians so-called, and that often repels them from the acceptance of the Gospel. God is doing marvellous things in Great Britain in drawing Jews to Himself, through the persevering earnestness of the missionaries and the kindness of true Christians. The modern thought, or rather modern doubt, of many professed Christian teachers, is another great stumbling-block to them. Yet there are at least 100,000 converted Jews in different parts of the world to-day. After all, the Church of Christ has done comparatively little for the conversion of the Jew, though the results have been as encouraging in proportion as those that follow effort among the Gentiles. In the large city of Wilna, in Russia, where there are thousands of Jews, many young men among them are forming secret societies simply for the purpose of reading and studying the New Testament.

THE MOHAMEDAN WORLD.

The second hour of Tuesday morning was devoted to this vast topic. Mr. R. N. Cust said there are probably 175,000,000 Mohamedans, of whom 50,000,000 are subjects of the Queen. He could not dare, in one breath, to say that all these millions are lost souls. The political power of Mohamedanism may be decaying, but the propagandist power of the faith is by no means on the decline. Its grand and simple conception of the one God cannot be denied, and it is a vast advance on heathenism in its civilisation and in its religious conception of the Godhead. The existence and spread of this faith was due to some extent to the degradation of the Christianity of the seventh century. The difficulty of meeting the system is an increasing one. In addition to its monotheism, its inculcation of total abstinence makes it a tower of strength in the case of many; it also fosters prayer. Far above the din of the city in many of the great centres of the population in the East, the call to prayer goes forth day by day. Its encouragement of education, too, is another element of power.

The Koran, having so much of truth in it, becomes the most dangerous form of error; he should not be surprised if the time came when Mohamedans would be sending out missionaries to convert pagans, and even Christians; for they deem the Roman Catholic faith to be the greatest idolatry. The disciples of the false prophet conform to the laws laid down in the Koran; they give alms; many abstain from vice; and polygamy is dying out. One section of them, called the Protestants of Mohamedans, are seeking to restore the faith to its original purity. Even in the hour of death they do not seem to experience the feebleness of their faith. Their belief in fate or destiny is so strong that they submit calmly, and without a murmur, to any kind of death. Whole islands of heathen may be converted, when scarcely a single Mohamedan can be gathered in. Still our duty is clear, to go and give to them the Gospel, in obedience to the command of our Divine Lord.

Major-General Haig said he did not believe that even modern Mohamedanism supported a man either in life or in death. No doubt many of them die peacefully, but many wicked men everywhere "have no bands in their death;" while we have on record the agony in which some of the greatest saints go down to the grave. Granting that a satisfaction may be found in this religion of forms and ceremonies, it arises from the fact that Mohamed entirely perverted the idea of sin. Mohamedanism is a masterpiece of Satan. It contains as much of truth as adapts it to the fallen nature of man. How to meet it is a vast problem. At the same time, we too often think with discouragement of the question of the conversion of Mohamedans. Major Haig read an extract from the report of a missionary conference in Calcutta, in which a missionary spoke of the fruitful results of Gospel effort among Mohamedans in the province of Bengal. In proportion, the results were five to one as compared with Hindoos. Whatever the difficulties and however great the Satanic skill of the system in enslaving the human heart, there is every encouragement in the assurance that with God all things are possible. It was stated that several Mohamedans had been soundly converted in Madras through the meetings of the Salvation Army. In the sacred city of Mecca, the very centre of the system, a learned man found a copy of a controversial work, prohibited in the empire. He was greatly awakened. He gave up his post as a professor in Mecca and went to Kurrachee, where he inquired the way of life through Christ. Despite our unbelief and neglect, God is in his own way preparing for the evangelisation of the Mohamedan world.

Rev. Dr. Wright, Editorial Secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, referred to the striking fact that every Mohamedan boy learns the Koran by heart, believing that it is a message from God. How to overcome such a system is no doubt a terrible problem ; but it is not greater than the Greek and Roman problems that faced the Apostle Paul. He met these proud and hostile peoples alone with his Gospel message, and he found it to be indeed the power of God unto salvation. Let us not undervalue education, and let us employ all the gifts of human genius ; but they are in vain without the power of God. Dr. Wright spoke of some interesting personal experiences gained while living among Mohamedans in Syria, not a few of whom were true believers in Jesus Christ. While the present Turkish power rules, it was cruelty, he thought, to ask a Mohamedan to openly profess Christ. But human hearts are all alike, and all can be reached through the Gospel. A scathing description of the outrages that accompanied and followed the Crusades was given by the speaker, as showing that the weapons of our warfare in dealing with these false systems of faith must not be carnal but spiritual. The fine translation of the Scriptures by Van Dyke is now being scattered through Mohamedan lands, and will exercise a great influence in removing erroneous views of the revelation of God. Mohamedans are pure ritualists; the name of God is perpetually on their lips, but it is a cruel God, and one who will palliate evil, and not a God of justice and love. Let us pray earnestly for the success of all who are labouring in the Gospel among Mohamedans.

After some brief remarks by Sir John Kennaway, M.P., the first session of the Conference was closed.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

AFRICA.

Mr. M. H. Hodder was in the chair at this session, when "Africa, Madagascar, &c.," were set down for consideration.

Mr. Eugene Stock, of the Church Missionary Society, said he would confine his remarks as to the work of the Society in Uganda. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone ; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit," have been the secret of African missions from the beginning. Mr. Stock traced the rise of missions in the dark Continent from the courageous efforts of the German missionary, Dr. Krapf, some forty years ago, down to the death of Livingstone in 1873, which he said was the starting-point of all the subsequent missions that have sprung up. In 1876 the first party of the Church Missionary Society left the coast for the great Lake Nyanza, bordering on the territory of Uganda. The first missionaries died, but others stepped into their places. Among these was Mr. Hannington, who became, as our readers know, Bishop Hannington. His last journey from the coast was undertaken to open up a new and more direct route, with the melancholy result, as the world has learned, that the brave pioneer met his death, by orders of the King of Uganda, owing, it is believed, to some rumours that the Germans were to annex the country. The latest news, said Mr. Stock, only to hand the day before, was to the effect that after some days' confinement and ill-treatment the Bishop was shot with his own rifle. The last message that had just come from him was one sent to the king, to the effect that the new road to the centre of Africa had been purchased by his life, and that he died for the people of Uganda. Mr. Stock produced a pamphlet containing the first seven chapters of the Gospel by Matthew just printed in the Uganda tongue. An interesting relic, shown by Mr. Stock, of the sad event of the Bishop's death, was a blue flag made by Mr. Jones, the Bishop's companion, with the word "Ichabod" on it in white, and brought back to the coast. In connection with the tragical end of Bishop Hannington, we may here mention that a most interesting sketch of his life and missionary labours, with portrait and map, has just been issued by the Church Missionary Society, 16, Salisbury-square, E.C., price sixpence.

TRIUMPHS IN FIJI.

Rev. Jas. Calvert read a paper, telling of the wonderful triumphs produced in Fiji by the Gospel during the last half century. When he went there forty years ago he found the islanders in a state of darkest heathenism. He described in detail the progress made. Now there are over 1000 chapels in the islands, with an ample supply of teachers and preachers, besides Church members and adherents. Much of the work has been done by the native churches. Last year was the year of jubilee in Fiji. Fifty years ago there was not a professed Christian in the group ; now there is not a solitary "heathen." This, said the venerable missionary, is a specimen of what God is going to do in all parts of the heathen world.

Rev. D. C. Scott, of the Blantyre Mission, Central Africa, briefly spoke of the work of the mission.

LAGOS.

Rev. F. W. Dodd, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, described a special mission he lately held at Lagos, on the West Coast of Africa. There were large attendances at the meetings four times a day, and a goodly number professed to accept the Lord Jesus Christ. It was eminently true, he said, that in Sierra Leone the work had been built up on the sacrificed lives of the workers. There is great need for consecrated men and women to go out there to labour for God among these people. Rev. C. H. V. Gollmer, of Lagos, said that thirty-five years ago that port was the chief slave centre of the West Coast of Africa. It was, therefore, a great matter to hear, as we had heard from Mr. Dodd, of the successes of the Gospel now among the native churches.

MADAGASCAR.

Rev. B. Briggs, of the London Missionary Society, said that at Antananarivo, the capital of Madagascar, with a population of 150,000, various societies are seeking by schools, churches, and other agencies to spread the Gospel. In other parts of the island missionary operations are also being carried on. A great and glorious work has been done. Educational work is much blessed ; there are now 1000 schools, and 150,000 school children. Native agents are largely employed. Rev. G. Cousins said that in the experience of the work in Madagascar there had been great and sharp contrasts—light and shade, persecution and liberty, discouragement and success. For the last three years the island has been under a cloud through the troubles with the French, and though peace now prevails, there are elements of danger from certain clauses in the treaty. It has been from the beginning a Biblical work. The Jesuits are so convinced of the importance of this that they say it would be as easy for them to move the Protestant missions as it would be to graze a rock with a razor. The spontaneous, self-propagating character of the work is very striking.

TUESDAY EVENING.

INDIA.

Sir Douglas Fox was in the chair. He said that it was a matter of great interest to him to be at the Y.M.C.A. in connection with the evangelisation of the heathen, as he had happy recollections of his early attachment to the institution. There is a mighty work lying before us in India and Burmah; we ought to recollect that as Englishmen we have a special responsibility with respect to our fellow-subjects there. The Church Missionary Society, with which he was associated, was languishing for want of more men, notwithstanding the wonderful way in which God has lately been stirring up those at the universities to give themselves to the work. There is ample room for all, and especially for those who can work among the more educated classes.

Rev. A. W. Baumann said the Hindoos and Mohamedans were in earnest in advancing the special tenets of their faith, and he wanted all his hearers to be terribly in earnest about Gospel missions to them. He illustrated the power of the Gospel in India by telling of the conversion of a leading man among the Hindoos, who had previously been very successful in perverting others from the Christian faith. He had to suffer much in purse and reputation for his confession of Christ. Formerly he was an honoured guest in Brahmin society ; now he has to pocket the insults of the street boys as he goes about evangelising among the people.

Rev. J. C. Sowerbutts, who has laboured in the Mysore district in Southern India, in connection with the Methodist Mission, said there were many difficulties in that special field, but they have been largely overcome. There are stations in every principal town of the various districts, where evangelistic and educational work is being sustained. In the school and college the Gospel is taught every day, as well as in the direct itinerant work in the villages and bazaars. The prospect is becoming brighter every day.

Rev. William Lee, of Travancore, of the London Missionary Society, said the dark days of difficulty in India had largely passed away ; success follows the work of the missionary everywhere. A Hindoo writer was quoted to show the feeling of unrest that prevails among Hindoos of the higher castes. There is nothing that can meet or satisfy this unrest but the religion of Jesus Christ. Baboo Cheshub Kunder Sen was right when he exclaimed that none but Jesus would do for India, and He would have it. To show the sustaining power of the Christian religion the speaker contrasted the death of the Rajah of Travancore, and that of a poor humble Christian catechist, the former resigning himself to the inevitable, and the other having a triumphant entrance into the unseen world. The future conflicts in India will not be with the effete systems of heathen doctrine, but with the modern beliefs and doubts that are imported from western nations.

Chowry Muthoo, a dark-skinned young man, who is studying medicine with the view of returning as a missionary, took a brief review of the progress of missions in India since Carey's days. He said that there were many who in their heart believed on Christ and yet did not publicly confess their faith by joining any Christian Church. All that has been done, however, is as nothing compared with what remains to be done. The old beliefs are vanishing ; what is going to take their place? It will be an ill day for India when she chooses any substitute but the religion of Jesus Christ. There are, unhappily, signs that theosophy and infidelity are exercising much influence among the educated classes of the people ; how important that those who have the true faith should make haste to carry it to the Hindoos. Among the many obstacles to the Gospel he mentioned caste, the custom of infant marriage, and the sad condition of the young widows. Only the elevating power of the Gospel can meet the great needs of the nation. A warm protest was entered by this young Hindoo against putting education in the place of the Gospel, and was received and endorsed with much warmth by the audience. He made a solemn appeal to any young brethren who might be going to the foreign field to consecrate themselves wholly and unreservedly to God, whose power would enable them to triumph over all opposition. This earnest young brother was so possessed with his theme that he found it difficult to close ; before doing so he referred to the great importance of Medical and Zenana missions.

BURMAH.

Mr. Henry Soltau said Burmah was deeply laid on his heart, and he wanted to fix on his countrymen the true responsibility with respect to it. France has lately been trying to enter in and possess it, but there is a nearer power, and that is England. The part of the country that has lately been annexed is about twice the size of Scotland, with a population of between two and three millions. The independent Shan States adjoining are also opening up, and they will soon be perfectly safe for any Gospel worker. He pleaded for recruits for the mission fields of Burmah, which he believed would be in the near future a highway to China. If commerce will take Englishmen out to these remote countries, shall not the commerce of the Gospel take out others who will devote themselves and their substance to the Lord's work there? In this great "wedge," so to speak, between India and China, twice the size of Scotland, there are only two missionaries, with perhaps a dozen native Christians. Many tribes there are without a solitary witness for Christ; they are virgin soil. He thanked God for the recent annexation for which he had been praying for years. Despite the inconsistency of many Englishmen, he thanked God for English Government abroad. Some of the men in high places in Burmah are earnest Christian men. The "dacoits" of whom we have heard so much, are simply robbers, without a tinge of patriotism in them. When the country is settled under the new Government, these disturbances will be impossible. There have been many encouragements in the past, and we want to push on. The Americans are going to extend their operations, and we must supplement them. An English garrison will soon be planted half way through the country, which will ensure the safety of the entire region. The physical as well as the spiritual needs of these people are intense, and cannot be described. Who will go and minister to them? There has been great prosperity in Gospel work among the Karens; there are also thousands of native Burmese Christians, though they are not so satisfactory as the simple Karens. Our readers are perhaps aware that Mr. Soltau is at present acquiring the medical skill needful to enable him to return to Burmah as a fully equipped medical missionary.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

JAPAN.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided this morning, and read some Scriptures bearing on the subject of the day, having special reference to the need of Christians to have the scales taken away from their eyes, and to have them anointed of the Spirit, so that they might see the needs of the world, and know the mind of God concerning its salvation.

Rev. C. F. Warren, of Osaka, Japan, addressed himself to a brief survey of the outlook in that country. There has been of late a remarkable growth of interest and of progress. Last year it was estimated that there were some 10,000 native Christians throughout the Empire. There have, unhappily, been some foreigners there, both English and American, who have opposed Christianity, and have sought to sow the seeds of unbelief; but many others, as well as native laymen, have been faithful witnesses for Christ, and have exercised a powerful influence for good among the Japanese. A blessed unity prevails among all the missionary workers in Japan. The converts in Japan are Bible-loving Christians. One hopeful element is the self-propagating power of the Gospel through the individual efforts of the native Christians on self-supporting principles. There is a wide and open door everywhere. New workers have gone out within the last year or two, but there is need or many more. A special call comes by reason of he openness of the field, and also because with our civilisation we have too often carried with it the seeds of error and unrighteous dealing.

Miss McLean said she had spent five and a half years in Japan. She commenced giving instruction in the English language; crowds came, and a spirit of deep inquiry was aroused among the people. She waxed warm in her praises of the Japanese people, commending their stability of character as an element of great promise. Mr. Piercy said the British and Foreign Bible Society were extending their work in Japan, and were sending out Mr. Braithwaite as an additional agent there for the circulation of the Scriptures.

CHINA.

Mr. T. W. Pigott, of the China Inland Mission, said he wanted to awaken interest in the great outlying countries that surround China—Corea, Thibet, Manchuria, Mongolia, &c. The further the workers go from the centres of population on the coast the more marked have been the results. He related in detail some of the results he had been privileged to see in connection with his labours in the province of Shan-Si. News had come to hand, he said, of persecution in China, largely resulting from the recent quarrels with the French. The converts have to suffer much loss for the sake of Jesus Christ. There are causes for disappointment as well as congratulation; now is a preparatory time, and we may look for more extended results by and by. Great care needs to be exercised by the missionaries in dealing with converts, some of whom make a profession of Christianity from unworthy motives, and cause bitter sorrow to the workers. Mr. Pigott had a good deal that was encouraging to say about his experiences in Manchuria, but his address had the fault, which was not absent indeed from others delivered during the Conference, of being too diffuse and minute in its details, lacking the force that comes from concentration of thought and treatment.

Mr. Broomhall introduced in turn five young men about to leave as missionaries for China. Mr. E. Sayers, Dr. J. C. Stewart, Mr. Andrew Wright, Mr. G. Graham Brown, and Mr. A. Orr Ewing. These all, in a few earnest and well-chosen words, told how the claims of China had been laid on their hearts, and how they had been led to devote themselves as messengers of the cross among its teeming millions. A special interest attaches to the departure of Mr. Orr Ewing, as he has filled an influential position in Glasgow society as a large manufacturer, and has also made his mark as a successful Christian worker. He is now, we were informed, going out to labour in the Gospel in China, at his own charge, besides paying the transit expenses of his four companions. In his remarks on this occasion Mr. Ewing said he had already visited China as a traveller, so that he knew something of the place whither he was bound. Since that visit he had been led more clearly to see God's claim on his full surrender of himself. After waiting on the Lord for guidance he had been definitely directed to relinquish all home claims, and go out to labour among the Chinese. He had found great joy in the prospect of going out. Having tried the world, and having tried a half-hearted Christian life, and found satisfaction in neither, he was now rejoiced in letting God be King. We can but re-echo the hope expressed by Mr. Broomhall that at all such coming conferences there may be present a band of departing workers as a practical illustration of that which ought to be indefinitely multiplied.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

Mr. W. H. Seagram presided. Early in the meeting one brother prayed that God would move on the hearts of English mothers, so that they should not place hindrances in the way of their daughters going out to evangelise among the millions of women in India and China.

ZENANA WORK.

Mrs. Gilmore, of the Indian Female School and Instruction Society, traced the rise and development of Zenana work during the last thirty years. There is now ample scope throughout India for the visits of the Christian women to the Zenanas. The speaker pathetically described the sad and dark condition of the women in that land, secluded in their own apartments; she pleaded earnestly that many more English women should go out and carry the consolations of the Gospel to those Indian sisters, sitting in darkness, and knowing nothing of the peace and joy that come from faith in Christ. Mrs. Gilmore gave an interesting account of the opening of a new station at Patna, a large Mohamedan city, where many houses are now visited, and schools conducted. Those ladies now in India are overworked and exhausted, and there is great need that others should go to their help. The very conditions of the lives of Indian women are a strenuous plea that the Gospel should be taken to them, as they cannot go to hear it for themselves. It is very pleasant and delightful work both among the women and children. A good work is going on among the children of high castes, who are being taught the Word of God. The Mohamedan religion is so destitute of the idea of God's love to the world that it takes some time to make them apprehend this great and glorious truth. There are various societies at work, but the efforts of all put together are only a drop in the bucket. Mrs. Gilmore said she was deeply impressed, on a visit to India, by the immense masses of people; all these have been committed to us that we may give them of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. If we but realised the command of God and our own privilege, we surely would be more in earnest in seeking to meet this deep need. Every congregation of Christians ought to have its own representative in the foreign field; then a deeper and more practical interest would be felt.

WOMEN IN CHINA.

Mrs. Hudson Taylor read interesting extracts from letters received from her husband, showing the wonderful access that the lady missionaries have among the Chinese women. The ladies of the upper class are more restrained in their movements than those of a humbler rank, and are so far at a disadvantage. The sorrowful wail of a Chinese woman, "I am too old; you have come too late," mentioned by Mrs. Taylor, might well become a text for speakers at missionary meetings. It was deeply interesting, she said, to see how, in different parts of the great Empire, the zeal of the workers adapts itself to the circumstances. In one place, a Christian native cook goes out regularly and carries a cripple to the Gospel service. The people themselves contribute much personal labour in the work of building chapels, so that the expenses on this behalf are greatly lessened. One convert has found out a way to cure opium smokers; he believes God has given it to him. Having means of his own, he goes about the country administering this cure and preaching the Gospel. There are hundreds being saved through persevering, individual effort. One convert during a few months has induced some eighty persons with whom he came in contact to give up their idols, and they are earnestly inquiring the way to God. Many more workers are needed; but if those who are in the field were to be filled with the Holy Ghost great things would be done.

Mrs. Schofield, widow of the late Dr. Harold Schofield, said that during the three and a half years she was privileged to labour in China, she was gladly received by the people. There is a great field for lady helpers, both in the large towns and the villages. In the work of visitation there are many opportunities of telling the people of the Gospel. Helpers are much needed also for school-work. Medical aid is a great boon, and ought to be largely extended. She believed that medical work and school work were the two channels through which the deepest work would be done in the future. She urged earnest and constant prayer that the Lord of the harvest would send out more labourers to the barvest-field. Prayer should also be made continually for the missionaries labouring in the field, and for the converts who often have persecution to undergo. When she was herself passing through dark waters, she was sustained by God in answer to the prayer that was made for her in this country.

JAPANESE IN LONDON.

Miss McLean said she longed for the time when all would be at work in the field, and there would be no time for such conferences. Proceeding to tell something of the work she had been enabled to do among Japanese in London, she told how she met with a Japanese student in whom she took a lively interest, and who was led to accept of Christ partly through social intercourse with Christian families, and partly through the meetings held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey. She hoped other Christian families would be on the look-out for such strangers, and seek to lead them to a knowledge of the truth. For the last year she has been visiting the Japanese Village in Knightsbridge, seeking to influence for Christ those employed there, and she has met with much encouragement.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

SPAIN AND FRANCE.

Mr. H. Matheson, who presided at the closing session, said with reference to Spain (which it is his privilege to visit occasionally) that the Roman Catholic system in that country is largely based on Moorish and Arab ideas. There is a great lack of conscience among the people. One of the most encouraging features of Gospel work there is that in connection with schools, in which the children are every day instructed in the Scriptures. On a recent visit to a town in the south of Spain he was delighted to see the warm welcome given to one who in former years laboured in the Gospel among the people.

In speaking of the McAll Mission work, Mons. Lorriaux said there were now one hundred stations in the Republic—thirty-five in Paris, and sixty-five in the provinces. During the past year the attendances amounted very nearly to one million. The times are favourable in France. There is the fullest religious liberty. The great enemy of the French nation is not unbelief, but ignorance. It is a sign of the times that in the French Parliament lately, one of the representatives in a debate boldly declared his faith in God and in the immortality of the soul. Mons. Lorriaux warmly invited English friends to look at the McAll work for themselves during visits to Paris. He told of some of the Gospel triumphs that have been met with in the course of the work, which has not only been a great, direct blessing to the people, but has been the means of stirring up many French Christians to more earnest effort. Referring to the recent celebration of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, he said they took their revenge by opening a new branch of the Mission.

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN PALESTINE.

Dr. Chaplin, late of Jerusalem, said the longer one remained in that city, where Christ laboured and suffered, the more one felt his utter and entire dependence on God. Work is different there in some respects from that in other parts of the world. Three or four or even five languages have to be acquired in order to discharge mission work properly. As a very singular instance of this Dr. Chaplin told of one occasion in the hospital of the Kaiserwerth Deaconesses, when five interpreters were needed to convey to him the replies of a patient. The man was a Georgian, and could speak a little Armenian; the one to whom he spoke passed on his words to one who spoke Turkish, who in turn spoke Arabic to another who interpreted to a German, and, finally, the German was the medium of communication with himself. There are many prejudices to be overcome from the Rabbis and others, but these are giving way before the influence of the medical work combined with Gospel teaching. For the last two years Miss Barlee has done good service among Jewish women in Jerusalem, and her success has been so great that she now requires to enlarge her accommodation. A very interesting medical mission work is going on among the lepers of the city; it is now in connection with the Moravian brethren. The work at Jaffa, carried on by the ladies from Mildmay, has been singularly blessed, and the recent decease of Miss Mangan is an almost irreparable loss. At Safet, one of the largest cities in Palestine, there is a similar mission, which is doing excellent service. At all these points of operation ample opportunity is found for the circulation of the Scriptures, so that there is hardly a poor Jew throughout the land who has not had some part of God's Word placed in his hands.

JEWS IN LONDON.

Dr. Dixon, as a representative of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, said the same prejudices are met with in London as are met with in Palestine, though the opposition has largely subsided through the care bestowed on the people. There have been not a few conversions among the patients, though the social obstacles in the way of an open confession of Jesus Christ are many and serious. One Russian Jew was converted; he went to his native land, was caught by the police, and made to serve as a soldier: the reports are that he is faithfully testifying to his comrades, and is doing much good.

MEDICAL WORK IN CHINA.

Dr. J. L. Maxwell, late of Formosa, said the power of medical missionary work in a heathen land is signally illustrated by the history of the work at Swatow, in the South of China. A great pile of building there is dedicated to this work. Day by day some 200 people come, the halt, the lepers, and other sick persons, attend the Gospel services. Within the year some 4000 come to the hospital for two or three weeks' stay for medical treatment. These patients come from some 1200 towns and villages in the Prefecture in which the hospital stands. They return to these places, and exercise a potent influence among their neighbours, not to speak of direct conversions at the hospital. At least one-third of the stations in connection with the mission are the fruit of the work at the mission hospital. If the Christian Church would only send out the workers they could be planted in every city in vast China; there are also loud calls coming from many other heathen lands. A medical missionary ought to be a fully trained and qualified man professionally, if he would exercise his highest influence. He must also be a clear and decided Christian. Some can provide for their own training; the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society has been very useful in sending out others; there has also been a London Medical Missionary Association established, to help and train suitable men for the work. Any young men who are moved in this direction would do well to put themselves in communication with that Association. The office, we learn, is at 104, Petherton-road, Canonbury, N.

GERMANY.

Herr von Schluembach, in a stirring address on Gospel work in Germany, said that what moves Germany moves the German-speaking world. Germany is not a heathen land; he had not visited a single place where there were not some true Christians. But in many parts of the empire a great proportion of the people, especially the men, do not go to Church. Many of the professed believers, moreover, do not let their light shine in the surrounding darkness as could be wished. Still, it is encouraging to know that the great importance of evangelistic work is coming home to the ecclesiastical authorities, and also to the churches generally. In some parts there is not so much need for it, because of past revival movements, which have not yet spent their influence. As an instance of the widespread interest, Herr Schluembach told of one place where he had the utmost liberty and scope to give "the hot shot and shell of the Gospel" to all and sundry. It was a time of snowstorm, and yet the people came from far and near—tramp, tramp to a Gospel meeting—in the morning. The factories were closed that the people might attend a Bible meeting in the afternoon. Then there were meetings for women, and Gospel meetings in the evening, with plenty of inquirers earnestly seeking the way of life. This was kept up as long as his bodily strength held out. If such a thing could be done in a snowstorm, what could be done when the sun shines? In Berlin, too, he had been working in the eastern part of the city. Without any adventitious aids they were able to get crowded meetings night after night. The people got "awful mad" about the truth, but in the end they were converted.

MR. RADCLIFFE'S ADDRESSES.

At the close of the meeting on Wednesday morning, after the departing missionaries for China had spoken, Mr. Radcliffe gave a brief word of exhortation. Referring to the band of Oxford and Cambridge young men who lately went out, he said that in the past we had been apt to confine our prayers and our expectations too much to those who had received university training. I was speaking, he said, to a missionary who has been at work for years in China, and I asked him which class of men he would like best for the work, after his experience in the field—those trained in university and college, or any other class. He said he would prefer selecting men from among commercial travellers. He appeared to think that those who succeeded in dealing with their fellow-men in business matters would succeed in the business of the Gospel as well. In times past we have been rejecting young men who had not passed through a regular curriculum. We would have rejected Carey. We would even have rejected Spurgeon, as he had not been to a university. We would have rejected the famous Williams, who was so blessed in winning souls in the South Seas. It is good to trust in the Lord, that He would strike down a man in the universities when He wants him, and a man from the medical profession, or a lawyer, or a nobleman, when He wants him. Let us not curtail the operations of the Holy Ghost. He is Sovereign. He will give his gifts to whom He will, whether he be a college man or a manufacturer like Mr. Orr Ewing, who has left his manufacturing to go to China. It is time that we should allow the Holy Ghost to work.

We have been enchained in these last two days listening to reports of what our brethren and sisters have seen of the Lord's work. But if we should take a chess-board we could place all the missionaries in the foreign field on one out of the sixty-four squares, so that we have sixty-three squares left with no missionaries at all. Let us not be confined to young men from the universities or anywhere else. Let us not be confined to men at all; let us have the women too. We are commanded to pray to the Lord of the harvest that He would send forth the labourers into his harvest. I am not sure that if everyone of us in this meeting whose heads are grey were wholly yielded to the living God at this hour—I am not sure that three months would be allowed to elapse before some of us would be away to Africa, or India, or China. I see none here, unless they have got special infirmities, who are too old to go and carry the Gospel to any of these lands. Oh, let God come into our hearts and be King. That is the object of this Conference—that every soul here who professes to be Christ's should not take Him as the atoning Lamb, so that he may just safely crawl into heaven; but that he should be filled with the Holy Ghost, and have Jesus ruling and reigning in him. If we were to have a Pentecost here, it would not be in the power of man or devil to keep this little company from being saturated, like Gideon's fleece. It would not be possible to estimate the outgoings of the Gospel from this little room in all directions. There is power with God; would to God there were no power in us! We are always thinking of self. We have forgotten God's power, and therefore we have in our midst leanness and drunkenness, licentiousness and infidelity; people preaching a gospel that is not a Gospel. We are in ruins because we will not obey God's A B C. Yet our Father's name is Love, and Christ Himself says the Father is more willing to fill every man and woman full of the Holy Ghost than we are to give bread to our children.

CLOSING APPEAL.

The final utterance of the Conference on Wednesday evening was also by Mr. Radcliffe. He repeated and emphasised a remark made in his previous address, that the Conference was not intended so much to be a sort of foreign mission anniversary; the programme was on The Evangelisation of the World. Surely, he said, the hour is come when the Lord would be ready to take the scales from our eyes, and show us that it is high time that we should begin this business in earnest, of the evangelisation of the world. If our programme had been published, say, thirty-five years ago, we should certainly have excluded from it Medical missions and Zenana missions, because they did not exist. If the Lord in mercy showed us quite recently in these latter days that Medical missions and Zenana missions would be a grand thing, is it not possible that if we get to prayer He will show us yet other methods of taking his Gospel to his heathen. I grant you we are but a little company. There were only thirteen who drew around Carey. Even they were all going home to bed, but he took them by the ear and constrained them to join with him in prayer. That little band established the missionary society that was the forerunner of the English and Scotch and American societies. And now the Lord is entreating us to begin to think of his heathen, his Chinese, his Indians, his Africans, his Anglo-Saxons crowded into the mushroom cities along the west coast of America. When the multitude was only five thousand Christ had compassion on them; is He not able now to make the heart of every man and woman overflow with compassion for the millions of his heathen in every land? It is not so much the number of those who go out as missionaries, as the intensity of the heat. Oh that He would give us men and women filled with the Holy Ghost; let us wait upon Him, and hang upon Him for this.

If I had had time I should have had to say something about the greater part of the earth yet untouched by the Gospel. We are met here in connection with the Y.M.C.A. which has about three thousand branches throughout the world. Some of the branches in Great Britain have already begun to think about the heathen. Birmingham began two years ago. Aldersgate-street, with its Foreign Missionary Society, has its workers in the field. Liverpool has sent one young fellow to Africa. Let us have faith in God that these branches all over the world may think about the heathen in this way. The organisation is already there, and, if they should be moved to go forward, it would be just like striking a lot of lights in a row, illuminating a place quickly—one light passing on the light to another and another. Let us pray for it. In Russia the Gospel is spreading rapidly, though the police are arresting the preachers. I have just come home from preaching in Rome and Paris. Oh that we could Russianise Italy and France. There the people are converted, but for the most part they stand still with their mouths shut. If the Gospel is ever to be spread to all parts of the world it will never be done by missionaries or even by medical missions; there will have to be a great scattering of the communicants in all our churches.

Mr. Radcliffe closed with a burning appeal to all in the meeting, old as well as young, to be wholly surrendered to God--ready to go anywhere at his bidding, to carry the message of salvation to those who know it not. When the general audience had dispersed, a little company from among them remained for a season to hear some weighty words of exhortation from Mr. Graham Brown, and to unite in earnest confession and prayer for the objects of the Conference. Prayer-meetings were held on the Monday evening, and also on the two mornings of the Conference. May the Lord of the harvest graciously listen to these petitions, and speedily answer them by thrusting forth many prepared and consecrated labourers into all the places where the fields are ripe and the fruit is ready to be garnered in.

JEWISH DISTRESS.

For the first time in history the distressed condition of the Jewish people is affecting the condition of this country. The pressure on Jews in Russia has driven many hither from thence. Their numbers have been further augmented by the increasing restrictions imposed in Roumania upon all Jewish industry, and by the thousands who have been expelled from East Germany. These evictions have gone on through the winter, in spite of the rigours of snow and ice and storm. One thousand were ordered to quit Breslau. Many thousands have been turned out of other towns—artisans, lawyers, doctors, merchants, and farmers. Thus have families been ruined, homes broken up, property destroyed, and these refugees have helped to swell the famishing crowd in the East-end of London and in other towns.

The rich Jews have these last six years done very much for their suffering brethren. Last year they relieved 10,000 cases—mostly foreign refugees. Those Jews who form the settled population—forty to sixty thousand—of London are also generally very poor. But the mighty host of refugees are being added to these, and the labour market is being swamped by starving men and women who will work for almost nothing. What is to be the end of these things? We already hear the mutterings of discontent and ill-will, from our own poor, against "foreigners" who cheapen labour and "take the bread out of the mouths of British workmen." Where are these willing Jewish workers to go? Foreign lands, America included, will not receive pauper immigrants—however industrious—if wholly destitute of all but industry. What is to become of the refugee Jews? The question is most pressing.

The Jews themselves look to their own land in this momentous crisis of their history. They feel that no other land is really open to them. Some of the Jews who have managed somehow to get to Palestine have formed seven small colonies of their own, containing above 1300 people, and they have gone through great hardships, and shown astonishing perseverance. They are now beginning to succeed. We have been training a few on land near Jerusalem. Larger tracts of land, on which they would at once be settled, have been offered to us. Every little company of industrious Jews settled in Palestine speedily becomes a nucleus round which others gather, and they help each other. We have refrained from pleading their cause during the continuance here of this sad winter. But now we ask for means, that we may help these brethren in their time of deep need. E. A. Finn, Secretary.

41, Parliament-street, Westminster, S.W.

MR. JOHN WOOLDRIDGE has concluded a nine weeks' mission in Sheffield, under the auspices of the Primitive Methodist body. At a public love feast, many told, out of a full heart, what God had done for their souls.

NORTHAMPTON.—The new Union Church being erected in this town for Rev. H. Bradford is almost completed, and it is hoped the building will be opened early in May. Our readers will recollect that Mr. Bradford had to leave his former pastorate because of his fidelity to evangelical truth; we trust a long career of useful service is in store for him in the new church.

NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.—An interesting meeting was held last Thursday evening at Hornsey, in order to evoke the sympathy and co-operation of the Christian public of the district in the work. It is much to be desired that other districts may be moved to form branch associations, so that the whole country may be covered by them as with a net-work. It is only in some such way that the Criminal Law Amendment Act for the Protection of Girls will be prevented from becoming a dead letter.

MR. C. KING, evangelist, has concluded a short but successful course of Gospel meetings in Rutherglen. Seldom, indeed, have such large audiences been gathered in the town on week-nights to hear the Gospel. Mr. King's deep knowledge of life and of human nature made his words come home with peculiar force to the heart and conscience. At the close of the meetings Mr. King was asked to revisit Rutherglen and make a longer stay, and he has consented to do so in the autumn. D. L. R.

THE LARRIKINS OF DUNEDIN.

A very good work of a peculiar kind has been going on in this city for a year or more. Dunedin is no mean city, although a colonial one. Report gives to it about 40,000 inhabitants, including suburbs. It has many earnest Christians, and a "Lyceum" also for Freethinkers, a pleasant nursery wherein young scorners and scoffers can be prepared for sin and shame.

A Scotch lady, Mrs. George Mackenzie, wife of a Government surveyor, has for some years wished to reach the Larrikin class of boys, and she has gradually won the regard and attention of many of them. She first organised, I think, pleasant meetings for them — hymn-singing meetings, with refreshments occasionally. Mrs. Fulton (whose husband is a well-known member of the House of Representatives) and another lady sometimes appeared and helped. Gradually the Larrikins had confidence in her, and received advice from her; they began to work at different occupations, appreciated the commendation they received, did carpentry, and begun cutting out with only their knives ingenious little things.

A friend writes to me thus: "The industrial part has answered better than was expected, and was finished up this year by having an exhibition and a bazaar, which has been fairly successful, although the outside public have not taken the interest in it we expected. The mothers and friends of the children patronised us well, and a few other earnest friends, especially Mr. Rutherford, who gave a picnic to about 150 near his own house.

"The boys' own work has been greatly admired, consisting chiefly of cone-frames, leather frames, paper work, thread work, leather baskets, fancy frames, and other little works of their own. One had a suite of furniture, everything for a drawing-room and bed-room complete, all made with his knife. The value at a low rate of the boys' work would be about £25; but it is not so much the value of the articles as the good it does to them, and the power for good it gives to Mrs. Mackenzie. We struggled to keep them out of haunts of sin; we got them to play cricket, and set them sometimes to play chess, and interested them in a library; but these efforts were not so successful as work.

"Work proved the greatest power for good. At first they never could stick long to it, and did it very roughly; but when they found out they had some power in that way, and could really construct a little thing, love of work gradually grew in them, and both teachers and taught became greatly interested. The exhibition of their own work was really a treat and a wonder to all. Actually they have got a taste for the 'fine arts,' and rejoice in their new power, and now they firmly stick to one thing until it is done."

Their Christian helpers are with them every night of the week, and they are actually to a certain extent refined now, and on intimate terms with their Christian helpers. Mr. Troup and Miss Troup take charge of the different branches. Miss Troup looks after the girls, and now it is not the question, as at first, "What ones will come to us?" but "What Larrikins or girls shall we take?" as the workers have only accommodation for a limited number. Prizes are given to the best and to the most diligent workers. These good friends never cease to tell them of Jesus and his love, and my reporter shows they have faith that many of these young persons will yet be at the feet of Jesus. The workers ask for the prayers of Christians. I am sorry I have not seen the work personally, it is hundreds of miles south of my home, but I know the workers well. Gordon Forlong.

Bulls, New Zealand.

INDIGENT BLIND VISITING SOCIETY.—The number of blind persons visited has lately been increasing, but only two additional visitors (all of whom are blind) have been secured. The number of cases under visitation is now 850, while education in the day-classes is given to about 300 of all ages. The offices are at 27, Red Lion-square, W.C. Mr. W. C. Lester is the secretary.

The Book World.

The Deep Waters of Blue Galilee: A Poem. By Rev. Robert S. Mylne, M.A., F.S.A. Hatchards. Richer in sentiment than in poetry, yet the flow of the verse is pleasant. The glory that is Galilee's, because of Him who once sojourned there, is reflected on every page.

Whitefield Anecdotes. By Dr. Macaulay. Religious Tract Society. These stories of the past are full of inspiration and counsel for the present. They also throw light on the character and work of the man who was honoured in bringing about the spiritual revolution of the last century.

Earth's Christmas Ode. By Rev. John S. Joly. George Herbert. Christmas Odes are rather unsuitable in April, but this meritorious poem can never be out of place or time, for it sings the praise of Him who, as one of the old Fathers puts it, "became human that we might become Divine." Mr. Joly writes well, because he feels the force of what he writes.

Letters from a Cottage: A True Story. By a Girtonian. 1s. Nisbet & Co. This is an idyl of the soul—a poem of pain, a psalm of life and thanksgiving. Written in melodious words to the air of faith, this touching and beautiful story of the finding, conversion, and marvellous restoration of "Eliza," is one of the most tender and bracing examples of the love of God that it has been our privilege to meet with.

Christ, the Ruler of the Kings of the Earth. By James Johnstone. James Gemmell. Mr. Johnstone seeks to prove that the Old Testament kingdom ended and the New Testament kingdom began at Christ's death, and that the kingdom then founded was not to be invisible, but visible. He traces the judgments with which the nations have been visited to their not acknowledging Christ's right to reign as Ruler of the world.

The New Princeton Review (March Number). 2s. Hodder & Stoughton. This American magazine, if it were published monthly instead of bi-monthly, would become a serious rival to some of the English reviews. In appearance and mode of handling the themes under discussion, it reminds us of The Contemporary Review. The value of the number before us lies mainly in a charming study of the poet Gray, by James Russell Lowell, and a high-toned article on "The Just Scales," by Dr. George Dana Boardman.

The Church and the People. Macniven & Wallace. This volume is made up of eight lectures delivered last winter in St. Giles Cathedral, Edinburgh, by eminent ministers of the Church of Scotland, and deals with topics of immediate interest. It is an able defence of the existing connection between Church and State, and hits hard at voluntaryism. Its tone is generally fair, and its arguments are weighty. Those who wish to see the other side of the Disestablishment agitation should get it.

Congregational Psalmist Hymnal. Edited by Henry Allon, D.D. Revised by Professor Henry Monk. 3s. Hodder & Stoughton. This work is too well known to need any detailed description. One of the advantages of a book of this kind is that tunes and words become indissolubly associated. The re-setting and harmonies of some old favourites will be found very acceptable improvements; though we notice that many choice and beautiful hymns to be found in the general collection used by the Congregational churches are, unfortunately, missing.

Teaching and Teachers; or, The Sunday-school Teacher's Teaching Work. By H. Clay Trumbull, D.D. New and cheaper edition. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. In a notice of this exhaustive work some time ago, we called attention to its simplicity, comprehensiveness, and solidity. In its present form, it is within the reach of almost every Sunday-school teacher, and we heartily reiterate our commendation. Its study is a training in itself, and its possession is well nigh a necessity where equipment for thorough teaching and subtle analysis of the teacher's work are sought.

Through the United States and Canada. By Rev. Dr. Campbell, Stirling. 4s. 6d. S. W. Partridge. Last autumn Dr. Campbell made a short holiday tour in the United States and Canada, from New York on the east, to Chicago on the west, and from Montreal on the north, to St. Louis and Cincinnati on the south. Gifted with a shrewdly observant eye, and a fresh, lucid style of diction, the writer has noted down in this volume many things of interest both to travellers and to stay-at-homes. Having traversed a good deal of the same ground we can partly vouch for the fidelity of the sketches, which furnish much information not readily accessible to the stranger.

Historical Sketch of Music. By H. Brown. 1s. 6d. W. Reeves. Lovers of music, instrumental or vocal, will welcome this exhaustive sketch of the rise and progress of the art. It is the fruit of much reading and patient research, and, so far as we are able to judge, carries in it the authority of historical accuracy.

Ivor Rees, the Welsh Cowherd. 2s. Religious Tract Society. A capital story, clustering around the history of a boy early left an orphan, but into whose tender heart his Christian mother had lovingly instilled the knowledge of God and Christ. The style is pleasing and natural, and the matter sound and healthy.

Our Father; or, The Lord's Prayer expanded in the words of Holy Scripture. Elliot Stock. A mother here gives to the public what she compiled originally for the use of her sons. The prayers are adapted from the Bible, and are eminently suitable for private and family worship. Our friend, Mr. Christopher, of St. Aldate's, Oxford, writes an interesting introduction.

The Rule of Prayer. By the Author of "The Rule of Faith." J. Whitaker. This is a valuable addition to our devotional literature on the Lord's Prayer. Its aim is to exalt Christ as the object of worship, contemplation, and action; it shows how his prayers are models in their earnestness, thanksgiving, simplicity, and exercise of trust. It is written in a style of chastened beauty, and is lit up with quotations from theologians of repute.

The Daily Life. By the Author of "The Daily Round." J. Whitaker. The fact that a second edition of this volume has been called for speaks loudly in its favour. We do not wonder at its success. It is strong in the stress it puts on the faithful performance of the duties nearest our hands, and rich in comfort for the sorrows that darken life. Every page is bright with the hope that all things are meant to work together for the good of those who trust in God.

The Valley of Weeping a Place of Springs. By Canon Bell. Hodder & Stoughton. This exposition of the thirty-second Psalm is marked by spiritual fervour and charm of diction. It does not lose sight of its central purpose in verbal discussions or irrelevant digressions. Because of these qualities it will bear to be read more than once. The Christian's experience in his sorrow for sin, rapture of repentance, assurance of acceptance, and joy of forgiveness are treated with the skill born of knowledge and sympathy.

Children's Meetings, and How to Conduct Them: A Book for Sabbath-school Teachers, Parents, and Preachers to the Young. By Lucy J. Rider and Nellie M. Carman. 2s. and 2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott. With sixty outline lessons, fresh, vigorous, and to the point; forty-three diagrams for the blackboard, simple and most suggestive; and twenty-five children's hymns with music, this work—a really important, because needed one—is a complete armoury for those who are engaged in the invaluable work of training young souls for God. The "Lessons" are by some of the most eminent writers on such subjects, and the work is carefully and handsomely got up.

Present Day Tracts. 4d. each. Religious Tract Society. Three numbers of this admirable series are in our hands. "Utilitarianism: an Illogical and Irreligious Theory of Morals," by Professor Radford Thomson, attacks that system of philosophy which teaches that pleasure is the chief good and standard of right; and it points out that the weakness of the theory lies in its failure to find a place for, and give due scope to, duty and conscience. "Historical Illustrations of the New Testament Scriptures," by Rev. Dr. G. F. Maclear, summons classical writers, and coins, and monumental inscriptions to supply evidence in support of the narrative contained in the New Testament. These witnesses have an interesting and valuable story to tell. "The Claim of Christ on the Conscience," by Rev. William Stevenson, M.A., shows clearly that Jesus, as the manifestation of the highest righteousness, by the strength of his Divine influence, and by his atoning death lays a claim on each conscience which cannot be disputed.

Shortly before his death Dr. Charles Stanford published, through Mr. Elliot Stock, his volume on "The Wit and Humour of Life." The work went out of print very soon after its first issue; a second edition is announced to appear in a few days.

Evidences of the Bible v. Atheism and all Kinds of Infidelity. By the late A. A. Rees. 1d. John F. Shaw & Co. Strong, sweeping, convincing, and confirming, this booklet, reprinted from Footsteps of Truth, is a wonderful pennyworth of truth.

The Curse and the Cure. 1d. United Kingdom Alliance, Dalton-street, Manchester. Startling facts and figures are here announced, confirming all we know relative to the appalling results of intemperance. Address, by Archdeacon Farrar, D.D., on the Maine Liquor Laws. 1d. Both are worthy of being extensively circulated.

Cards.—Some pretty Easter and birthday floral cards, with suitable verses and mottoes, have been issued by Mr. J. G. Wheeler, 88, Mildmay-park, N.

Fadeless Flowers. By Edith M. Richardson. 1d. "Helmet" Office, 317, Mile End-road, E. Ivy Leaves and May Flowers, Heart's Ease and April Showers, are here poetically dilated on, while practical lessons are deduced and applied.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin is about to publish a work entitled "Medical Missions: Their Place and Power." It is written by the Rev. John Lowe, the secretary of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society.—A new Temperance story, by Miss Catharine Sturge, to be entitled "Southwood," is nearly ready, and will shortly be issued by Mr. Unwin.

The Pictorial Scenes from English History, by the late Richard Doyle, published from "The Pall Mall Gazette" Office (7s. 6d.), are full of infinite humour, and are truly remarkable examples of artistic faculty on the part of a youth of sixteen. They will be a source of endless amusement to any family circle into which they find their way. A fine portrait of the artist is given.

The Good Shepherd Delivering His Flock. By Dr. Burns Thompson. 2d. Partridge & Co. A most excellent discourse, based on Ps. xxiii., setting forth the supreme happiness of the Christian, in life, in death, and in eternity. With a large and varied experience as medical missionary, the author illustrates his theme by reminiscences of past experience in his profession, and by incidents gathered from the experiences of believers whom he has known.

Two dainty little floral books for the ecclesiastical season are issued by Messrs. Marcus Ward & Co.: Passion Flowers; or, Solace for the Suffering, gives a well-chosen text for the mornings and evenings of the month, and an introductory chapter full of beautiful and comforting thoughts for those to whom wearisome days and nights are appointed. Easter Wreaths, bound in white parchment, and enclosed in a card box, is printed in silver and gold, with floral designs, and all are eloquent of resurrection glory.

DEATH OF MR. ALEXANDER BALFOUR.

The inhabitants of Liverpool and many other parts of the United Kingdom will learn of the death of Mr. A. Balfour, J.P., of the firm of Balfour, Williamson & Co., merchants and shipowners, Alexandra-buildings, James-street, with feelings of the deepest regret, and of heartfelt sympathy with Mrs. Balfour and her family of five children. Mr. Balfour underwent a surgical operation in Edinburgh on Tuesday, last week, and seemed to be recovering. On Wednesday, however, he had a turn for the worse, and, to the grief of his family and very numerous friends, he expired early on Friday morning. As a shipowner, Mr. Balfour took the deepest interest in the welfare of the sailor before the mast, and did his utmost to ameliorate the hard conditions under which the British seaman maintains an existence. Mr. Balfour's avocations required him frequently to reside in Chili, where he established a Church and Bible Society.

He founded the institution in Duke-street, Liverpool, for the lodging of seamen, apprentices, and petty officers, which has done an incalculable amount of good in keeping young persons out of temptation; and it was, to a large extent, owing to his exertions that the Seamen's Orphans' Home at Newsham Park was established. He took the deepest interest in the promotion of the Sailors' Home in Canning-place, the Mersey Mission to Seamen, and the Bethel Mission, and continued, when less directly employing sailors, to display the most large-hearted benevolence in regard to those institutions.

He took an active interest in licensing questions, and was a warm advocate in the temperance cause. His benevolence was almost of an unresting character, and always in search of reasons for helping his fellow-men. He took a warm interest in the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. It will be remembered that Mr. Moody held services at his country seat, Mount Alyn, Rossett, near Wrexham, in 1875.

The announcement of his death cast a gloom over Liverpool. His princely munificence was well known, but the extent of his private benevolence was apparent to himself alone. Many of the ministers of various denominations in this city owe the means for spending their vacation to his secret kindness. They were not able to trace the source of the aid which came to their hands, but such stealthy acts of kindness were known to distinguish the generous character of the good man who has passed away.

MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION.—During the past year there were admitted 4476 new cases, while nearly 3000 sick patients were visited in their homes by the medical superintendent, Dr. Robert Chambers. The sick and dying have been visited to the number of 3300. In the latest report, most cheering instances are recorded of the double healing, which is the grand aim of the mission. One patient who was brought to Christ was the means of the conversion of his wife, who is now one of the brightest and most joyful Christians. Dr. Chambers, 43, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, asks the prayers and sympathy of our readers.

SUNDAY, APRIL 25.—JOSHUA V.

4.—And this is the cause why Joshua did circumcise.—"The reason why circumcision was omitted in the wilderness is suggested, though not expressed, in ver. 7; it is that the sentence of Num. xiv. 28, &c., placed the whole nation for the time under the ban; and that the discontinuance of circumcision . . . was a consequence and token of that ban."—Sp. Com. "Circumcision was suspended as long as the nation was under the ban of the Divine sentence pronounced upon it at Kadesh (Num. xiv.)."—Keil. This, which is also the view of Hengstenberg (following Calvin), is not strictly in accordance with ver. 5, which dates the cessation of circumcision from their coming forth out of Egypt, whereas this view postpones it till about a year and three months after that event. The difficulty is diminished, if not removed, if we date the failure of the covenant, of which the cessation of circumcision was the expression, from Sinai, and regard Moses' breaking the first tables of the law as the outward sign of the covenant having been broken (Exod. xxxii. 19). This also agrees better with the close connection traced by St. Paul between circumcision and keeping the law: see Rom. ii. 25, "If thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision;" see also Gal. v. 3.

9.—This day have I rolled away the reproach of Egypt from you.—"'The reproach of Egypt, is the reproach proceeding from Egypt, as 'the reproach of Moab' in Zeph. ii. 8 is the reproach heaped upon Israel by Moab. This was the reproach involved in the thoughts and sayings of the Egyptians, that Jehovah had brought the Israelites out of Egypt to destroy them in the desert (Exod. xxxii. 12; Num. xiii. 14—16; Deut. ix. 28). This reproach was rolled away from Israel with the circumcision of the people at Gilgal, inasmuch as this act was a practical declaration of the perfect restoration of the covenant, and a pledge that the Lord would now give them the land of Canaan for their inheritance."—Keil.

MONDAY, APRIL 26.—JOSHUA VI.

2.—And the Lord said unto Joshua.—The connection is much marred by the division of chapters being in the wrong place. The last three verses of chapter v. belong to this one, and should be taken with it. Verse 1 is merely a parenthetic remark to explain the words of the mysterious angel of the Lord, who is called "the Lord" (ver. 2), and who seems to have been none other than the Son of God Himself.

6.—Let seven priests bear seven trumpets of rams' horns.—"The trumpets employed were not the silver trumpets used for signalling the marshalling of the host, and for other warlike purposes (Num. x. 2), but the curved horns employed for ushering in the Jubilee and the Sabbatical year (Lev. xxiii. 24)."—Sp. Com.

11.—So the ark of the Lord compassed the city.—The means and mode employed to take Jericho were intended to teach Israel that they themselves had nothing whatever to do with the capture of the city, but that from first to last it was the Lord's doing. It was before the Ark of the Lord, whereon rested his presence, that Jericho was to fall. The seven days, and seven times on the seventh day, all pointed to Divine arrangement and purpose, and when, at last, the fulness of time was come, the word went forth: "Shout, for the Lord hath given you the city." "The employment of means like these before the walls of a strong garrison, and that for seven days, day by day, must have made the Israelites a derision to the warriors of Jericho, and so proved a trial of faith (Heb. xi. 30)."—Sp. Com.

20.—When the people heard the sound of the trumpet . . . . the wall fell down flat.—"The chapter, read in the light of the New Testament, has indications of a further import and bearing than such as concerned Joshua and the Jews. As Joshua is doubtless a type of Christ, so must Jericho be taken (with all Christian expositors) as the type of the powers opposed to Christ and his cause. St. Paul seems to borrow his imagery from the very chapter before us, when he says: 'The Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God' (1 Thess. iv. 16).—Ibid. (See also Rev. xi. 15.)

TUESDAY, APRIL 27.—JOSHUA VII.

1.—But the children of Israel committed a trespass.—"The word here used means 'to act covertly,' and so 'to act treacherously and commit a breach of faith.' It suitably describes the sin of Achan, who had purloined and hidden away that which had been dedicated to God by the law (vi. 19 Deut. vii. 25, 26). Hence, in a special sense, Achan's sin was 'against the Lord.'"—Sp. Com. The accursed thing.—Rather "that which hath been devoted or dedicated." The silver and gold were to come into the treasury of the sanctuary as "consecrated unto the Lord" (vi. 19). Achan's sin was a robbery of that which belonged to the Lord. The New Testament counterpart is the sin of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts v.).

19.—Give, I pray thee, glory to the Lord God of Israel.—"A form of solemn adjuration, by which the person addressed was called upon before God to declare the truth. In John ix. 24 it is employed by the Pharisees in the hope of extorting from the blind man some admission that might compromise our Lord. The phrase assumes that the glory of God is always promoted by manifestation of the truth."—Sp. Com.

24.—His sons and his daughters.—"Achan had fallen by his own act under the ban (vi 18), and, consequently, he and his were treated as were communities thus devoted. (See Deut. xiii. 15—17.) It would appear, too, that Achan's family must have been accomplices in his sin; for the stolen spoil could hardly have been concealed in his tent without their being privy thereto."—Ibid.

26.—The valley of Achor.—The reference to this in Hosea ii. 15 is suggestive. In speaking of Israel's future repentance, the Lord says: "I will give her the valley of Achor for a door of hope;" on which Keil remarks, "Through the name Achor (troubling) this valley became a memorial how the Lord restores his favour to the congregation, after the expiation of the guilt by the punishment of the transgressor."

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28.—JOSHUA VIII.

1.—Take all the people of war with thee.—"Though Ai was but a small city (vii. 3), yet the discouragement of the people rendered it inexpedient to send a second time a mere detachment against it. It was fitting, too, that all the people should witness with their own eyes the happy consequences of having faithfully put away the sin which had separated between them and God."—Sp. Com.

2.—Lay thee an ambush for the city behind it.—It is frivolous to urge that it is unworthy of God to employ stratagems in war. If He sees fit to use human agency at all in executing his will, it is also fit that He should use it with its ordinary methods. It is as lawful to deceive an enemy in war as to overpower him, provided there be no violation of truce or other such breach of faith committed in act."—Ibid.

30.—Then Joshua built an altar . . . in Mount Ebal.—"After the capture of Ai, Joshua was able to carry out the instructions of Moses (Deut. xxvii.) that after crossing the Jordan he was to build an altar upon Mount Ebal for the setting up of the covenant. This symbolical setting up of the law of the Lord to be the invariable rule of life to the people of Israel in the land of Canaan, was not only a practical expression of thanksgiving on the part of the nation for its entrance into the land through the almighty assistance of its God, but also a practical acknowledgment that in the overthrow of the Canaanites thus far it had received a strong pledge of the conquest of the foes that still remained, and the capture of the whole of the promised land, provided only that it persevered in covenant faithfulness towards the Lord its God."—Keil.

THURSDAY, APRIL 29.—JOSHUA IX.

This chapter records the stratagem by which the Gibeonites obtained peace secured by oath, as well as subsequent admittance within the congregation of Israel. "This account," says O. v. Gerlach, "is a warning to the Church of God of all ages against the cunning and dissimulation of the world, which often seeks for a peaceable recognition on the part of the kingdom of God, and even for a reception into it, whenever it may be its advantage to do so."

14.—And the men took of their victuals, and asked not counsel at the mouth of the Lord.—"Instead of inquiring the will of the Lord in this matter through the Urim and Thummim of the high priest (Num. xxvii. 21), they contented themselves with taking some of the bread that was shown them, and tasting it; as if the dry, mouldy bread furnished a safe guarantee of the truth of the words of these pretended foreign ambassadors."—Keil.

18.—And the children of Israel smote them not, because the princes of the congregation had sworn unto them by the Lord God of Israel.—It is much discussed by commentators whether the children of Israel need have kept their oath to the Gibeonites, seeing it was gained by deceit and fraud, and the ground on which it was given was not true. Calvin goes so far as to think that they sinned in keeping their oath, but Keil more wisely says, "By taking the oath, the princes of Israel had acted unconsciously in violation of the command of God that they were to destroy the Canaanites. As soon as they discovered their error they were bound to do all in their power to ward off from the congregation the danger of their being drawn away to idolatry, which danger the Lord had intended to avert by giving that command. If this could be done without violating their oath, they were bound to do it for the sake of the name of the Lord by which they had sworn; that is to say, while letting the Gibeonites live, it was their duty to put them in such a position that they could not possibly seduce the Israelites to idolatry, and this they did by making them slaves of the sanctuary." What seems to settle the question is the Lord's anger with Saul (2 Sam. xxi. 1) for his breach of faith with the Gibeonites with regard to this very oath.

FRIDAY, APRIL 30.—JOSHUA X.

6.—Slack not thy hand from thy servants; come up to us quickly, and save us.—Joshua shows no hesitation in responding to this appeal, and the Lord's confirmation of his action (ver. 8), "Fear them not: for I have delivered them into thine hand," does not countenance the idea that the oath ought not to have been observed.

9.—Joshua therefore . . . went up from Gilgal all night.—"Joshua made a forced march, accompanied only by his soldiers, and accomplished in a single night the distance from Gilgal to Gibeon (about fifteen miles in a direct line) which on a former occasion had been a three days' journey (ix. 17). He burst upon the Amorite host in the early morning, no doubt before they had heard of his having left the camp."—Sp. Com.

11.—Great stones from heaven—"i.e., hailstones, as appears from the following clause. This was evidently a miraculous occurrence, like hail which smote Egypt (Exod. ix. 24), and the tempest which fell on the Philistines at Ebenezer (1 Sam. vii. 10)."—Ibid.

14.—And there was no day like that before it or after it.—These words are enough to refute all the attempts of rationalists to explain the miracle by natural causes, such as that the day seemed to be prolonged only in the imagination of the Israelites, or that the sun's standing still is a poetical way of stating how much of the work of pursuing their enemies was compressed into a single day. On the other hand, it is useless for believers in the miracle to attempt to explain how God wrought it, whether by refraction, or by any other mode of prolonging the apparent presence of sunlight. It is enough for us to know that the thing was done, though we may not be able to say how it was done.

SATURDAY, MAY I.—JOSHUA XI.

5.—The waters of Merom.—"I.e., 'the upper waters.' The name only occurs here, but is referred, by general consent, to the lake Samochonitis of Josephus. This lake occupies the southern half of a depressed basin some fifteen miles long, and three or four broad, lying between the hills of Galilee on the west, and the lower spurs of Hermon on the east. The modern name is 'Bahr-el-Huleh.'"—Sp. Com.

6.—Be not afraid because of them.—"On account of this enormous number, and the might of the enemy, who were all the more to be dreaded because of their horses and chariots, the Lord encouraged Joshua again (as in viii. 1) by promising that on the morrow He would deliver them all up slain before Israel; only Joshua was to lame their horses and burn their chariots."—Keil. This latter command seems to have been intended to prevent Israel from using these horses and chariots themselves, a thing against which they were warned (Deut. xvii. 16), and which the prophets often denounce (Isa. xxxi. 1).

18.—Joshua made war a long time with those kings.—It would appear from xiv. 10 that Joshua was seven years in effecting the conquest of Canaan, for Caleb was eighty-five when the conquest was complete, but must have been, from his own account, seventy-eight when they crossed the Jordan, having been forty when the spies were sent out.

20.—It was of the Lord to harden their hearts.—An instance of judicial hardening, so often spoken of in Scripture, as being itself a punishment for sin.

Letters to the Editor.

BIBLE-CLASSES AND DISCUSSION.

Dear Sir,—The remedy for the state of things described in a recent issue by a "Sunday-school Teacher of forty-five years' standing" is better teaching. In this age of questioning, reasons for Christian belief must be given and objections must be answered. The authoritative dictum of the preacher or teacher is not sufficient now; appropriate proof must be at hand. For years the Christian Evidence Society has endeavoured to show the Christian Church that the growing doubt and unbelief must be met as well as bemoaned. The ministers of religion are awakening to the importance of the matter, and by preaching and writing are doing something to meet them. But Sunday-school superintendents and teachers appear not to have yet realised the position of affairs. The "discussion" will take place, whether the teacher allows it or not. He had better hear it, guide it, join in it, and teach his scholars what is true and why he believes it to be true, than repress it in the class-room, knowing well that it will take place outside, with the disadvantage that the scholars will think that he is afraid of it, or that he is too ignorant to reply to questions, or that no one can reply to them. Half the unbelief that exists is due to ignorance; surely it is this ignorance that preachers and teachers are supposed to remove.

The Christian Evidence Society encourages the study of evidences in class and privately, by offering rewards on examination. But where there are scores, there should be thousands of candidates. There is now ample literature for study, and we shall be happy to give information respecting it to any inquirers, or to arrange for the delivery of lectures in the autumn.

Dear Sir,—It is nearly fifty years since I became a Bible-class teacher, and it has been my privilege and happiness to conduct Bible and Catechumen classes both in London and the provinces. It was with regret that I perused the communication of a "S S. Teacher of forty-five years' standing" in The Christian of April 8. In conducting such classes I very rarely gave any address. Having read the portion of Scripture for our consideration, I endeavoured to make the class as conversational, free, and home-like as possible; invited remarks of any kind fairly arising out of, or bearing upon, the lesson, holding the reins so in hand as to prevent the conversation running wild, or becoming unmanageable.

I considered the principal objects of a Bible-class were, not to teach the elements of "The Gospel Message," which had, doubtless, been iterated in the ears of the members in the ordinary Sunday-school classes, till they had, probably, ceased to possess either much novelty or much attraction, but to lead on to a comprehensive knowledge of "the glorious Gospel of the blessed God"; to aid in all spiritual difficulties; to establish the young people in the truth; and to bring them to personal consecration to Christ.

Let me give you one illustration which just occurs to my mind. One Sunday a most intelligent and thoughtful youth expressed his doubts as to the truth of Christianity. I spoke a few kindly words and advised him to read one or two books in the library, which I specified. After the lapse of some considerable time, and circumstances had separated us many miles, he referred in one of his letters to the Sunday in question, and said that had I done as, he remarked, some others would have done, pooh-poohed it, and told him he must not allow such thoughts, but must simply read the Bible, instead of the way I did, he would, probably, have become a confirmed sceptic. He has been many years, and is now, a prominent minister of the Gospel, and the author of several most interesting works.

I cannot understand how your correspondent could feel that he had efficiently discharged his duty by ignoring the questions specified as put to him! Had he answered them as they arose it is more than probable that time would not have allowed the whole of them being put; and he would most likely have given the needed help to some who naturally looked to him for it in their perplexity. Instead of which I greatly fear, from his own account, that on that occasion, as he says, "the class in question might be called rather a training school for sceptics than a school for leading young men to Christ," by these young sceptics being confirmed in their scepticism, under the impression that their questions were unanswerable. Where else, if not in such a class, are our youth who have passed through the ordinary Sunday-school classes to be "settled and grounded in the truth," and fortified against the scepticism which they must certainly come in contact with in newspapers, books, associates, and otherwise?

EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD.

Dear Sir,—Since the publication of my letter in your issue of March 4, I have been greatly cheered by kind letters from many Christian friends, and am hoping it will issue in sending out many self-supporting missionaries to every part of the earth.

My object in writing is: I have several friends who are looking out for suitable men, and I wish to still further enlarge the number of such, as men of the right stamp can often be better spotted at their work than by advertising.

I shall also be pleased to hear from engineers and mechanics, who feel it laid upon their heart to serve the Lord in a foreign land, by working at their trade, and by their consistent lives doing a quiet work for Him.

It is most important, however, that those recommended should thoroughly understand their business, because to send out men who are merely "bunglers" would be to defeat our object at the outset. I have openings at present for several mechanics of various trades: also a mechanical engineer, who can erect and do repairs; and foremen in sugar manufactory (beet-root) and glass manufactory. Faithfully yours,

The Manse, Foxton, Wm. T. Float.
Market Harborough.

IRELAND IN THE PAST.

Dear Sir,—A few remarks with reference to your Notes and Comments of yesterday, from an old Irishman, may not, at this time, be out of place. I fully agree with you that we Irishmen, clergy and laity, are liable to take a too gloomy view of our prospects, in both a secular and spiritual point of view; but is not our God a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God, and have not his children in church, chapel, hall, and closet pleaded our cause in humble faith?

I enter into your opinion that while all that is evil has many voices, good is seldom referred to by the secular Press. Facts are more impressive than opinions; I will therefore give, from my own recollection, some facts showing the moral and religious state of Ireland seventy years ago. Card-playing for money was the usual evening amusements in the houses of the gentry, the clergy included. Field sports were the ordinary amusement of the clergy, and Sunday was the usual day for their dinner parties. As respects teaching, can I give a more striking illustration than the reply of an old archdeacon, nineteen years ago, on my coming home from India? "I believe none of our clergy preached the Gospel, when you were ordained, in the North of Ireland." "Oh, yes, one did, Mr. Brown." I was present at a public examination in a large boarding-school, conducted by a Presbyterian minister, to which many of the Episcopal clergyman sent their boys. During the examination on religion an Episcopal clergyman asked a question connected with the Divinity of Christ. The master silenced him, saying, "We do not allow of questions on that subject." A clergyman was prevented by some accident from coming home on Saturday night. The congregation heard of his detention when assembled at the church, and all went off to the Roman Catholic chapel. The old priest expressed his satisfaction, and said, "My boys have my full permission to attend Mr. ——'s church whenever they like."

As regards the nobles and gentry they thought they had a right to the wives and daughters of the farmers and lower classes; and shooting one another, was, especially in the South and West, the order of the day. Mr. Mathias, of Bethesda, in Dublin, was refused a licence for twenty-five years solely because he preached the Gospel. Compare that with the comparatively glorious state of things at present, and can we be cast down while mourning over our shortcomings as churches, families, and individuals?

Yours faithfully, R. S. Dobbs.

WORK AMONG GLASGOW SAILORS.

The past winter has been a most trying one to sailors. So many ships have been laid up that large numbers of men have been unable to get employment, and many of them, not being able to turn their hands to other trades, have suffered keenly. This has thrown more idle men into Glasgow than usual, and we have been able to reach them in a way that we have never done before. The Lord has been greatly blessing his Word in the conversion of these men of the sea. The daily prayer meeting at the Seamen's Institute, Broomielaw has been most interesting and much appreciated, and the services at the chapel on the North Side, and the Seamen's Bethel on the South Side, have been largely attended.

Finding so many hungry men, we have been enabled through the kindness of friends to give free teas twice a week to from two to four hundred seamen. We have thus been able to reach men who otherwise would not come to the regular services. Many of them professed to accept the Saviour, and a large number have signed the Temperance pledge. We have just concluded a series of special evangelistic services at the Bethel and chapel, conducted by Mr. Chris. King. These meetings have been largely attended, and we have had cause to rejoice every day over lost ones being found, and prodigals returning to the Father's house. Richard H. Hunter, Hon. Sec.

YEOVIL.—Dr. Morris has concluded a three weeks' mission at the Old Parish Church in this town. The whole town and country have been mightily moved.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—April 25, John xx. 1—18; April 26, xx. 19—31; April 27, xxi. 1—14; April 28, xxi. 15—25; April 29, Psalms cii. 1—12; April 30, cii. 13—28; May 1, ciii. 1—11.

BRIXTON.—Much blessing, writes a correspondent, has been vouchsafed to the Congregational Church here in connection with the recent settlement of Rev. R. Rew as pastor. There has been quite an awakening among the people, and some have professed conversion.

HARROW ROAD, W.—A deeply-interesting union meeting, says a correspondent, was lately held in the Queen's Park Hall, to thank God for spiritual blessing given on the Gospel work there. Christians of many different denominations joined in the common thanksgiving.

KABYLIA.—A conference has been held at Nîmes by several prominent French Methodists, at which it was decided to establish a mission in Kabylia. Mr. T. Hocart offered himself for the work, and as he possesses the requisite qualifications, he has been accepted.—Evangéliste.

THE GOSPEL ALL NIGHT.—Mr. James Pye (324, Fulham-road, South Kensington, S.W.) has published his annual report relative to the mission work which he carries on during the night in the London streets. More than 4000 calls and visits have been made to the homes of the fallen, and about the same number of hours have been spent by day and night in attempting to reclaim them.

TOTNES.—Mr. J. Crofton Rainey has held Gospel services at Unity and Bethesda Chapels, extending over three weeks; in both places he preached with much power, and with blessing to souls, on each occasion. A meeting was held at Bethesda Chapel for those who had professed conversion or had been spoken to as anxious inquirers, when over one hundred were addressed by Mr. Rainey and others.

ITALY.—On Sunday, April 4, there was opened at Puzzuoli, Italy, the place where Sir W. Armstrong has established a factory, a Strangers' Rest, in connection with the Sailors' Aid Society. The services were conducted by Rev. Canon and Mrs. Josephine Butler, and other friends. Mr. T. W. Darby, 68, Shaftesbury-terrace, Stoke-road, Gosport, hon. treasurer of the Society, states that help is much needed in connection with its operations.

COSTERMONGERS' COTTAGE MISSION. — The fourteenth annual report of this mission contains an interesting account of out-door work, mothers' meetings, Band of Hope gatherings, &c. Mr. and Mrs. Penrose have laboured very patiently and lovingly in this poor corner of the vineyard, but in ministering to their neighbours during the late severe weather both are overworked, and greatly need cheering by the free-will offerings of the Lord's people. Mr. Walter Penrose's address is Costermongers' Cottage Mission, Vinegar-ground, City-road, E.C.

BARBADOES.—In a letter received from Mr. Harold Gering Allder, Barbadoes Railway, Bridgetown, Barbadoes, West Indies, he says:—"I can assure you that if it were possible, I could distribute tons of Bibles and tracts. Will you please use your influence with your friends to send me as many as possible in the English language. Do what you can for the poor blacks of Barbadoes. I shall be thankful of any old periodicals and other Gospel literature." This appeal speaks for itself. Will the readers of The Christian "do what they can" for Barbadoes. Single copies of the Scriptures post-paid will be acceptable. Will your readers post direct to Mr. Allder, and not to me as they sometimes do.

Mission and other Appeals.

Paris.—Wanted, by the Paris Y.M.C.A., tracts for distribution in French and English; also, would any friends kindly send (after reading) copies of The Christian for the use of the members. Address The Secretary, 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris.

Flower Mission.—Will country friends kindly help the missionary, Mr. J. C. Rogers, and his fellow-workers in Mare-street district, Hackney, by sending flowers and texts for the aged and sick poor. The secretary is Miss Mead, 72, Morning-lane, Hackney, E. Wednesday is the best day for receiving parcels.

Deptford Ragged School.—The debt on this new building is now reduced to about £150. In order that the committee may be relieved of this incubus, a gentleman offered a donation of £10 10s. if fourteen other ladies or gentlemen will join him in this effort to clear off the debt.—W. T. Rolfe, hon. sec. building committee, 22, Reservoir-road, Brockley-rise, S.E.

Home for Girls, Uxbridge.—This Home, started some months ago with the object of fitting for domestic service young girls in danger of being led astray, has made some progress, but help is much needed to enable its scope to be extended. Clothing, boots, house or bed linen, will be gratefully received by Miss Howard, Mission House, Lawn-road, Uxbridge.

THE FRENCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY has had a great loss in the death of Pastor H. Bernard, of Mulhouse. He was personally attached to many of the missionaries, whom he cheered and helped by frequent correspondence, and was almost as familiar with many of the stations as if he had visited them.—Journal des Missions.

A MISSION JUBILEE.—In 1836, Pastor Gossner founded a mission in India, which is this year celebrating its jubilee. Since its foundation between thirty thousand and forty thousand heathens have become Christians; from among these converts missionaries have been sent out to North America, Australia, &c. The work continues to prosper.

REBECCA JARRETT was released from Millbank Prison last Saturday morning. Mrs. Bramwell Booth, who was waiting to receive her, warmly welcomed Rebecca, and drove off with her to Clapton. She looks very well, and has materially improved in health since the trial. She was in capital spirits, spoke very kindly of the chaplain, and of the treatment which she had received. A great number of letters which had arrived for her from all parts of the country were handed to her on arriving at Clapton. Mrs. Butler is ill in Naples, and the future of Rebecca will not be settled without her advice. The proceeds of a little subscription raised for her some months since will give her a fresh start in life. Some friends may be glad to be reminded of the interesting sketch of her life by Mrs. Josephine Butler published at this office.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For great blessing received at the great Assembly Hall on Sunday evening last. Pray for continued blessing on the three weeks' mission being conducted by Mr. James B. Wookey.

PRAYER.—For meetings for English and Portuguese to be held in Oporto by Messrs. M. C. Leite Rosas and H. Maxwell Wright, in the end of April. ——For blessing on a Children's Mission at the Orphan Homes of the Boys and Girls' Refuge, Manchester, in Easter week, beginning Sunday, April 25, and ending Sunday, May 2. Mr. H. W. Figgis, of Dublin, Rev. Prebendary Macdonald, Mr. Henry Beales, Mr. G. R. Kirlew, and Mr. Leonard H. Shaw will take part.——For blessing on a mission at Alithwaite, to be conducted by Mr. Israel Sida, May 1 to 17.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, April 17, 1886.

⁂ Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

⁂ Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

Evangelistic Mission—Per C. R. H.: Anon. two postal orders stamped "Leicester-square," £2.

BERLIN CITY MISSION.—From the eighth report of this mission we learn that much work is being accomplished with increasingly good results. Court-preacher Stöcker places house-to-house visitation by the missionaries as first in importance. The Sunday distribution of sermons among cab-drivers, railway-men, servants, &c., is greatly appreciated by the receivers.

THE CONTINENT AND MISSIONS.—Several meetings have been held in France and Switzerland with a view to revive and increase interest in Home and Foreign Missions. Mr. R. Radcliffe and Colonel Paschkoff held a meeting in the MacAll Salle, Paris. The latter stated that the work of evangelisation was going on in Russia by means of some ladies and humble artisans.—Christianisme.

THE MANX AND ENGLISH BOATS are again visiting our harbours for the mackerel fishing. I should be very grateful for religious papers, &c, to distribute amongst the men, who do not fish on Sundays, and consequently are very glad to get anything to read. Last year I was able to supply a great many boats during the season. I find sailors prefer, as a rule, illustrated papers. Wm. Tower Townshend.

TRINITARIAN BIBLE SOCIETY

(for the Circulation of Uncorrupted Versions of the Word of God).

The ANNUAL MEETING will (D.V.) be held at EXETER HALL (Council Room) on THURSDAY EVENING, APRIL 29. The Chair will be taken at Half-past Six o'clock by H. C. NISBET, Esq. The Meeting will be addressed by the Rev. Frank White, of Talbot Tabernacle, Notting-hill; the Rev. William Norris, of John-street Chapel, Bedford-row; Colonel Puget; William Greene, Esq., C.E.; and by other gentlemen.

Tickets may be obtained at the Office of the Society, 96, Newgate-street, E.C.

All persons who believe that the Holy Scriptures should be circulated only in their uncorrupted integrity are respectfully invited to attend.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

President—Right Hon. Earl of Aberdeen.

Over Fifty Thousand of our poorest City Children regularly attend the 180 Ragged School Missions affiliated with the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

The operations include Sunday and Bible Schools, Day and Infant Free Schools, Week-night Schools for Rough Lads and Girls, Industrial Classes, Gospel Mission Services, Mothers' Meetings, Ragged Churches, Bands of Hope, Temperance Meetings, and Crèches. Country Houses provided for the weakly or convalescent. Emigration is also promoted, and numerous other agencies for the benefit of the poor children and their parents. Additional funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully acknowledged by John Kirk, Secretary.

Offices—Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

THIS Society is employing nearly 130 earnest, faithful, and experienced Readers—most of them in the poorest localities in the Metropolis—who visit from house to house and room to room, bringing the Word of God to the poor, the sick, the erring, and the outcast; they also help generally in the spiritual work of their respective parishes.

Unless speedy help is received several grants must be withdrawn for want of funds.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

President—The RIGHT HON. the LORD MAYOR.
Chairman—Capt. the HON. F. MAUDE, R.N.
Secretary—REV. H. BLOOMER.

Object—To win Souls for Christ.

Twenty-three Agents are constantly at work in the Port of London. The results of their previous efforts, made in simple faith, show that they have been greatly blessed by God.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED.

Numbers of The Christian, Magazines, Tracts, &c., are most necessary, and will greatly assist the Chaplains and Missionaries.

The Secretary will be pleased to give an account of the Work either at School Room, Lecture Hall, or Drawing Room Meetings.

Offices, 31, New Bridge-street, Ludgate Circus, E.C.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

Instituted 1772.
President: G. WILLIAMS, ESQ.
Vice-Presidents: A. PEASE, ESQ., M.P., S. D. WADDY, ESQ., M.P., Q.C., and J. H. GLADSTONE, ESQ., Ph.D., F.R.S., &c.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, ESQ.
Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night, and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of The Christian.

MEDICAL COUNCIL.

President—Herbert Watney, M.D., F.R.C.P.

J. A. Dunbar, M.D., Inspector-General of Hospitals; Samuel Berry, late Professor of Midwifery at Queen's College, Obstetric Consultant to the Queen's Hospital, and Consulting Surgeon to the Women and Children's Hospital, Birmingham; J. J. M. Dunbar, M.D. (London).

Resident Medical Officer—Annie McCall, M.D.

Women of education, between the ages of eighteen and thirty, who desire to cultivate their talents for the Lord's service in Home and Foreign Missions, are invited to become members of the Women's Missionary Institute.

Ladies (members of the Church of England) who are adapted for Special Scholastic Service, are offered the advantages of Practising Schools at Addlestone.

Those who desire to become Medical Missionaries to the Heathen, are enabled to take Medical degrees in the London, Edinburgh, and Dublin Colleges of Medicine, with Hospital Practice and Clinical Instruction.

Applicants are requested to call on Mondays, between two and four o'clock, at the Institute.

Funds to carry on this work are earnestly solicited.

Cheques crossed to Messrs. Barclay & Bevan, "for the Missionary Institute for Women," and Post-Office Orders payable to Susanna Meredith, may be sent to the Office, Conference Hall, Clapham-road, S.W.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, and 6, Regent Square, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of Mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others. The applications for admission are painfully urgent.

GRIPPING AND SLIPPING.

Scenes in the Life of a Private Soldier.

(Reprinted from "The Christian.")

"On my bedcot that night I could not sleep, and begged deliverance from my chequered experience; and while I was praying, my Saviour appeared to me in a sort of waking dream. 'Let me tell you,' He said, 'why you are happy one day, and miserable the next. You are always trying to take hold of my big, strong hand with your tiny, weak hand; and you grip and slip, grip and slip. When you grip, you are happy; but when you slip, you are the reverse. Come now, and put your weak hand within my strong hand, and let Me hold you.'"—Extract.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
CONSUMPTION.—EXTRACT from a LETTER.

In September last I received a letter from Mrs. Hinton, of Moreton Morrell, Wellesbourne, Warwickshire, relative to a young man's case, in which she makes mention of her daughter's recovery.

I had lost sight of the case, but on referring to my books, I find that she was nine months or so in correspondence with me. During a great part of the time she took my medicine regularly.

Her mother in the above-named letter says :—"I experienced your great kindness in the case of my own daughter, who, you remember, was very ill with Consumption, and recovered. She continues, I am thankful to say, quite well."

EXTRACT from a LETTER of Dr. K.

"I require some more of your useful medicine. Whenever I have taken cold, or feel tight at the chest, or bark, a dose or two settles matters."

N.B.—Dr. K. has used much of my medicine, both for himself and in prescribing it for others.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge. Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

8. WHEN WILT THOU RETURN?	Neh. ii. 6.	16. WHAT SHALL WE DO?	Acts ii. 37.

A PRACTICAL SUGGESTION.

A Gentleman engaged in preaching the Gospel speaks thus of this novel Series of Gospel Tracts:—"I take as my subject for the evening the Question on one of the Leaflets, such as 'What think ye of Christ?' The Scripture Texts quoted on either side of the 'Question' serve as 'points' in my Address; they are—

1. 'Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.'
2. 'God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, CHRIST DIED FOR US.'
3. 'Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows. . . He was wounded for our transgressions; He was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed.'

"The Hymns, of which a verse or two are given on the Leaflet, are sung at the Meeting; and at its close every member of the congregation receives a copy of that Leaflet as he passes out of the door. This plan is repeated until I have thus run through the whole Series of sixteen Tracts."

MR. JOSHUA POOLE.

"He brought me up out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings. And He put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God. Many shall see it and fear, and shall trust in the Lord." No truer or more graphically expressed epitome could be found or framed of the career of Joshua Poole, than these sentences from the Psalmist. Most wonderful and mysterious are the ways of God in the preparation of his servants for their work. No man can say when he is drawn aside from the paths of virtue and righteousness that he is tempted of God. Yet the history of the Church proves to demonstration that no one is better fitted to help his fellow-man out of any horrible pit of sin than he who has himself sounded its miry depths, and knows what it is to have floundered there in hapless, hopeless, helpless misery, till the Lord's own hand pulled him out, and set him on the rock of cleanness and safety. Could our departed friend, John B. Gough, ever have pictured with such awful truthfulness and power the deep damnation of the drunkard, if he had not first gone through the fire to Bacchus? Could Joshua Poole, and his wife Mary, have been instrumental in shutting up the "Edinburgh Castle" when it was one of Limehouse's many trap-doors to hell, if he had not in former days stumbled many a time and oft through such trap-doors to his deadly hurt; and if she had not experienced to the full the bitter and nameless woes that fall to the lot of the drunkard's wife? Of a truth God restraineth the folly as well as the wrath of man, and maketh the fruits thereof to praise Him.

The story of Joshua Poole's early life is a dark one, and it might well be buried in oblivion were it not that it serves as a foil for the bright and useful period of service to God and men that came out of it. The son of an artisan in Yorkshire, Joshua had to begin manual toil when yet young in years, with little or no education to speak of, and a character unformed—though his father sought to train his children in the fear of God. With an unsettled and roving disposition, the boy left home in search of work. Like many others who forsake the parental roof, he soon got into doubtful company, and found his way to the public-house. Many were the vicissitudes that marked this stage of the lad's life, but he was increasingly constant in his attention to the interests of the publican, greatly to the detriment of his own. He went from bad to worse, now making a spasmodic effort to shake himself clear of the drink habit, in obedience to the entreaties of his relatives, and anon relapsing into still deeper depths of helpless slavery to the intoxicating cup. In one of his brighter periods he learned to play the violin; but this accomplishment was destined to be one of the most potent agents in his subsequent descent. He was in request as a performer at public-houses, where, of course, his drink craving was fed and fostered. Consorting with some itinerant musicians, he wandered through the country, playing at feasts, wakes, and in places of low resort, sinking deeper and deeper into the mire of drunkenness. He married, but within two years wife and child had died. During a subsequent time of temporary amendment, he met Mary Woolham, a young woman who was a local preacher among the Primitive Methodists. She consented, contrary to the advice of her friends, to become his wife, thinking probably to reclaim him from his evil ways. She lived to prove that this hope was but a fond delusion, and to learn by sad and painful experience the Nemesis that comes from disregarding the injunction not to be thus "unequally yoked." Suffice it to say, on this period of Joshua's life, that for continued ill-usage of his wife he was committed to Wakefield prison for six months.

(From Photograph by Mr. T. Illingworth.)

His extremity was God's opportunity. Having come to an end of sinful self, he was led through the good counsels of two of the prison officers to consider his state in the sight of God. After three days of intense soul agony light arose on his distracted spirit, and he was able to rest, by faith, on Christ, as his Saviour. Then the prison cell became to him the very gateway into the kingdom. After his release he proved the genuineness of the change, though a considerable time elapsed before his wife would trust him sufficiently to share with him the new home he succeeded in establishing. He secured work, and employed his leisure time in various kinds of Christian effort. Having settled in Bradford, he commenced a Sunday evening Bible-class for roughs, and also held classes for them on week evenings. At the end of fifteen months his public engagements in advocating Temperance and in preaching the Gospel compelled him to relinquish this class. Invitations came from other places, and Mary's gifts of public speech, as well as her husband's, were brought into constant requisition. Manchester, Oldham, Dublin, London, and other places were visited in turn by one or both, and the Lord abundantly owned their testimony.

After preaching with signal success in many parts of the country, Mr. and Mrs. Poole went, at the invitation of Dr. Barnardo, to hold services in a tent in Rhodeswell-road, Limehouse. Copious reports of these remarkable meetings appeared in our columns at the time. With respect to the gifts of Mary Poole as a public ambassador of the Cross, we may quote the following from the pen of Dr. Barnardo :—

> Her address was certainly the most heart-searching and moving that I have listened to for a long time. Most of the audience were in tears whilst she described in pathetic language her own early struggles for light and life, and the event of her Spirit-wrought emancipation. It was a good sight—500 were present, many of them navvies and rough labourers, fighting-men, costermongers, dock-labourers, and their wives; and as we saw many of them trying to hide or wipe away the tears that would force their way down the cheeks of the listeners, we could not but believe that the unseen but living Spirit was dealing with their hearts.

These services were attended by thousands of persons of the very lowest class, and many souls were won for Christ. In a letter to us towards the close of the mission, Dr. Barnardo again wrote: "As one result of the tent services, two large public-houses immediately adjoining are for sale, one being quite closed." An appeal was made for £4200 for the purchase of the largest. This sum, through the active efforts of some friends of the temperance cause, was raised, and thus was secured "The Edinburgh Castle," which, in its reconstructed and greatly enlarged form, is now doing such yeoman service as an evangelistic force in East London.

In 1874, Mary Poole was called home to her rest, and for some years her husband continued to labour in the Gospel with much success. In 1875 Joshua married his third wife. Early in 1877 he conducted a five weeks' mission at Mr. George Hatton's chapel in St. Giles's. The concluding meeting of the series was specially intended for professed thieves, 200 of whom attended supper and a Gospel meeting. Joshua, now grown old in the service of Christ, told something of his early experiences, and elicited from his novel audience that nearly all of them had been brought to ruin through drink. Five professed to have received saving blessing through the meetings, and many others expressed a desire to begin a new life. Thus was commenced the work on behalf of law-breakers and discharged prisoners, which, in the hands of Mr. Hatton and Mr. Wheatley, has grown to such remarkable proportions.

We regret to say that our friend Joshua is now incapacitated for active evangelistic work; perhaps some of those of our readers who have a grateful recollection of his former service in the cause of Christ may feel it a privilege to show practical sympathy with him in his old age.

OXFORD.—Henry Morgan, of 24, St. Mary's-road, who does good work in distributing and selling Bibles and Gospels, books and tracts, in his travels through the villages with his donkey-cart, is at present ill and in need.

"LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION."

By Rev. JOHN HALL, New York.

One of the most impressive spectacles that I ever saw is many a time present to my mind. I was a young student at college, not above fourteen years, not even quite that. On a week day one of the largest churches in the city where the college was placed was crowded with people. It was a very unusual service. A large platform was filled with the ministers of the Presbytery and of the neighbourhood. They were to do something that had never been done there before. They were to designate a group of young men to go from the Irish General Assembly as missionaries to Gujarat, in India. You can fancy how it impressed the people that had never seen a thing of the kind before. I sat, as it were, upon the end of that gallery, and I looked down; and I tell you, as I saw those young men kneel down upon the platform, and saw the Presbyters lay their hands together upon their heads, and then invoke the blessing of God Almighty upon them as they went into heathendom to preach the Gospel—as a boy, I thought they were entering upon the most brilliant and noble career of which I could well conceive. And they went to India.

I suppose it was about twenty years after, when I was a minister myself in the capital of the country. I had a Bible-class in the lecture-room of the church every Saturday. I remember very well, on one gloomy, rainy Saturday, as I was conducting the class, the sexton came to me and apologised for disturbing me, and said, "There is a man here, sir, that I don't know. He looks as if he had been a gentleman once, but he is very poor now, and I can't get rid of him. He says he must see you, and I was afraid to make any disturbance and so I have come to you." I arranged for the class as well as I could for the little while that I was to be absent, and went out into the passage. There was a man with clothing that had once been respectable, speaking in such a way as to show that he had been well educated. It was a very rainy day; he had no overcoat, and he had that look of misery that you see upon a man dripping all over with rain. His shoes, I could see, had no stockings within them; they were broken in places, so clearly that one could see the naked feet. And he began to tell me that he had come to get a little money. "You don't know me," he said, and then he proceeded to tell me who he was—one of the young men on whom I had seen the hands of the Presbytery laid as he was sent forth to do the work of missions in India. He had been led into temptation; he had yielded to the temptation. And he had become a pitiable, helpless drunkard. It became necessary for the Presbytery to send him home. Charity had put forth its hand in his favour again and again, and there he was, a poor, wretched, despicable, hopeless tramp, begging like the coverless beggar in the streets.

Lead me not into temptation! O young man, thinking within yourself "I am so strong, there is no fear about me," I tell you you make the most dreadful mistake. The very fact that you think yourself so strong opens up the way for the devil and his insidious attacks. Fling the temptation aside! Come to the Lord's side and pledge yourself to Him and be his; and when you say "Lead me not into temptation," move in the direction of your prayer, and God will give you the strength in which alone you shall be able to conquer the tempter. Then you will be delivered from evil, and then you will look up to God, not taking credit to yourself, not magnifying yourself, but saying "Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory."

LETTERS FROM ABROAD.—9.

MONTSERRAT.

We were very glad to break the tedious and monotonous journey from Barcelona to Madrid by a day's rest at the historic city of Saragossa. The one only point of interest on the way is the remarkable rock of Montserrat, which resembles a great group of gigantic sugar-loaves standing in bold relief against the sky. The following legend concerning its formation is firmly believed by good Catholics in this country, where the blind are almost the sole leaders of the blind:—When our Lord was crucified Spain expressed her displeasure and grief by the upheaval of this fearful and wonderful group of lava-like pinnacles. Years later, as a crippled saint was sitting near the spot, the Virgin Mary appeared to him, healed him, and bade him build a chapel and monastery there. By an unexplained circumstance her skin was black, and she held a black infant in her arms. The monastery, dedicated to "the Black Virgin," still stands, having been repaired, and in part rebuilt, from time to time. The altars are bedecked with thank-offerings for the clemency of the Virgin, in having healed various bodily infirmities of the givers. Large numbers of these offerings are sold by the priests for the benefit of the church. One interesting feature of this monastery is that any traveller may receive three days' food and shelter without payment. But few avail themselves of this hospitality without bestowing some substantial offering for its support.

SARAGOSSA.

Here we were met by our friend Mr. Fenn, who had arrived on the previous day, and whose remarkable work in Madrid we shall mention later on. He introduced us to the two Protestant Missions: the first, founded by Mr. Thomas Gulick, is carried on by Señor Carlos Aranjo, and supported by the American Board of Missions; the other is under the personal management of Señor Sabio del Valle. They are situated at the extreme ends of the town, and give ample scope for earnest aggressive enterprise. With each are connected boys' and girls' schools, which, indeed, form the backbone of all Gospel effort in Spain. No mission can make any real headway without them, for by gaining the hearts of the children the true seed of "the Word" is sown before the weeds of error and superstition take root in the tender soil. The priests, however are quite alive to this fact, and accordingly put forth the most strenuous efforts, by persuasion, warning, and threat, to influence the parents against all such schools.

There are two comfortable halls, in which the Gospel, with its attendant teaching, is set before congregations of 100 or 120 people.

The principal sight in Saragossa is "the Church of the Pillar," the alleged foundation of which is somewhat similar to that of the monastery at Montserrat. The legend is that the Apostle James was sitting on the banks of the Ebro, upon which the town is situated, when an angel appeared to him with the command to build a church on that spot, at the same time presenting him with a material image of the Virgin and Child upon a pedestal. This image, "the Virgin of the Pillar," is placed upon one of the altars, the steps of which are much worn by the incessant kneeling of the poor ignorant idolaters. Saragossa may be termed "the Ephesus of Spain," on account of this image, which is supposed to have come down from heaven, as the image of Diana of the Ephesians came down from Jupiter. There is a hole in the wall at the rear of the altar, so that part of the back of the image is rendered visible. The devotee having knelt awhile before the altar, comes round to the rear, and having crossed herself with holy water concludes her devotions by kissing the part of the black stone which is thus laid bare. The devotees, however, are not all women and beggars. We noticed a middle-aged and well-dressed man come into the church, who, having worshipped and kissed "the Virgin of the Pillar," went round to the other altars and chapels, and performed his devotions before them all. He was, in all probability, in some great trouble, and sought by these prayers to the dead to obtain comfort or deliverance. Poor, weary, troubled heart! If it could but hear the voice of the Good Shepherd: "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

We also visited an old Moorish castle, now used as a barrack for Spanish soldiers. The ceiling of one room was gilded with the first gold sent home by Christopher Columbus; and that of another was embellished with a yoke and loop, symbolic and commemorative of the union of the kingdoms of Arragon and Castille by the marriage of Ferdinand and Isabella. The result was that the united forces were able to drive the Moors out of Spain. Their heraldic motto was "Tanto Monta." Here is a lesson for Christians in Spain, and everywhere else. Unite and conquer. "That they all may be one, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me."

MADRID.

We travelled the same night to Madrid, arriving about seven on the morning of Saturday, March 13. We went the same evening to a Bible-reading, held weekly, on this occasion at the house of Mr. Palmer, the representative of the Bible Society, where we met the Presbyterian and Wesleyan pastors, Mr. Jameson and Mr. Brown, Mrs. Fliedner (Pastor Fliedner being engaged at a meeting of his coadjutors), and other Christian friends. The subject was on pleasing God, and Psalm cxxxiii. led us to dwell on the pleasantness to God of brethren dwelling together in unity. A united meeting of this kind helps greatly to foster and maintain this pleasant unity.

The kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Fenn in inviting us to spend a little time with them at Madrid was the immediate occasion of our tour, and we feel it right that we should give some prominence to their work, not, indeed, on this account, but because of its importance as being in the capital city of Spain; carried on with a spiritual fervour, power, industry, and singleness of purpose, which we have nowhere seen surpassed; with workers knit together in love; with less of human help at home than any other mission we visited; and having to contend with a Romish opposition fiercely increasing just now under a newly-appointed priest.

In evidence of this opposition we give the following translation of an article in La Union of March 16:—

A CALL TO PIETY.

Protestantism, a foreign plant in our country, has for several years sought to plant its doctrines and root its faith in the breasts of Spaniards. It has not omitted sacrifices nor spared means the most unworthy and artful, in propagating its teaching and making proselytes; and what it could not do among the educated it has sought to do among the rough and working classes. Seeing their work unfruitful and their chapels empty in the centre of Madrid some years ago, they determined to begin their worship in the extreme (north and south) districts of the city, and opened chapels in Las Peñuelas and in Chamberi.

Unfortunately, the voice of heresy has had some response in these populous districts to which have contributed not a little the promises (never fulfilled) made by these sworn enemies of Catholicism to the unhappy children of misfortune.

It is sad to say it, but it is the truth, and the truth should never be hidden, that Protestantism has succeeded in infiltrating the poison and venom of its sectarian hatred to the only true religion among the children of these poor people in the two named districts. In Chamberi, above all, they have set up two schools, to which by entreaties and flattery they have succeeded in getting together a great number of scholars, who not only receive their education free but are also remunerated for coming.

In the presence of facts so sad and shameful, the piety of Madrid, shown in former occasions, cannot remain indifferent. The worthy and zealous priest of that parish, D. Francisco M. Hernando Bocos, has tried to remedy such grave evils; but his efforts will be inefficacious and his service useless, if the inhabitants of this town, always noble and generous, do not cooperate with him in such a holy work.

It is necessary, it is most imperatively urgent, to counteract the actions of these dissenting sects, that are ever seeking to sow in the hearts of the children the germs of perdition and death. The priest of Santa Teresa and Santa Isabel proposes the establishment of two schools, one for boys and another for girls, in which establishments and under the shadow of the holy Catholic religion the scholars shall receive a complete education without being obliged to pay anything.

Such a beautiful work cannot be disregarded by all those who have the honour of calling themselves Catholics. The sacrifice that is asked is small, and everyone according to his ability and his will may co-operate in this undertaking so grateful in the eyes of God.

Chamberi alone cannot do much, because the immense majority of its inhabitants are persons who enjoy few comforts, so that it is necessary that we help this worthy priest in the establishment of these schools, and thus we shall have the satisfaction of having contributed to form a generation of honourable men and good Christians, useful in advancing the religion of our country.

The above is a most misleading mixture of true and false statements. The existence of these schools is a fact, but the entreaties and flattery, the free education, and the remuneration for attendance, are all deliberately untrue. The Chamberi Mission has three schools. No efforts are made to obtain children, not even circulars or prospectuses, and all who are at all able pay a little. From time to time it has been necessary to keep a list of applicants and receive them as vacancies have occurred. The Romanists have already opposition schools long since established.

Mr. Samuel Southall, of Leeds, who visited Spain in December and January, testifies to the very solid work carried on in the congregations of Mr. Fenn, Mr. Jameson, and Mr. Fliedner, each numbering 100 to 150; while in the schools collectively 1200 to 1400 children daily receive instruction in the Scriptures. Then he adds:—

Some evidence of the way in which these schools are appreciated is derived from the fact that, although amongst a poor population a charge of 10d. per month is made for each child (the Romanist schools being free). Mr. Fenn told me that in his largest school he had occasionally been obliged to turn away children for want of room to admit them.

This sufficiently refutes the above priestly perversion of the facts.

The spirit in which this opposition is carried on may be gathered from the fact that while we were in Madrid a man was engaged to photograph the children by instantaneous process as they came out of school. The object of this was to identify those who attended, that the parents might be visited, and pressure brought to bear upon them to oblige them to take the children away.

Mr. Fenn now writes us:—

Our enemies continue busy, watching us at every step. They have, we suppose, succeeded in their appeal to the piety of Madrid, for they are not waiting till they have schools built, but are knocking down partition walls in dwelling-houses close to our girls' school for their opposition schools.

The boys, too, of the friars' school have caught the spirit of their betters, and lately in Chamberi, where for years all have treated us personally with great respect, they throw stones at us, call after us, and the other day one came up to me deliberately and spat on my dress. If such is "service to God," what must the devil's be? So we are permitted to have something of the blessedness of Matt. v. 10, 11.

There is no diminution either in our schools or congregation, and there are always some at the inquiry-meeting, and often one, two, or three staying behind after preaching, for prayer and conversation.

Cardenal Cisneros, 55, Madrid, Spain, April 6.

This is a critical time in the history of this invaluable mission. We are anxious to help Mr. Fenn to give a more permanent character to the work, involving a considerable outlay, the special and immediate need of which we shall be happy to explain to any who will come to the help of the Lord against the mighty at this trying juncture. We have no idea where it is to come from, but the gold belongs to God, and the hearts of all are in his hands. We entreat our readers to make this need a subject of daily prayer.

Mr. Southall also gives in his report (Gospel in Spain, March) the following letter from a correspondent:—

Linares, February 8.—I am heartily glad to tell you that there appears to be a good work in this place. Mr. Wigstone has always had a good audience (say 60 to 130); they have been very attentive, and several have professed to find peace through Christ. Last week Mr. and Mrs. Fenn came down, and have been holding special services, and the room was crowded. I never saw a more interesting sight than last evening: in the after-meeting, about 120 poor Spaniards bowed down before the Lord, many with streaming eyes, inquiring what they must do to be saved.

We think it most desirable that Mr. and Mrs. Fenn should be enabled to pay more of such evangelistic visits, to strengthen the hands of other dear labourers like those at Linares. The fact of such a movement among Spaniards as that here described shows that evangelistic success does not depend, as some seem to think, upon having an improved kind of sinner to work upon, but upon an improved kind of preacher by whom to work—men and women having the gift of evangelists, and filled with the Holy Ghost.

MIDLAND ORPHANAGE, NOTTINGHAM.—Among the many charitable institutions which exist in Nottingham, says the Daily Express of that town, there is one which is quietly doing a great and noble work—the Midland Orphanage and Industrial Training Institution at Old Lenton. This institution has now been in existence for a quarter of a century, and has during that time been instrumental in relieving quite a little army of orphans. Since May last, eighteen cases have been taken in hand of orphans left partially or wholly destitute; and in every one of these the happiest results have followed. The Orphanage is entirely supported by voluntary aid; and the committee plead for help and co-operation in their endeavour to support at least thirty little orphans. Each inmate costs about £15 a year, and therefore £250 more is needed in annual subscriptions to meet the sum promised, in order to keep up this number of inmates. The hon. secretary is Mr. Henry Taylor, Jun., Alcester House, Newcastle Drive, The Park, Nottingham.

THE PENTECOSTAL BAPTISM.

The subject to which the Rev. James Gall has drawn attention in a recent number of The Christian is of surpassing importance to the Church. The wonder is that it does not excite a more sustained and concentrated interest than it does. When we consider the marvellous results which followed the first Pentecostal baptism, and the need which everywhere exists for a similar manifestation of power, should we not give to the subject an almost absorbing attention? Should we not resolutely press the questions, What is the nature of the gift, and how is it to be again realised?

It is, however, being forced upon the attention of the Church, and from more quarters than one. There are the unsatisfied longings of God's people. They are being compelled to inquire if the Pentecostal blessing does not hold out some hope of a solution to some of the spiritual problems which concern themselves. Then there is the growing sense of need among earnest workers, for increased evangelistic and missionary power. The difficulties in the way of the spread of the Gospel which existed a few years ago, in the opposition of Governments and the unwillingness of people to hear, have to a large extent disappeared. When we survey the enormous territories which have within recent years been opened up to Christian effort, in France and Spain and Italy, not to speak of the fields at home and "the regions beyond"; when we consider the vastness of the work to be done and the comparative lack of power for its accomplishment, who is there who has not felt at times what glorious harvests might be gathered in did the Church possess her ancient powers?

The interest in this question is, I am glad to think, increasing, and it is hoped that Mr. Gall's valuable papers will have the effect of turning the attention of many to a subject which must sooner or later become the question of the hour for the Church. I would like to refer very briefly to some of its aspects, fixing attention more especially upon these points:—The nature of the Pentecostal blessing, and how we may hope to receive it.

I am afraid I must join in friendly issue with Mr. Gall with reference to some remarks in his second paper. Alluding to the experience of the disciples before Pentecost, he says, "Neither was it a higher spiritual life" they needed. Again, "The only thing in which it was defective was evangelistic power." And then referring to the Pentecostal baptism, he remarks, "Its only essential element was evangelistic power."

It appears to me that this view, which is a very common one, gives a very inadequate representation of the nature of the Pentecostal baptism. While it prevails we need scarcely expect that the subject will excite the deep and general interest which it demands. It will be left to those who are directly engaged in evangelistic and missionary work. Whereas it concerns every believer and every aspect of his Christian experience.

The mistake seems to have arisen from the exclusive association of the Pentecostal baptism with a single promise: "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you" (Acts i. 8). It is in reality the fulfilment of a number of promises, of which this is but the last. When these are brought together what a rich and progressive unfoldment we have of the Gospel of the higher spiritual life as it concerns God's people. In Matt. iii. 11, 12, we are told that this baptism would be a baptism for holiness; thus meeting the first and most urgent need of the soul. When we proceed to the consideration of the Lord's discourse in the upper room (John xiv.—xvii.), what a flood of light is thrown upon the nature of the Pentecostal baptism. We can only refer to a few of the more striking passages:—

> When the Comforter is come, He will abide with you for ever . . . He dwelleth with you: He shall be in you . . . He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you . . . He will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment . . . He will guide you into all truth . . . He will show you things to come . . .. He shall take of mine and show it unto you.

Then, lastly, gathering up all the rest, comes the final promise of power. The Pentecostal blessing includes all this, and the correlative truths associated with it in the whole previous revelations.

The central principle of the Pentecostal baptism was not so much evangelism, although it is implied and inseparable from it; it was the organisation and consolidation of the Church. This is the great idea which runs through the Lord's prayer in John xvii.: "May they all be one, as Thou Father art in me, and I in Thee." "That the world may believe" comes in as the sequel and corollary. The original relation established by God between Himself and his people is that of the family. That relation God is primarily and fundamentally anxious to restore. All success in service depends upon the frank and full recognition of this truth.

That this was the primary and urgent need of the disciples as they entered upon that memorable day we have the most ample evidence. Their cowardice, their ignorance, their selfishness, their divisions, their failures, their want of spirituality, all revealed the need of a thorough transformation in their own hearts and lives, before they were qualified to go out upon their great mission as evangelists. This was fundamentally and essentially the great work accomplished by the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost. First of all, He established them in true relations of whole-hearted devotion and consecration to God. Secondly, He established them in true relations of brotherhood and love towards one another. Lastly, He inspired them with a deep undying love to the souls of perishing men.

This, it appears to me, is the Divine order. Until we conform to it, as they did of old, I do not think we are warranted in expecting the fulness of the Pentecostal blessing. My apprehension is that Christians of strong evangelistic sympathies, on reading Mr. Gall's paper and coming to the conclusion that "the only essential element" of the Pentecostal baptism "was evangelistic power," might go out, ignoring their own shortcomings and the divided and distracted state of the Church of which they are members, and to that extent responsible for its condition, expecting the same power to accompany them, perhaps to return disheartened if they find it does not. I would not stay the hand of a single earnest worker. God forbid! God is blessing their labours abundantly. But what I would urge is that if we want Pentecostal blessings, and I believe they are for us, they must be sought in the Apostolic way. The shortest way to a Pentecostal success would be by a reformation in the Church, by a readjustment of our spiritual relations to our God and to one another as Christian brethren. The same baptismal energy would in our case accomplish both, as it did in theirs.

I was greatly struck by a remark once made by Dr. Andrew Bonar. "Why," he asked, "are there so few exhortations to evangelistic activity throughout the Epistles?" The answer is not far to seek. The best way to dispel darkness is to kindle a light. The best way to dispel the world's darkness is to kindle the whole lamp of the Church's life, and then to keep it burning. The best way to secure the Apostolic success is to realise an Apostolic consecration: "Ye are the light of the world . . . let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

CHRISTIANITY & POPULAR EDUCATION

By Rev. WASHINGTON GLADDEN.

The first demand that Christianity has to make respecting popular education is that it be directed toward the formation of character rather than the communication of abstract knowledge. And inasmuch as character is largely developed by work, the intelligent Christian will insist that our public schools ought to give a great deal more attention than they ever have done to industrial training.

It may be supposed that the attempt to make Christianity responsible for such a demand as this, is strained and extravagant. Doubtless there is a sentimental sort of Christianity by which "secular" interests of this sort are little regarded, but it is not the Christianity of Christ, nor of the Apostles. When we reflect that every Jewish boy was compelled to learn a trade; that the Founder of Christianity was Himself a carpenter; that the greatest of the Apostles maintained himself by his own hands, and most explicitly laid down the law to the converts in the churches that he founded: "If any man will not work, neither shall he eat;" that in the frankest contrast with the great teachers of Greece, like Plato and Aristotle, who declared all labour to be degrading to a freeman, Christian fathers from the very first sung the praises of self-supporting industry, and pronounced idleness disgraceful, we readily see that the interest of a genuine Christianity in the industrial training of the young is neither affectation nor afterthought. . . .

The systematic and intelligent teaching of morals in the public schools would undoubtedly accomplish much good. Nevertheless, the fact must not be overlooked that truth of this kind, to be most effective, must be vitalised by a genuine religious faith. Religion is the inspiration of all highest morality. And while systematic religion cannot be taught in the public schools, those teachers who possess this faith may, without any dogmatic instruction, impart it to their pupils. "It is for the teachers," says Mr. W. T. Harris, "not to claim to introduce formal religious ceremonies, but to make all their teaching glow with a genuine faith, hope, and charity, so that pupils will catch from them their view of the world as the only view that satisfies the heart, the intellect, and the will."—Century Magazine.

RAILWAY-MEN IN MANCHESTER.—Mr. John Waite's labours during the last six months have been attended with the most encouraging results, and, under the blessing of God, have led to the conversion of many of the carters and other railway-men. He has been delivering thirteen Gospel addresses weekly in the dining-rooms at the various railway stations, which have been well attended. These meetings have caused such a stir among the railway employés as has rarely before been witnessed. Mr. Wakefield MacGill, of the City Mission, has arranged that the effort shall be followed up by the staff of earnest workers who labour under his direction. London will be Mr. Waite's next sphere of labour. Communications may be addressed to him at 22, Woodstock-street, Canning Town London, E.

JEHOSHAPHAT:

THREEFOLD FAILURE.

By Rev. JOHN PEARCE CLARK, M.A.

The story of Jehoshaphat's victory gains new interest when seen in its connection, Especially would I direct the reader's thoughts to the strong contrast afforded by 2 Chron. chapters xviii. and xx., and to the connection between them.

In chapter xviii. we have a portrait of a good man, the foremost of the good men of his day, grievously backsliding: in chapter xx. a portrait of the same man after his correction and restoration, made mighty by the Spirit of God, a grand hero of faith, and an outstanding example of godly courage for all time coming.

Let us now consider Jehoshaphat backsliding. Up to this time his reign had been both prosperous and honourable. He had begun it in the fear of God: "his heart was lifted up in the ways of the Lord; moreover, he took away the high places and groves out of Judah." "Therefore the Lord established the kingdom in his hand." "He had riches and honour in abundance." But to him, as to most of us, times of wealth, even though that wealth came of God's favour and as a result of faithful service, were times of danger. He did not relapse into idolatry. The form of true religion remained, and something of its vitality and warmth; but the keener sensibility was lost, being deadened by the insidious influence of worldly pride and power. The clear distinctions between the godly and the ungodly grew weak and blurred to his sight, while the allurements of life gained in vividness and attraction. So it came to pass that Jehoshaphat took first one false step, then another and a worse, and finally a third.

We read, in chapter xviii. 1, that "he joined affinity with Ahab." Ahab's character was notorious: that of Jezebel, his Queen, worse still. Nevertheless, the man of God, the only godly king on the face of the earth, must needs make a political alliance with this outrageously wicked Court of Samaria! No doubt the political arguments for this course were very strong, and perhaps social ones were not much weaker. One of his counsellors might even have urged with plausibility that Jehoshaphat could use this alliance for good ends—that he might bear testimony for God in Ahab's court. It needed a clear-eyed and resolute spirituality to withstand such temptations; so we are not surprised when we see Jehoshaphat as Ahab's guest.

What a sorry sight it is, the picture given in chapter xviii., of a godly man sitting in the seat of the scornful, uttering his feeble protest against Ahab's impiety, while he allows himself to be entangled in a war which God has forbidden, and from which he escapes only by a special providence! He returns to Jerusalem a humbled man, and is there met by Jehu the son of Hanani the seer. Surely Jehoshaphat will never forget the prophet's rebuke: "Shouldest thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? Therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord."

But this one error has involved a worse: the political alliance has led to a matrimonial one. He allowed his son Jehoram to marry Athaliah, daughter of Ahab and Jezebel. The political compact could be destroyed, but not the matrimonial. The evil results of that union will go on broadening and deepening for generations to come. Let those who think lightly of marriages between believers and unbelievers ponder the statement made in 2 Kings viii. 16, &c. "Jehoram, the son of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah . . . reigned eight years in Jerusalem. He walked in the way of the kings of Israel, as did the house of Ahab; for the daughter of Ahab was his wife, and he did evil in the sight of the Lord." Of his son Ahaziah, who succeeded him, it is written, (2 Kings viii. 27) that "he walked in the way of the house of Ahab, and did evil in the sight of the Lord, as did the house of Ahab: for he was the son-in-law of the house of Ahab." In consequence of his connection with that house he is slain by Jehu only a year after his coronation. But even here, at the third generation, the awful results of that one ungodly alliance do not end. Athaliah, his mother, seizes the throne, destroying all the seed royal, except Joash, and holds it for six years. It would be difficult to imagine what national degradation resulted from her rule, and from those of her son and husband, whose policy she shaped.

Nevertheless, there is a bright lesson of hope and charity hidden in this sad tale. Good men err now as they did then. These errors sometimes bring lifelong—and far more than lifelong—consequences, as in Jehoshaphat's case. They cannot undo the past. Is there then no hope—no lifting up for such? Sometimes, when one who has been a leader and a stay falls into error and sin, his brethren are apt to say, "Well, his testimony for Christ is ended." He himself is ready to long for death, thinking that his sin has forfeited the privilege of future service. But these two chapters (xviii. and xx.) show what a glorious lifting up there may be for the fallen children of God—how the very man who must reap the bitter fruit of former sin to the end of life may yet shine forth as a hero, made great and noble by the Spirit of God.

It is instructive to notice the transition from chapter xviii. to chapter xx.,—from backsliding to glory. It is not sudden or startling, but orderly and natural. The connection is chapter xix., a short ladder of three steps. First, there is reproof, by the mouth of Jehu the prophet; then repentance, not expressly stated, but permeating the whole passage; last of all comes reparation. Imitating their king, and dependent on him, the people had declined from the ways of the Lord. Jehoshaphat, therefore, "went out again through the people, from Beer-sheba to Mount Ephraim, and brought them back unto the Lord God of their fathers." Also, he set judges in the land, and Levites, priests and elders, "for the judgment of the Lord, and for controversies," charging them to act "in the fear of the Lord, faithfully, and with a perfect heart." He refused to settle down slothfully just where his sin had left him, as some do who profess penitence. He roused himself to undo as far as he could the evil effect of past neglect and wrongdoing. Had his repentance been shallow, or easygoing, the awful crisis described in chapter xx. would have found him quite unprepared.

One other fact should be noticed, and a solemn and humbling fact it is. We have seen that Jehoshaphat's besetting sin was a strong desire to be on good terms with pleasant and powerful neighbours. He could not easily stand alone for God and for conscience. Hence his double sin—his political and matrimonial alliances with the house of Ahab. We have also seen how discipline, reproof, and repentance followed; and chapter xx. goes on to tell what spiritual blessing and what shining forth of the very glory of God resulted from that repentance. If the story had ended just here, we should have said there was little danger of that good man's falling again through his old weakness. He has been made to feel the evil consequences of his sin, has been so solemnly warned and corrected, has sought God so sincerely, is so zealous for good, and so strong in faith, that we need have no fear about Jehoshaphat. He has passed through so much, and is so changed for the better, that he is living on quite a different level of life.

"Surely there is little danger of my falling again into that familiar sin! I have been so corrected and warned: I have been awakened to seek God so earnestly: I have now such a bright experience of his goodness, that I am now living on quite a new level of life. There is little danger of my falling again!" Reader, have you never heard your heart speaking to you like this? It is written, "He that trusteth his own heart is a fool." This is true, even though that heart be a corrected, disciplined, and renewed heart.

Our story gives a terrible emphasis to this statement. In chapter xx., 35th verse, we read: "And after this did Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, join himself with Ahaziah, king of Israel, who did very wickedly: and he joined himself with him to make ships to go to Tarshish: and they made the ships in Ezion-gaber. Then Eliezer . . . . prophesied against Jehoshaphat, saying, Because thou hast joined thyself with Ahaziah, the Lord hath broken thy works. And the ships were broken that they were not able to go to Tarshish."

"Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed." Well may we pray: "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting."

THE CANADIAN NORTH-WEST.

Dear Sir,—Fourteen years ago, in the city of Montreal, I volunteered to begin a mission at the North-west corner of Lake Superior, where Port Arthur is now situated. Ten years since I was sent to this new North-west, and during these years I have had a great variety of experience among the new people coming to make homes for themselves. I have become more and more convinced that there is an important future for this country, and that it is destined to become the home of millions of strong, energetic, and, I trust, Christian people.

I feel it to be my duty to make this new and promising country the place of my life work. God seems to be opening up my way to begin the development of our "Mountain View Home, Model Prairie Farm, Orphans' Refuge, and Evangelistic Centre." This new farm consists of 1280 acres of beautiful land, situated in full view of Riding Mountain, and close to a new country town on the line of the M. & N.-Western railroad, and situated about 130 miles west of Winnipeg. The land was very carefully selected about six years since, and now the time seems to have come when it should begin to be devoted to the good work for which it was selected.

I want two or three young men to aid me in commencing the good work. Summer-time will be largely devoted to agriculture, horticulture, and the care of animals; also to evangelistic work, especially on Sabbath days, in the country about, where there is large room for usefulness. Winters will be devoted to evangelistic work in the new villages and country places, to educational work, and various industries. If two or three good young men, who can aid in evangelistic work, and who would like to help in developing the "Home," will write to me, I shall be pleased to give them all necessary information. There is a fine field of usefulness opening up in this new land for young people of the right sort, and whose minds and hearts are anxious to do something to bring the world to Christ as our Lord and Master.

PRISCILLA FOULKES' WILL.

A TRUE STORY.

You would like to know how I was brought to the Lord? Well, I will tell you, for it is not a very long story, but it is a blessed one to me. One hot day in June I was sitting on my stool in our back office, and wondering if I was to go on much longer living a dingy drab sort of life, in a smoke-dried office, which measured about twelve feet square, and hoping against hope for some break in the monotony of my life, even if the break were to come in the form of an acceptable rise in my "screw," when our governor bustled into the office and threw a bundle of papers before me.

"There, Thompson," he said, in his short, hurried way, "look through that, and let me have the chief points and provisions. Do it at once, as I'm going up there early to-morrow."

It was only the copy of a will, and I set to work in that mechanical way that becomes habitual to those who, like myself, spend year after year in copying out deeds and forms, and wills and marriage settlements, and get no richer or happier in doing it. There is not much romance in the life of a lawyer's clerk, and I felt especially unromantic when "the last will and testament of Priscilla Foulkes" was thrown upon my desk. Something in the name seemed to grate, and I was tired and altogether out of sorts. As I ran my eyes over the closely-written pages, new words—unfamiliar words—began to make themselves felt in me: "By God's mercy"—"In the power of his name"—"His free gift of life by his Son"—"I give in his name for his sake." What did they mean? I wrote on; but my thoughts were disturbed ones—the whole tenor of the will before me was one of devout thankfulness to and reverence for "his name," to whom Priscilla Foulkes ascribed all her prosperity and joy in life, and her confidence in death.

I finished my work, and I went home to my lodgings, but I took a companion with me. As I trudged past the shops and offices on my way, I paused before a second-hand book store in Holborn, and, seeing a copy of the Bible lying on a stall in front, and marked 6d., I went in boldly and purchased the book. I felt half-ashamed that I had done so, thrust it into my pocket, and hurried out. During my frugal tea I read—yes, I read the Bible! If any of my scoffing friends of our "Free Thought and Culture of Reason" Club could have seen me, they would at once have struck my name off their roll. But I was alone. Yet I felt I was not alone—a new presence, the sense of something I had never known before, filled my soul, and I kept repeating the words "Free gift." A gift was so opposed to my philosophical religion, that this was the one thought that stuck by me.

With this thought in my mind, I turned the pages of the Book, when my eye was arrested by the words: "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. vi. 23). So, then, this was it! Death or life. And what was it that fastened the words and their truth so persistently upon me? I could not get rid of them, if I dared; I could not sleep, but all night paced my room, or read the Book, and when morning broke, I was like one reft of his senses. I did not go to Parchment-row that day, for I was not able; nor for many days. Worn and torn by doubts, I was struggling into life, alone with God. Yes, with God; though I did not know it. Oh, that scoffers and such like could but know the awfulness of being shut up with God in spirit! Without the aid of any second person, without teacher, guide or comforter of earth, I was experiencing the new birth. "Himself had done it." The reading of a will had, by the conviction of the Holy Spirit, shown me I was a sinner. The same Spirit was, silently, leading me to my Saviour.

I did not go back to Parchment-row to stay, for during my long illness I yielded myself to my rightful Master, and when I sought out the children of God in a mission-room hard by, they took my hand, and I was led through green pastures. "Happy," did you say? I should think I am, for I'm working in his name, and He's used me to snatch two of the members of the F. and C. R. club from the miseries of free-thinking to Himself. Yes, as you say, I was plucked from the depths, and "Himself hath done it." M. Butler Gerds.

MONTE CARLO.—A TERRIBLE STORY.

By LADY SEBRIGHT.

If everyone who comes to spend a winter holiday along the Riviera would make public any evil results arising from the gambling-saloons of Monte Carlo that come to his or her personal knowledge, I think the moral sense of Europe would speedily suppress that hot-bed of vice and misery. It is in furtherance of such an idea that I venture to trespass on your space, with the following terrible story. Several times during may stay here, I had heard rumours of suicides and other tragedies taking place at Monte Carlo, but whenever I made inquiries I was met with contradictions, and almost contemptuous questions as to whether I believed in such highly-coloured episodes.

But about three weeks ago, as I was standing on the platform saying good-bye to Colonel Paschkoff and his family, who had been my kind hosts during my stay here at Château Scott, I was asked by a Christian doctor if I would go and see a poor woman at the hospital, who had been rescued, insensible, from the sea, late the night before, having thrown herself in with the intention of drowning herself. He told me that her resolution to commit suicide was so determined that, as soon as she had strength to get up out of her bed the following morning, she had threatened and attempted to throw herself out of the window, and had consequently been put in the cell "des fous furieux." She had absolutely refused to give her name or any particulars about herself, and the doctor ended his account by saying that he was not sure whether she were not a mad woman whom it might be dangerous to leave me alone with. I told him that I was not afraid, and begged that I might be allowed to go in alone, my only chance of being any good to her. For the first hour or more after I had seen her she refused to open her lips, and all that I could make out was that she was apparently a middle-aged lady in great trouble of mind. I sat by her bed-side for nearly five hours of real spiritual conflict, but after a great deal of sympathy and prayer, she softened sufficiently to tell me her nationality, name and history, the following particulars of which will I think interest your readers.

She is a widow, well born, and in good circumstances. About five months ago she heard that large fortunes were to be made at Monte Carlo, and she was foolish enough to come there, with all the money she could command, which she partly lost herself and partly confided to an English clergyman to stake for her, as he told her that he had a certain system for winning, from the proceeds of which he would give her so much every night. I need not say that he lost it all, and the poor lady then resolved to destroy herself. She first attempted to do so at the Grand Hôtel, Monte Carlo, where she had been staying for five months, by taking chloroform, but they broke into her room when she was already insensible, and restored her to consciousness. That night she opened a vein in her arm, and very nearly bled to death, but the Monte Carlo doctors again restored her, and then she was requested to leave the place after two other attempts at suicide, by endeavouring to throw herself out of the window and into the sea. She had paid everything at the hotel, where she had lived very extravagantly, up to a recent date, and she owed at the time I speak of about £40. Against this debt they retained three valuable rings, besides her wedding-ring, and sent her away with a first-class ticket for Geneva, accompanied by her maid. Apparently so long as she did not actually kill herself on the premises, they did not in the least mind turning out on the world an absolutely desperate woman, who openly announced that she meant to destroy herself at the first opportunity.

She travelled no further than Cannes, from where she sent away her maid, and proceeded to buy a sufficient amount of chloroform to have killed several people, but by God's goodness this again missed its effect. As a last resource she flung herself into the sea late one night, and was rescued by the "agents de police," and taken to the hospital in a state of insensibility. The greatest difficulty since has been to persuade her to endure the life that she has so disgraced, by her gambling and attempted crime of self-destruction. Her state of insensibility, recklessness, and unrepentance, has been very hard to deal with. But she is now able to thank God for having saved her from the awful sin of suicide, and I would ask your prayers that He who has so mercifully preserved her life these six times, will give the new birth to her soul, and enable her by his Holy Spirit to consecrate that life to his service. Alas! she has told me since that she was a very zealous professor of religion, and a preacher of the Gospel, and a teacher in a Sunday-school, having in fact built a church by her own exertions.

What I want to call public attention to just now, when every local paper is teeming with such baits as the names of people who have won largely at Monte Carlo, is the other side of the picture, in which we see a lady of birth, education, abilities, and intelligence above the average, and of an age to know what she was about, reduced to such straits by the passion for gambling and by the facilities for indulging that passion which Monte Carlo supplies. In England, Christians are waging a gallant warfare against drink and immorality. Out here along these beautiful shores of the Mediterranean, at Monte Carlo, which God has created a Paradise and man a hell, it seems to me that all should combine to put down that fatal institution, where men and women lose their money, their characters, and often their lives and their souls. Should we not all unite in earnest prayer, if we can do nothing else, that God will sweep away this abomination? Alas! many Christians seem to think there is nothing wrong in going to enjoy the music and the flowers of that beautiful place, countenancing the evil by their presence, and not recognising that every leaf, so to speak, is stained with human blood. If this true story of an almost lost woman, washed to my feet by this blue sea that I might win her back to life and hope for that Master whose servant I am, could but stop one man or woman from putting their foot as a careless visitor inside the precincts of Monte Carlo, I shall not have written in vain. I should add that except for the gambling, my poor friend is a perfectly respectable, moral woman, according to the world's views, and that the truth of what I have written can be vouched for by my sister, Hon. Lady Murray, my host, Mr. R. C. L. Bevan, and others.

To turn from so sad a subject, you will be glad to hear that we have had during my stay here something very like a revival, both among the French and among the English. I have been asked to hold drawing-room meetings for English visitors in private houses, and in several of the large hotels, both in the afternoon and evenings. And these meetings have been crowded; as many as three or four hundred of the upper class English of both sexes and all religions have come to hear the simple Gospel message, and some have shown their deep anxiety of soul by letters and by personal interviews. The good work has extended to Nice and San Remo, where I was asked to speak, and I have had besides crowded French meetings for the poor Roman Catholic peasants, out of which I know myself of two souls that have been born again, and are now rejoicing in the Lord. May God bless the work done, and keep the young converts walking near Himself.

ROME, THE MURDERESS.

In these days of pseudo-liberalism, it is just as well that we have actual proof supplied by herself that Rome is unaltered and unalterable, drunk with and thirsting for the blood of God's saints. The following is translated from a Roman Catholic periodical, entitled La Bandera Catolica (The Catholic Banner), printed in Barcelona, and bearing the date of July 29, 1883. It has reference to the burning of a large number of Gospels, by order of the Government, in Barcelona :—

"Un Auto de Fé."

Thank God, at last we have turned towards the times when heretical doctrines were persecuted as they should be, and when those who propagated them were punished with exemplary punishment.

Under the pretext of falsely-called religious tolerance, which revolutionary winds brought to this classic country of Catholicism, the irreconcilable enemies of our most holy religion have been carrying out their plans, and have scandalised the world with the propagation of their impious writings. Fortunately, the cry of indignation which such scandalous conduct drew from the hearts of all good Catholics, has found an echo in the consciences of our rulers, who, although late, have now listened to the voice of duty, giving full satisfaction to good Catholics by a wise and opportune order for the burning of a number of Protestant books, which evil disposed persons were introducing into the country in spite of the vigilance of sincere Catholics.

But Catholic Barcelona, the country of St. Eulalia, and of Blessed Oriol, has had the very great pleasure of witnessing an "Auto de Fé" in the last part of this 19th century. On the 25th inst., the festival of the Apostle James, in the Custom House yard of this city, one of the most glorious traditions of the Catholic Religion was carried out by the burning of Protestant books, destined to pervert the tender heart of our children.

It is in vain that the sons of Satan lift up their voice and cry out against this most righteous act, which is but the beginning of a glorious era, of a new epoch, in which the brightness of the Sun of Righteousness, with its purest light, will dispel the darkness of ignorance and error. There is but a step between this event which we now record, and the setting up of the Holy Inquisition. What we now want is the good will and united efforts of pure and true Catholics. It seems that the Government is disposed to carry out our desires, and it is only right that we should take advantage of this new turn of affairs, in order to reach as soon as possible the goal of our aspirations.

Onwards, then, good and sincere Catholics! The happy day of our social and religious regeneration is not far off. The "Auto de Fé," with which we are now occupied, is a clear and evident proof of the certainty of our indications. The re-establishment of the Holy Tribunal of the Inquisition must soon take place. Its reign will be more glorious and fruitful in results than in the past, and the number of those who will be called to suffer under it will exceed the number of the past. Our Catholic heart overflows with faith and enthusiasm, and the immense joy which we experience as we begin to reap the fruit of our present campaign exceeds all imagination. What a day of pleasure will that be for us when we see freemasons, spiritualists, freethinkers, and anticlericals writhing in the flames of the Inquisition!

That Roman Catholics may not be ignorant of the deeds of the Inquisition in the past, there is the following in another column of the same number of La Bandera Catolica :—

We judge our esteemed subscribers will read with great pleasure the statistics respecting those who suffered under the Holy Tribunal from the year 1481 to 1808, when this so venerable an institution was abolished. As our readers will see, it refers to Spain only; we are unable to give the numbers of those who suffered in other countries. We have believed it right also to publish the names of those holy men under whose hands so many sinners suffered, that good Catholics may venerate their memory :—

This Inquisitor established the holy office in America, and in 1522, as a reward for the same, he was elected vicar of Jesus Christ on earth; but so did he love his former ministry that he did not transfer it to another until the second year of his pontificate. He burnt during this time 324 persons, and condemned to various punishments short of death 4081.

In the face of this is it wise to welcome the Jesuits expelled from France, and to suffer the multiplication of convents and monkeries, without even the degree of check which would be secured by their periodical inspection?—houses which history proves to have often, if not always, been dens of infamy and murder? The conventual system, like everything else of Rome, is unchanged and unchangeable. Is it wise to play with this hellfire, as we are now doing?

Let us remember the burning words of Monsignor Strossmayer, when he denounced in the Œcumenical Council at Rome, in 1870, the lying dogma of Papal Infallibility.

A CURE FOR DRUNKENNESS.

Sulphate of iron, 5 grains; magnesia, 10 grains; peppermint-water, 11 drachms; spirit of nutmeg, 1 drachm. This amount to be taken twice a day.

I copied the above recipe from The Family Treasury for the year 1872 (I forget which month in that year). The medicine is there stated to be what the late Mr. Vine Hall (father of the present Rev. Newman Hall) "persevered in taking for about seven months, and which, humanly speaking, wrought his deliverance. He was such a slave to intemperance that it appeared in his case to be almost a possession by Satan."

In September, 1884, I left a copy of the recipe with some ladies near Drogheda, Ireland, for the sake of a butcher in that town, and I give an extract from a letter I received from one of the ladies:—"Your cure for persons addicted to drinking has been of the greatest use to our butcher, who was really killing himself; each time he has taken your bottle, it seems to quite take away for the time all wish for strong waters; it is perfectly marvellous. One of the Drogheda doctors got the recipe from us, and I fancy is using it in several cases."

Enough of the mixture to last seven days can be made up for 2s. 6d.

May I also venture to mention another cure for dipsomania? "Cinchona rubra," a discovery of Dr. Robert D'Unger, of New York. This mixture and all particulars of it, can be obtained by writing to the "Lady Superintendent Medical Missions, 224, High-street, Shadwell, London, E."

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN IN GREENWICH.—The most recent published statement of the Refuge here says that 3700 have been admitted into the Home since its establishment; of these, many are now living in honourable service, others have been respectably married, not a few have been led to the Saviour, and many show their gratitude by visiting and contributing to the Home. An appeal for support is found in its being the only Temporary Refuge in that part of the South-eastern District. Last year ninety were admitted, of whom two-thirds were fallen. Of these, the greater part have been provided with comfortable situations. Those who leave are corresponded with by the ladies who have ministered to them while in the Home, and thus the good work of saving is confirmed and established. Miss Nesbit, 14, Prior-street, Greenwich, is the new matron.

"For we which have believed do enter into rest"
"There remaineth, therefore, a rest to the people of God."—Heb. iv. 3, 9.

I can fully trust in Jesus,
Fully trust the God of love;
So I have a rest below,
And shall have a rest above.

Hour by hour I feel Him near me,
In his arms I calmly lie;
So I have a rest below,
And shall have a rest on high.

Having faith in God's own promise,
I shall reach this rest above;
But for rest of faith below,
I must fully trust his love.

Trust in times of happy gladness,
Trust in times of darkest woe;
There remains a rest above,
Enter into rest below—

Rest, because my Father knoweth,
Rest, because I trust his love?
Yes, I have a rest below,
And shall have a rest above.

FAITHFUL AND TRUE.

A correspondent sends to us the following incident:—

A friend invited me the other day to come and hear a German brother give an account of evangelistic work in the neighbourhood of Berlin. I went, and was intensely interested in his address. He told us of the increasing desire for pure and simple Gospel preaching which was spreading throughout Germany. He told us of the need of workers, the population in and around Berlin being 1,300,000, and the churches only numbering fifty.

Then he spoke of his own work, how he was led to undertake it, and how it had grown steadily from very small beginnings. "At first," he said, "I could not hire the hall for more than one week at a time. The cost of it was £1 7s. a week. The Lord always has sent me the money, and I should like to tell you about how He sent it me one week. It was the night for the evening service, and I always paid the money after that service; but this time I had no money, the 27s. had not come in. I had waited on the Lord all the day telling Him about it. The time shortened, and I prepared to go to the service. In the midst of my preparations the postman's knock resounded through the house, and a letter was put into my hand. It bore the Salisbury post-mark, and I thought, as I turned it over, 'I know no one there.' No; but the Lord did, and had whispered to a young disciple in that place, from whom I had never heard before, to send help to the work in Berlin. When I opened the letter a money order for £1 7s. fell to the ground.

"With a light heart I went to the service, but do you think I could speak to the people about the subject I had studied all the morning? No; I just told them about the faithfulness of the Lord, for my heart was full.' 'The Lord is mindful of his own.' 'Wait on the Lord; be strong, and let thine heart take courage: yea, wait thou on the Lord.' 'His compassions fail not; his faithfulness reacheth to the clouds.'"

BEFRIENDING SERVANTS.—A branch of the Metropolitan Association for Befriending Young Servants is about to be opened at West Norwood. There is a local training Home for Young Servants in connection with it at Auckland House, West Norwood, where eight girls of the ages of thirteen to sixteen are received, fed, clothed, educated, and trained for service, under the efficient care of Miss Romanës. There is a laundry, besides a Servants' Home and Free Registry, at 435a, Norwood-road, under the energetic management of Mrs. Woodford Fawcett, where Bible and sewing classes will be held. An evening recreation room is provided.

TIMES OF BLESSING IN SCOTLAND.

The years 1860 and 1874 in recent times are memorable in the religious life of Scotland. In those years the wave of blessing passed over the whole land. The present year is, in many respects, more like 1860 than any we have since experienced. Various parts of the country have become sharers of the blessing. Let us first of all go to the North-west, to

HARRIS AND LEWIS.

It is now nearly two years ago that I happened to spend a Sabbath in Tarbert, Harris. A year previously, a week spent in the company of the then minister, Rev. Roderick Mackenzie, showed that the Lord was owning his Word and preparing for times of refreshing. All over the district, and in some of the islands, there were souls quickened into newness of life. The minister was anxious to arrange for a season of special meetings all over the parish. How could it be brought about? A people, scattered and poor, without roads, and among whom evening meetings could not be held, because of the season of the year, and the roughness of the ground to be traversed. How could they be reached? That was the problem.

Twelve months passed. Mr. Mackenzie was removed. I was in Tarbert again. Mr. Donald Stewart, evangelist, occupied the place till some steps could be taken to fill the vacancy. Mr. Stewart knew the ground well. He was himself a native of Luskintyre, in the west of the parish. In the south and west of Harris, his people had been residents for three-quarters of a century. Brought to the saving knowledge of the truth nearly thirty years ago, he had devoted himself for the last twenty years to evangelistic work. The Lord had blessed him greatly in Tiree, Benbecula, Grimsay, North Uist and adjacent islands, as well as on the mainland. It was great joy to find that already there were indications of blessing attending his labours in Harris. The people were deeply interested, and the attendance at every service was large.

Harris had memories of "times of refreshing" in the labours of John Morrison, the "big smith," who, first at Stronde and latterly at Leaclee, where he died, was greatly owned in winning souls. In 1860, and subsequently, there were manifested results following a faithfully preached Gospel. Now the Lord was again about to bless. Mr. Stewart remained till September, 1884, when, in consequence of indisposition, brought on by his many labours, he was under the necessity of retiring, for a little only, to resume in March, 1885, at Loch Stocknish, further south. Here he continued with but little interval till September last. The interest in Divine things steadily deepened. The Board School often proved too small, and the services were not unfrequently in the open air. People came long distances, and occasionally from islands upwards of twenty miles away. All classes were impressed. Elderly people as well as the young shared in the blessing.

Rev. Mr. Lee, of Nairn, writing in November last, says: "The meetings have kept up, and the interest is deepening, so much so that Rev. Mr. McLean, their new minister, asks that others should be sent to help him." Mr. McLean takes the deepest interest in the work, and Mr. Macdonald, Catechist, has been once again sent to his aid. The work has been carried on, with short intervals, ever since. The number of anxious souls is very great, and many are believed to have passed from death unto life. Mr. McLean also had the help of Rev. Mr. Martin, of Stornoway, for a brief period, with the most gratifying results.

The people labour under the serious want of a suitable meeting-place. Two such houses are required, one on Loch Stocknish and one at Collam. They need and deserve the cordial help of the Lord's people who are willing and able to help. Any contributions may be sent to Rev. John McLean, Tarbert, Harris, Stornoway, to Mr. Donald Stewart, Dunoon, or to the writer.

In conclusion, may I ask your readers to continue in prayer for the work in Harris, and also for all parts of the Long Island. The parish of Lochs and other parts of the Lews are being moved already. I feel assured there is a great harvest of souls to be reaped. May the Lord of the harvest thrust forth the labourers. Mr. Stewart is again at the work. May he and all the workers be endued with power, and let God have all the glory.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND IN CARDIFF.

The third week proved to be the best in every sense. Some delightful testimonies were given at the noonday prayer-meetings. One teacher announced that twenty young men, out of a class of twenty-five, had been converted during the mission. Another requested praise for a whole class that had professed conversion, and several other very interesting testimonies were given of blessing received. The mission closed on Friday, April 16, with a three hours' meeting, called by Mr. Hammond a "jubilee meeting." Short and interesting addresses were delivered by several ministers and friends, and then came the parting scene, when all who had professed conversion came to shake hands with Mr. Hammond and the ministers. It was a very impressive scene, and there were not a few tearful eyes as the "good-bye" was said.

One result of the mission is the starting of a weekly special service for the children, to be held in the various chapels alternately. Many of the little ones who have been brought in under Mr. Hammond, are very desirous to "do something" for Jesus, and this meeting will afford them at least one opportunity. On several mornings Mr. Hammond addressed an immense crowd of men at the docks. One case has come to hand, of much interest. As Mr. Hammond was crossing the broadway to the meeting one night, a man rushed up to him, and implored him to visit his dying wife in the hospital. He then said, "I was at the open-air meeting in the docks, and I heard you tell of how the Lord Jesus suffered on the cross for us, it touched my heart, and I have been anxious about my soul ever since. Now my wife is dying in yonder hospital, and you are the only one whom I know to ask to pray with her." As Mr. Hammond could not go, he took the man to the chapel, where prayer was offered for him and his wife. The man seemed quite penitent and apparently yielded himself to Christ. It was a very touching scene throughout. One of the friends went over to the hospital to the wife. Now the mission itself is over, but the work will continue.

BIBLE COLPORTAGE IN IRELAND.

The annual meeting of the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland was lately held in the Christian Union Buildings, Lower Abbey-street, Dublin. Mr. J. R. Fowler, who presided, said it was a non-sectarian society, its sole aim being to circulate the Bible and evangelical truth and wholesome literature, irrespective of Church denominations. There are at present about thirty agents connected with the Society.

Rev. John Elliott (Armagh) read the annual report, which stated that since its formation the agents of this Society have sold upwards of twenty millions of Bibles, books, and periodicals, and have received in payment upwards of £160,000. The sales of the few colporteurs and book agents employed by the Society prove, beyond all possibility of doubt, that this country could be covered, through the agency of this Society, with good, moral, religious literature. It desires to establish a book agency in every parish and village, in towns, and in connection with public works. The great distinguishing characteristic of the Society is the colporteur, a God-fearing, intelligent, prudent man, who goes through his district selling the Book of God, and good, pure literature, entering into conversation with the people, reading the Scriptures, and praying where an opportunity presents itself. On receiving £40, the Society engages to send a colporteur to any district not already occupied, and to keep him at work for twelve months.

Addresses in support of the work of the Society, and testifying to its usefulness, were given by Rev. W. Maguire, Rev. W. L. Berkeley, Major-General Gunn, Rev. William McKean, and others.

Y.W.C.A. CONVENTION.

An all-day Convention of the Y.W.C.A. was held at Exeter Hall, on Friday, April 16. The proceedings commenced with a prayer-meeting in the Lower Hall, followed by a Conference of secretaries and workers, presided over by Lady Hobart.

A paper by Miss Needham was read on "The Latent Resources of our Prayer Union." Miss Bradshaw gave an account of work among art students. Drawing-room meetings, addressed by Lord Radstock and others, have been held with much success. Mrs. E. W. Moore testified to the appreciation of this work by the art students. Lady Hobart emphasised the appeal for the opening of drawing-rooms on Sunday afternoons for this work. Lady Hope, continuing the same subject, said: If we want to win young women for Jesus, we must be filled with the joy of the Lord. Rejoicing Christians, with a smile on the face and whose life is full of sunshine, are the Christians to win others.

Mrs. J. B. Jebb followed with a paper on "Thrift." Thrifty habits are essential to the success of the commonwealth. Thrift and self-indulgence are incompatible, but thrift and temperance go hand in hand. As well as the meaning, the need, and the value of thrift, we should teach our young people what the Word of God says on this subject. The word thrift is not in the Bible, but both creation and the Bible are full of teaching thereon. The Apostles were told to gather up the fragments after the miracle, and Paul speaks of "laying up a good foundation against the time to come." Miss Lowder (Southsea) spoke on "Are our members trained to selfishness or self-sacrifice?" A paper by Miss Fraser explaining the effort that has been made to enable members to obtain "Summer Holidays," was followed by an address by Mrs. F. A. Bevan, and the Conference closed with the Benediction.

The afternoon meeting was presided over by the Hon. Lady Beauchamp, Mrs. Menzies, Editor of Our Own Gazette, replying to the question, "How far is it right or advisable that we should introduce young men into our Y.W.C.A.?" said that the Bible-class was our centre and great instrumentality. Other methods, such as the social evening, were to supplement, not to supplant the Bible-class. In Liverpool the Y.W.C.A. often introduces young men to its meetings. The members are allowed to bring their brothers or friends to the social meetings, and the plan has been found to work well.

Mrs. Weigall said that united meetings had been tried at the Clapham Institute. After tea one or two Christian young men have given addresses, and the effort has been much blessed. The Hon. E. Kinnaird said the same thing has been done at the Central Institute. The young men and women have to meet in business, and it was felt that they should thus meet in a pleasant and social manner.

Mrs. Temple read a paper on "Temperance Work among Young Women." Lady Beauchamp told of a servant who poured the whole of a barrel of beer provided for her out in the garden, determining never to touch or use it again.

A paper by Lady Frances Balfour was read, explaining the work of the Travellers' Aid Department of the Y.W.C.A. in helping girls travelling from place to place, by meeting them at railway stations.

Mrs. Bath gave an account of the "International Union," followed by a paper by Mrs. Ormiston Chant, on "Work in our Rural Districts, and Home Study Department." The Statute Fairs held in some districts for the hiring of servants were denounced by Mrs. Chant as a disgrace to a civilised country. Referring to amusements, she said that while we take away the bad ones, we must be prepared to provide good and innocent ones in their place. After a few words by the Hon. E. Kinnaird and a paper by Mrs. Legg, an earnest appeal on behalf of the women of India was made by Mrs. Soradji.

A prayer-meeting was held in the Lower Hall from 6.30 to 7.30 o'clock. At eight o'clock thirty-eight prizes were distributed to the successful competitors in the London Scripture Chart Competition in connection with Our Own Gazette.

The public meeting at 8.30 was a crowded and interesting one. Lord R. Montagu, who presided, expressed his strong sense of the value of the institution, and the great need for its operations. Mr. W. T. Paton's secretarial report showed that fifty-two new country branches had been established during the year, and there had been a large general increase in the membership. He made an earnest appeal that the deficit of £800 odd should be met—an appeal that was generously responded to during the evening. Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe gave an earnest and deeply spiritual address, which, we fear, was rather too abstruse for many of his hearers, though he was attentively listened to. A dusky Indian matron, Mrs. Soradji, spoke simply and pathetically, especially when she appealed that her benighted countrywomen should have a share in the many and great privileges enjoyed by young women in this land. The last address was by Herr von Schluembach, who pleaded with his fair audience to make good use of their advantages, and to witness for Christ in their daily life.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

CHARLESTON, CAROLINA.

This quiet, old-fashioned city, where everything of a religious character is done "decently and in order," has been stirred as never before by the labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Due preparation was made, both of a temporal and spiritual character. Judging from the outpouring of the people, and the general solemnity which characterised all these preparatory services, it seemed as though a revival in the heart of God's people had already commenced. As noon on Wednesday drew near, when the first service was to be held, it was whispered that the evangelist had not arrived, and could not possibly be in the city before one o'clock. Mr. J. E. K. Studd, who with his wife had arrived the night before from Richmond, came to the rescue. In a simple, earnest manner, he related the incident connected with his own and his brother's being brought under Mr. Moody's influence, and the steps which led gradually to his brother consecrating himself to the work in China. The audience was deeply interested, and it was indeed providential that this opportunity was offered for Mr. Studd to open the series of meetings by his effective address. Just as he was drawing to a close a slight stir was observed at the rear of the platform, when in slipped a stout, full-bearded gentleman, who had evidently just been brought from the depôt. It only needed one look to convince everyone that Mr. Moody himself was among us. Mr. Studd closed his address, a hymn was sung, and Mr. Moody commenced, without a moment's delay, his earnest discourse on "Giving our best to God." Although he had been travelling since nine o'clock the night before in a crowded car, and without time to go to his hotel, he seemed as bright and fresh as though he had rested a week. He came alone, Mr. Sankey being delayed in Jacksonville. When Mr. Moody started he had to stand, and there were seventy-five ladies standing in the aisles of the cars. It showed the indomitable spirit of the man that he was willing, if need be, to stand all the way from Jacksonville to Charleston, rather than disappoint an audience.

The Wednesday night service was a remarkable one. The vast congregation which assembled filled every foot of sitting and standing room in the building, while hundreds were unable to gain admittance. The sermon was on "Sowing and Reaping;" and there was many a sharp arrow sent into the hearts of those present that will not be easily drawn out. An after prayer-meeting was held, at which nearly the entire audience remained, and deep solemnity pervaded the whole congregation.

The colour question was most happily settled by Mr. Moody, who seems to be ready for any emergency. The hall, though the largest in the city, was too small to accommodate the white people alone; hence it was impossible, on this account, if for no other, to throw it open to white and black alike. The general committees arranged, however, for the coloured people to have the use of the hall, just as it stood, for a service at eleven o'clock on Sunday morning. But the pastors of the coloured churches corresponded with Mr. Moody in advance, and he agreed to preach for them in one of their largest churches once every day during his stay in the city. This proposition was most gladly accepted by the coloured pastors, and on Thursday morning Mr. Moody preached to a great congregation in Centenary Methodist Church. Upon concluding his services, he went at once to Agricultural Hall and preached to another crowded assembly.

Sunday was the last and the great day of the feast. At nine o'clock the Hall was filled with Christian workers. Mr. Moody preached his discourse on "Working for Christ;" and when he had finished it was apparent that a new zeal had been aroused in many Christian present to go out and work for the Master. When the great crowd was dismissed, and the people wended their way to their various churches for eleven o'clock service, Mr. Moody hurried to one coloured church, Mr. Sankey to another, and Mr. Studd to a third, where each one preached to great congregations. Mr. Studd had also held a service at nine o'clock, with the Citadel Cadets, in the South Carolina Military Academy. He also preached in the afternoon and again in the evening, each time in a different coloured church. It will thus be seen that the coloured population of Charleston enjoyed as great previleges by the coming of the evangelists as the white people, although the latter bore all the labour and expense. The Sunday night service was the closing one; and so deeply had the people of Charleston been stirred, that there was a spontaneous outpouring of men, who filled the hall, so that there remained not even standing room. The sermon was on "Not far from the Kingdom of Heaven." As this was the last time Mr. Moody would stand before that vast audience, he was deeply moved, and his appeals to those who were not far from the kingdom were exceedingly tender. More than a hundred arose for prayer, and repaired to the inquiry room. Nearly the entire corps of cadets filed out and went to the inquiry room, where Mr. Sankey, and Mr. and Mrs. Studd, and the city pastors, and other Christian workers pointed all inquiries to the Lamb of God.

Thus closed the most remarkable series of religious services that Charleston has witnessed since the days when Whitfield preached here. It is estimated, taking the aggregate of the white and coloured congregations, that not less than 40,000 out of the 60,000 people in Charleston heard the word preached by these evangelists. Their departure was greatly regretted by themselves as well as by the people; and Mr. Moody would gladly have remained ten days longer, if his appointments had not been out in advance. The services, however, will not be discontinued; but Mr. Sayford, assisted by Professor Towner and his wife, will continue to labour here during the present week. The ultimate results of these services cannot be estimated; but it is enough to say that they will be exceedingly great and lasting.—New York Independent.

FAITH MISSIONS.

Mr. O. R. Bachelor, a member of the Free Baptist Mission of Bengal, now returning to India, writes on board the ss. Clan Macarthur:—

One of the most interesting features of modern missions is the fact that so many are engaging in the work quite independent of all organised societies. Some have recognised and known friends to back them; others, and they are many, throw themselves into the work, trusting for support in God and those whom He may incite to aid.

On visiting Jerusalem a few days ago I became acquainted with several parties now prosecuting such independent missionary work in the Holy Land. At Jerusalem I became acquainted with Mr. and Mrs. Lethaby, who are waiting for the means of getting over the Jordan, among the mountains of Moab. Mr. Letnaby has made an exploring tour, not without peril, and has succeeded in obtaining the consent of the Chief of Kerak to locate at his capital for the purpose of "doing good to his people." One could hardly find a field of labour where more of self-sacrifice would be required. I cannot but admire the Christian pluck and consecration of these dear friends, and I have no doubt the blessing of the Master will be upon them. May the prayers of God's people follow them, and may they have the substantial aid of some of those on whom God relies for the prosecution of his blessed work.

Notes and Comments.

Having to prepare this number for press before the Easter Holidays, we are not able to acknowledge communications received after Thursday last.

Our next portrait and sketch will be those of the late Mr. Alexander Balfour, of Liverpool, whose lamented death we announced last week.

We heartily commend to our readers Mrs. Spurgeon's "Ten Years of my Life in the Service of the Book Fund" (Passmore and Alabaster. 3s. 6d.) She calls it a grateful record of her experience of the Lord's ways, and work, and wages. We shall refer to it again; but in the meantime hope our readers will buy, and read, and circulate it.

We welcome a fourth edition of Dr. Robert Anderson's "The Gospel and its Ministry" (Nisbet. 3s. 6d.) We have more than once commended these chapters on foundation truths. The present edition is enriched with a new preface, in which the author says:—

> We can have no toleration for the veiled scepticism which is passing for Christianity to-day. Agnosticism is Greek for ignorance, and ignorance is both shameful and sinful in presence of a Divine revelation. The Christian is not ignorant; neither is he in doubt. We do not think this or that: we KNOW. "We know that the Son of God is come." "We know that He was manifested to take away our sins." "We know that we have passed from death unto life." "We know that if our earthly house were dissolved, we have a building of God, eternal in the heavens." "We know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him." "We know that He is able to keep that which we have committed unto Him against that day."

It has been stated that legislation is impending with regard to the employment of women at pit-mouths in the colliery districts, and in consequence there has been some agitation and excitement at Wigan and other towns in the mining localities. The work certainly is not of a very suitable kind for females, and the costumes worn by the workers are far from womanly; but we think that legislation in other directions is much more urgently called for. The women who toil at the pit-mouth live moral lives; it is no unusual thing in Lancashire to find them on Sundays in the church or chapel choir. That their week-day occupation is a laborious one cannot be gainsaid, but as regards their dress Canon Fergie, who has passed nearly half a century in the "black country" of Lancashire, says that he has seen far more indecency of costume in drawing-rooms than at the pit-mouths. There seems to us great force in the remark that the proposed legislation is not intended so much to benefit women as to remove them from competition with the other sex. We should be glad to know what some of our friends in the mining districts think of the matter

The Pope has directed the Sacred Congregation to take into careful consideration the question of Home Rule in Ireland, so far as the interests of Romanism would probably be affected. Most likely, some of the Roman Catholic nobility who have recently been visiting at the Vatican have suggested the step, especially as the visitors were of The Tablet party, to which we have referred more than once recently. If, however, the Pope wishes to arrive at an idea of what the condition of things would be after a few years of "self-government," he has only to turn to his faithful people, the French, for an illustration, and remember that Ultramontanism is just as likely to be found objectionable in Dublin as in Paris.

The priests in Ireland have set so forcible an example of expediency and lack of moral principle that the people could scarcely be blamed if they followed in the same lax lines. It may be that, as was the case in the Papal States, and in Italy generally, and as is the case in France to-day, the inevitable reaction in Ireland will take the form of secularisation, clearly traceable to the unbearable spiritual pretensions of Rome and her illogical inconsistencies. The future government of the sister island, if Home Rule be granted, would very closely resemble a weak democracy, and it has been very pertinently asked: When ever was a democracy anything but antagonistic to Rome?

We have avoided writing upon the Irish Question now before Parliament, but we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that it is to a large extent a Romish Question. And Romanism is, like its father, a murderer and a liar from the beginning. We are exhorted to give Ireland her rights. But are we sure that that well-sounding phrase does not cover the demand to give the ancient murderess liberty to repeat her old atrocities? We print in another column the translation of a Romish manifesto published in 1883, which shows we can only expect Rome to be in the future what she has been in the past: "Come ye, I will fetch wine [blood] and we will fill ourselves with strong drink [blood, blood], and to-morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant." Or, to turn to her actual and inspired portraiture in the New Testament: "Upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus."

With the sincerest sympathy for one who appears to have been a good man, we deplore the murder of the Bishop of Madrid. He fell in an endeavour to purify putridity. The following is from an evening paper:—

> All the Spanish newspapers mention the Bishop's determination that, in accepting the see of Madrid, he would at all hazards put an end to the immorality existing in the lower class of clergy in Madrid—unfortunately only too common and too notorious. Madrid, as a large centre, where their misdeeds might be more easily concealed, has long, it is said, attracted priests inclined to set at naught their vows. Bishop Izquierdo was fully aware of this, and, supported and encouraged by the Nuncio, was cleansing the Augean stable quietly and firmly.

Why this should be confined to the "lower class" we know not. There is no reason for exempting any class, although there are respectable exceptions in all.

A forcible illustration of the line of thought followed in a paper on "Lives in Pledge," which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN for March 25, appears in a statement with regard to the work which has been done by the town council of Birmingham. The worst district of the town has been dissected by broad new streets; the hovels, "which were once a source of disease and crime," have been swept away, and large sewage works have been completed, with, as an adjunct, the establishment of "a general system of sanitary inspection." There has been a reduction of at least six per thousand per annum in the death-rate, which means, so far as Birmingham is concerned, a saving of nearly three thousand lives each year. This is a fact which ought to speak eloquently to those who have it in their power to bring about an improved condition of things in the poorer districts of our large towns, and which ought not to be without its effect in influencing Christians to bring pressure to bear upon legislators, local and imperial, with the view of hastening legislation and labour upon such lines.

Perhaps no finer tribute to the late Right Hon. W. E. Forster has been paid than that tendered by Mr. Robert Buchanan, who, at the close of a long and sympathetic article, in which it is testified that the deceased statesman "had a dalesman's simple faith in the eternal verities which sham philosophy has sought in vain to destroy," says in simple and noble words:—

> The keynote to Mr. Forster's character was, as I have already suggested, its deep and constitutional natural piety. In every conversation we had together this note ever sounded uppermost; and whether the subject of discussion was politics, or philosophy, or general literature, he always spoke as one with a yeoman's faith in practical religion. In all the great questions which modern scientific speculation has opened up for us, he took a constant interest. Books attracted him chiefly where they touched on the great mysterious issues of human life and death. Thus, though he was the most practical of politicians, he remained until the last one who breathed an atmosphere far removed from that of "angry politics never at rest." Gentle, sane, and wise, he looked to a Light higher than the light of human intellect to guide all his thoughts, and to sanction all his acts; and we may be sure that Light shone upon him when, a few days ago, he was gathered to his rest, honoured by men of all parties save one only, and leaving behind him in the world he brightened, troops of known and unknown friends.

Unfortunately for our country this "faith in practical religion" seems to be becoming more and more dissevered from our politics; otherwise the fact that the character was deeply tinged with piety and that the religion affected the political life would not be referred to as noteworthy. What noble legislation we should have if each of our members of Parliament were to practically recognise the fact that it is only righteousness that exalteth a nation, and under the influence of that noble belief became a statesman instead of a mere politician.

Mr. and Mrs. George Soltau and family purpose going to Tasmania in July, where Mr. Soltau has undertaken the charge of the evangelistic and pastoral work inaugurated by the late Mr. Henry Reade, and now continued by Mrs. Reade in the Temple, a building which she has erected to the memory of her husband, and which is the largest place of worship in Launceston.

Before leaving England, Mr. Soltau would be very glad to clear off the debt of £150 on the Mission Hall at Barking-side, which he was the means of erecting there, at the close of his connection with the Village Homes. His present address is 69, Beresford-road, Highbury, N.

A Bible-class teacher suggests that friends living in the country, within an easy distance of the populous districts of the great city, would be doing good service by inviting in the spring months small parties of young people to spend Saturday afternoons in their grounds. Our correspondent asserts that many of the members of her class have never seen the country in the freshness and beauty of the spring season.

"The sketch of the life of James Scott, by the Rev. Andrew Bonar, D.D., is interesting and full of pathetic beauty. Mr. Scott seems to have been a man of intense Christian enthusiasm. His life work, so early closed, began when other young men have scarcely realised responsibility, and was carried on with eager earnestness through the recent wonderful period of religious revival in Scotland. Side by side with Mr. Moody, Mr. Scott laboured till strength broke down, and consumption closed the active, useful life at the age of thirty-eight. The Way of Peace Illustrated, by Fact and not Fiction; Through the Experience of Those who have Found it. A Word for the Anxious.
By Rev. W. POOLE BALFERN, Brighton.
Cloth, 6d.

"The kind of book to give to our ungodly friends, if we wish to put before them a pure gospel message, so stated that they will be attracted to read it."
Mr. Spurgeon in Sword and Trowel.

"This is just the little book needed. The illustrations are so short and interesting that even the most careless will read them with interest, and the most dull can scarcely fail to understand the Way of Peace."—The Freeman.

"Very few books of the size contain wiser or more winning words."—Evangelical Magazine.

"All who have an interest to instruct inquirers as to the way of Salvation will find this little book just what is wanted. The incidents are so interesting that they will be read with interest by all."—Baptist Messenger.

"It is calculated to calm the troubled mind, and stimulate the anxious to follow in the path of those instanced; and is therefore admirable for putting into the hands of such."

Spiritual Power for Missionary Work.

By REV. GRIFFITH JOHN, Missionary to China.
With Preface by
Rev. HENRY SIMON, of Westminster Chapel.

"If anyone wants to have his soul stirred within him for his work at home, let him read 'Spiritual Power for Missionary Work.'"—Lay Preacher.

"This is an eloquent discourse upon the need of the Holy Spirit's influence in work for Christ, and is followed by a powerful plea for increased help to the missionary cause."—The Baptist.

"Let missionary students read this short essay; and let its reasoning be laid to heart by those also who have to work at home. If the Churches were baptized with the missionary spirit, how rapidly the Gospel would now spread in the world!"—Methodist.

THE Religious Tract Society's LIST.

THE "R.T.S." LIBRARY.—Illustrated.

Edited by Richard Lovett, M.A., Author of "Norwegian Pictures," &c.

Each containing 192 pages. In paper covers, 3d.; cloth, 6d.

The Committee have recently been considering how to meet the increasing demands of these days for cheap books, and have come to the conclusion that it can best be done by issuing a series of Volumes, very nearly uniform in size and shape with the old "Monthly Volume" Series issued by them nearly thirty years ago, the last of which has only recently gone off the catalogue. Each book will contain 192 pages; the size of the page will be slightly increased, and most of the Volumes will be illustrated.

The scope of the series will be made as wide as possible. It will contain popular stories, biographies, narratives of adventure in the mission field, papers on natural and social science, reprints of some of the great Christian classics, collection of fables and anecdotes, popular treatises on recent discoveries that throw light on the Bible, together with books specially suitable for Sunday reading."

56, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Visitors to London during the May Meetings are requested to call at the Religious Tract Society's Retail Depots, London: 65, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD (Opposite the Northern Entrance to the Cathedral), and 164, PICCADILLY.

"In those days there was no king in Israel: every man did that which was right in his own eyes." This appears to be the ideal condition which many politicians desire to restore. Let everybody do as he likes, though, like the unjust judge, he neither fears God nor regards man. Not long ago Messrs. Ramsey and Foote were punished for publishing blasphemous and obscene libels upon God. A Bill has been introduced into the House of Commons "to abolish prosecutions against laymen for the expression of opinion on matters of religion." The preamble declares that "certain laws now in force, which were intended for the promotion of religion, are no longer suitable for that purpose, and it is expedient to repeal them." Our forefathers enacted many harsh penalties and committed great cruelties in the name of law; but are we going to rush to the opposite extreme, and to affirm that the civil government has no right to place restriction on those who, to use their words, "maintain such principles as destroy all moral obligation?"

One who had great experience of the human heart and of the spiritual life has said with profound truth that there are two sorts of prayer "one tender, delightful; the other obscure, dry, desolate, tempted, and darksome." He adds, that God gives the first to gain souls, the second to purify them; "with the first He uses them like children, with the second He begins to deal with them as strong men," the second taking from them presumption.

There is in Goulbourn's "Thoughts on Personal Religion" some keenly practical advice upon this matter, which is likely to be helpful to those who are disposed to fret over that great trial of faith, coldness in prayer. "Let the rule invariably be this," says Goulbourn, "Where you cannot pray as you would, pray as you can. It was the quaint but excellent saying of an old saint, that a man should deal with distractions in prayer as he would deal with dogs who run out and bark at him when he goes along the street—walk on fast and straightforward and take no notice of them. . . . "I will not let Thee go except Thou bless me" was designed to teach us a lesson of perseverance and resolute determination in our intercourse with God amidst all the difficulties by which earnest prayer is beset. It may be, however, that some of our coldness in prayer is due to the fact that we forget to make one petition, that which one of those who were nearest to the Divine Saviour offered—"Lord, teach us to pray." "Ask, and it shall be given you" applies to that as to all other supplication to our loving Heavenly Father, and power in prayer will be given to those who begin by acknowledging their weakness.

Before the month closes, we quote from The Shield the following concerning the action of the two Houses of Parliament during its progress:—

> At last the loathsome legislation which for two decades has sat like a nightmare on the consciences of the people of Great Britain has been repealed—totally and unconditionally repealed. Within the four seas, no woman to-day is held in durance, most vile and horrible, in a medical Bastille, subject to compulsory examination, and treatment, and detention, in order that she may be made a safe instrument for the satisfaction of the base appetites of men who fight on land or sea.

In a long conflict, and with powerful opposition, faithful men and women have laboured and prayed for the issue which has come. For other conflicts against evil, they may well remind themselves of the Lord's promise: "They shall not be ashamed that wait for me."

The Morning Post, in a leader on the action of the French Government in the prosecution of two newspaper editors at Décazeville, has the following remark:—

> The Miner Deputy, Basly, whose ambition it is to convince the world that he is the prototype of Zola's Lantier in "Germinal," has been absent from the Chamber four weeks.

This sentence is unintelligible to those who have not read "Germinal." Does The Morning Post credit its readers with keeping themselves read up in the obscene novels of Zola and his confraternity? It may be right to suppress revolutionary French newspapers, but it certainly is wrong for a respectable English newspaper to give its implied sanction of a degraded literature, revolutionary of all that is holy or even decent, by references which pre-suppose that West-end families are familiar with it.

One of Zola's novels having been severely criticised—to use his own words, "compared to a pool of blood and mire, to a sewer, to a mass of filth, and I know not what else,"—this is his own explanation and defence:—

> My aim has been, before all other, a scientific one. . . . When one reads the novel carefully, one will observe that each chapter is the study of a curious phase of physiology. In a word, I had but one desire: given a powerful man and an unsated woman, seek the animal within them, even see nothing but the animal, cast them into a violent drama, and scrupulously note the acts and sensations of these beings. I have simply undertaken on two living bodies the analytical work which surgeons perform on corpses . . . Among the concert of voices exclaiming, "The author is a wretched, hysterical being who delights in displaying obscenities," I have vainly awaited a voice that replied, "Not at all! This writer is a mere analyst, who may have forgotten himself amidst human putrefaction, but who has forgotten himself there like the doctor forgets himself in the dissecting room."

With all our strength we protest against this demoralising and disgusting literature, which needs no greater condemnation than that of its author.

A faithful minister of Jesus Christ says there are three lions appointed by the devil to stand in the way of a minister's usefulness, all of which he must slay if he would be a man of God, wise to win souls, and clear from the blood of all men. The first is called, "Lean to thine own understanding," and is stationed at the closet door to bar the way to secret prayer and fellowship with God. The second is called, "The fear of man," and is stationed at the pulpit door to bar the way to the hearts and consciences of men. The third is called, "Men-pleaser," and is stationed at the doors of the houses of the members of his congregation, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made him overseer, to bar the way to earnest personal dealing with them as to the state of their souls before God.

A writer in The Nonconformist, signing himself "Anglo-Hibernian," says he went to Ireland twenty years ago as a disciple of the late Edward Miall on two points, among others: the one, that the Irish Roman Catholics had been unjustly aspersed; the other, that a Presbyterian Sunday was a mistake. He has, he avers, been compelled to renounce both opinions. Irish Popery is more and more favouring a Continental Sunday: utter desecration in the latter part of the day is becoming the rule; pleasure draws from families the servants, and a Scotch Sabbath would be welcomed as a relief. The more priest-ridden a church is, the more will it endeavour, by amusing them, to arrest reflection among the people.

It would be well if the disposition to amuse the people were confined to one ecclesiastical order. In recently looking over some religious journals that circulate among Protestants, notices appear again and again of soirées and evening meetings in chapel school-rooms that are wholly given up to songs, dramatic recitations, and comic readings. We would ask officers of churches, in all friendliness, can these things prepare the young men and women of England for the grave times before us? Is not perpetual frivolous diversion sorely unbecoming? There is not a government in Europe that is not dreading changes. Opinions are being propagated that make men hate those who are better off than themselves. Lawlessness takes the form of utter disregard to individual liberty. For churches to be amusing themselves just now, is akin to the balls and masquerades in France on the eve of the horrors of the Revolution.

It is said concerning the United States, "The labour troubles hang like a cloud over the Stock market." In our own land other troubles should be prepared for. The following serious statement was recently made in the House of Commons by Mr. Chamberlain:—

> I was not very long at the Local Government Board, but long enough to feel great alarm at the prospects of the future. I say if the depression in trade continues, and for my own part I am unable to see any favourable prospect of improvement, you will have hundreds of thousands of respectable and honest and hardworking artisans thrown out of employment and subjected to great privation.

There are many thoughtful persons who wish that our present religious anniversary meetings might help the audiences to realise the responsibilities of the times passing over us. There need be no dismay, but there ought to be seriousness. Showy speeches are singularly out of place. Speakers should tell the Church of God what it has to do. We need be no enemies to proper laughter; but the laughter that goes into Courts of Justice, waits for sentences of life and death, and keeps up in all assemblies the modern tendency to a perpetual giggle, might fittingly recall the Lord's words, "Woe unto you that laugh now: for ye shall mourn and weep."

We regret to hear, says The Pall Mall Gazette, that Rev. Canon Butler caught a severe malarial fever when visiting Virgil's tomb, near Naples. Mrs. Butler subsequently caught the fever, and, although she is now recovering, she is still very weak, and has left Italy for Switzerland to recruit. During her five weeks' stay at Naples, Mrs. Butler has been remarkably successful in evoking and organising Neapolitan sentiment in favour of the cause to which she has dedicated her life.

A NEW HOME OF REST.

Miss C. E. Gowan, 20, Beauchamp-square, Leamington, hopes to be able shortly to open a Home of Rest at Malvern, where young women engaged in business can find a happy change when needful. Institutions of this kind are much needed by the young women who are employed in such large numbers in business houses, to whom otherwise a change is inaccessible; and under the direction of a truly Christian matron much good may be accomplished.

Between £300 and £400 will be needed, of which about £70 has been received. Miss Gowan will be glad to furnish particulars to any friends interested in this cause, and to receive subscriptions or promises.

For the Young.

PRIDE AND HUMILITY.

BY REV. GEORGE LITTING.*

"God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble."—JAMES iv. 6.

To my mind pride is as silly as it is harmful. Let us take one or two things that people are apt to be proud of, and see what cause they have to be proud; and, in doing so, I will begin with that which most often seems to dazzle the minds of children, and, having done so, becomes a growing evil—I mean DRESS.

It is a right and proper thing for people, old and young, to dress becomingly; it costs no more to do so, and often less, than it does to dress slovenly. The ruling features in dress should always be modesty and good taste. Certainly it is a most foolish thing to bestow time and money in order to array one's self in finery and gaudy colours, which, so far from increasing the beauty of personal appearance, take from it.

Always remember, children, that, according to Holy Scripture, dress is the badge of sin. In holy, happy Paradise, dress was no necessity. It was in Paradise, defiled by disobedience, that it first became a necessity. Surely, then, there cannot be in it any cause for pride, but rather the contrary.

Besides if you are to be proud of your dress, what shall be said of the sheep or the goat, who wore it before you? What of the flax or hemp in which it grew? What of the silk-worm whose web it was that provided it? If gaudy colours are to be so pleasing, ought you not to feel grateful to the cochineal fly, or even, say, to coal-tar, which furnishes the finest of these colours? If mere colours and fabrics are to be the ground of pride, then the peacock, the pheasant, the butterfly, the parrot, and ten thousand other birds and insects, to say nothing of lilies, roses, and other flowers, have far more reason to be proud than you can ever have. And note, that in the case of beasts, birds, and flowers, the colours and coverings are those they receive by nature; they are their own, whereas those in which you appear, those in which kings and queens appear, those in which King Solomon in the height of his glory was arrayed, are all borrowed colours and coverings; your plumes are borrowed plumes due to other creatures in nature, and turned into what they are, not by your own individual skill, but by the skill of other people, of weavers, dyers, tailors, dressmakers, and many besides. If, when mere pride of such things threatens to eat into your mind and heart, you will only try to think of all this, it will be a wholesome check to you.

You all, I imagine, have read the fable of the jackdaw, a plain black bird, all very well in its own place and station, but who must needs be thought a peacock. Well, he was on the watch till he picked up some peacock feathers, which had fallen from them in the course of nature, and decked himself out, as he thought, with these feathers. Then off he strutted to appear among them. Do you think they were deceived by the insignificant, stupid, proud bird? Not the least; they fell upon him, and chased him from their midst with every insult. Nor was that all. On his return to his own species they would have nothing to do with him, but laughed at him, and jeered him to such a degree that he had to sneak away, and live and pine through a lonely life. That is but a type of what is every day happening in the case of those who have a foolish pride in mere dress.

And God resists it. How? Why thus: If a person delights in finery, such person is apt to resort to all sorts of crooked means to gratify the taste. Thus it happens that young people are sometimes tempted to dishonesty, and other bad means, which you can hardly think of, in order to be arrayed in gay clothes; or, to say, the least, they will often deny themselves proper and wholesome food, in order to indulge this other taste, and so grow up feeble and delicate. Such a course is not only stupid; it is sinful.

Let us go to another thing of which young people are apt to be over-proud: GOOD LOOKS. Good looks are a pleasant thing to look upon, but not a thing to be proud of. There was once a family of daughters, none over plain, but one particularly well favoured. Alas! she knew it, and it bred in her an overweening pride. What was the consequence? Why, she neglected everything but her looks. She neglected study, and was more ignorant than her sisters. She neglected duty, and was less lovable than her sisters. She neglected good manners, and was less liked than her sisters; nay, she was positively disliked. And then her pride made itself visible in everything; in her walk, in her ways, in her looks, in her speech. I will not go on with her history. It was very painful, and ended in this, that, when her sisters had become women, with affectionate husbands and families, and when their greatest ornament still continued to be, as in earlier years, a meek and quiet spirit, she whom we are considering had become a sour, disappointed, crabbed woman, whom nobody cared for, nobody loved, and who, by the indulgence of her pride, had nothing left of her good looks except such faded remains as told how, in her case, God had resisted pride.

What I have said refers to a family of girls. But there is the same temptation also as regards boys. Indeed, the Bible furnishes us with a very remarkable instance of a young man whose good looks were a snare to him, and helped to cause his death. Do you not remember him? A fine young man, his father's favourite, and that father a powerful monarch. Alas! the father's love, it may be the father's indulgence, caused this young man to do many wilful and disobedient things, under the impression that, do what he would, he would be forgiven. Thus he went on from one evil course to another, until, at length, he actually rebelled against his affectionate old father, through a desire of seizing the kingdom and usurping the crown. And how did he manage to get followers? For the king was a good man, wonderfully feared, loved and respected by his subjects.

He got followers by means of his good looks, of that personal beauty which was his pride. Yes, he would sit in the gates of the city, and, putting on his best air, would be very affable to all who came near, smiling upon them, and flattering them to that degree that "he stole away their hearts."

But mark what followed: The poor old king was driven out of the city, and the young man did all he could to dishonour his father's name. Many of the people, however, did not lose all their senses in this infatuation, but rallied to the king's side. Thus war followed, civil war as it is called, that most dreadful of all kinds of war, in which brother is arrayed against brother, and father against son. But God so ordered the combat that the proud was resisted by Him. The young man fought, lost, fled. And as he fled—notice it, dear children—he was betrayed by that of which he was most vain—his long, flowing hair. Yes, he was very proud of his hair, and he bestowed upon it much pains and time. But behold him now, there—there—fleeing away as fast as mule can carry him, to escape from the pursuers whom he fears. And in his haste he rides beneath a mighty oak, whose lowermost branches almost sweep the ground. Hark! What is this? A wail of distress! The unhappy young man is caught in the branches by his hair, and cannot extricate himself, whilst the mule, slipping out of his control, passes from under him.

And now the miserable youth hangs there, suspended between earth and heaven, unable to get loose, and fearing every moment that some one of his enemies will come up and put him to death. In fact, one of the opposing army does draw near, but having heard the poor old king in the morning beseech his soldiers not to injure the young man, he turns aside and leaves him, and goes to tell the chief captain what he has seen.

And so the time goes, slowly enough, you may depend, to the vain young man, caught by means of his own vanity. But, see! here comes the chief captain himself, and what will he do? What? Why he has no pity; the king's word does not restrain him, but he pierces the wretched youth through and through with darts till he is dead.

You must have recognised the picture. Such was the dismal fate of that vain, proud, disobedient young man, Absalom, son of King David.

There are other things of which young people are apt to be over proud, besides those I have named, such as ability in study, strength of body, money, abundance of possessions, and so forth. The proper feeling in respect to all of them is not pride, but thankfulness, which thankfulness should influence those who possess them to use them in God's service, for which purpose they are bestowed upon them. Be sure of one thing: God will always resist the proud. He will always do something to mark his disapprobation of them. Most often, if we could only follow the history of people vainly proud of their endowments, we should find that those very endowments were fated to become their scourge, as in Absalom's case. And to say the very least, you may be sure that the indulgence of foolish vanity is a certain way of helping to render our endowments useless, nay, hurtful.

And then observe the contrary: "God giveth grace unto the humble." Surely this is a gift worth having. Try and estimate it aright. God's grace, that is, God's favour, God's help, God's love! What a wonderful possession! The favour, the love, the help of Him who made the universe; of Him who rules heaven and earth. Who would not desire it? Who would not strive for it? Well, you may have it by being humble-minded.

God's grace to the humble is of special use in keeping them from many hard blows and heavy misfortunes, into which pride is apt to lead them. You have heard, I daresay, of Benjamin Franklin, a great American, who became Ambassador for the United States at the French court. Speaking to a young friend about the father of the latter, he said: "The last time I saw your father he received me in his study, and, as I was leaving, showed me a short way out of the house, through a narrow passage crossed by a beam overhead. We were talking as we passed along, when he suddenly cried, 'Stoop! stoop!' I did not know what he meant until I felt my head hit against the beam. He was a man that never failed to give instruction and so he said: 'You are young, and have to g through the world. Stoop as you go through it and you will miss many hard thumps.' Thi advice, thus beaten into my head, has been o strange service to me, and I have often thought o it when I have seen pride mortified, and me brought low by carrying their heads too high."

This is good counsel for you, dear children, nay for everybody. It is an illustration of the text— of Scripture teaching generally. Pride has eve been one of man's besetting sins. It was so in th beginning; it was so in the Lord Jesus's time; it i so now. Avoid it, I beseech you, and your ver humility shall exalt you. Hear what the blesse Saviour Himself says on the matter, and let hi words be ever in your mind when the temptatio arises to betray you into pride of heart and dea ing:—

"Jesus put forth a parable to those which wer bidden, when He marked how they chose out th chief rooms (that is, places); saying unto them When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding sit not down in the highest room (place); lest more honourable man than thou be bidden of him and he that bade thee and him come and say t thee, Give this man place; and thou begin wit shame to take the lowest room. But when tho art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest room that when he that bade thee cometh, he may sa unto thee, Friend, go up higher: then shalt tho have worship in the presence of them that sit meat with thee. For whosoever exalteth himse shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself sha be exalted."

COTTAGE HOME FOR CHILDREN, KINGSTOWN, DUBLI

IN response to private invitation, a crowded mee ing was recently held at St. Bartholomew Parochial Hall, Dublin, on behalf of the Cottag Home for Children, situated at Kingstown. Canc Smith presided, and Her Excellency the Counte of Aberdeen and her children were present. Th Hon. Sec., Miss Barrett, explained the objects her Home, which is for such infants and youn children of married parents as for various reaso may be deprived of a parent's care. It is the on Home of the kind in Ireland, and many applic tions for admission are received which have to refused for want of room, and the committee a anxious to begin building a larger and mo suitable house, as soon as funds permit.

The Archdeacon of Dublin strongly urged th claims of the Home, and spoke of the benefit it ha been to persons in his parish. Rev. W. E. Bu roughs spoke of having watched the growth of th Home from its small beginning, and expressed h cordial sympathy with the work. Mr. T. Cairnes, J. P., expressed the thanks of the con mittee to Her Excellency for her presence at t meeting, and for her sympathy in the work of th Home. Mr. Cairnes earnestly appealed for he in carrying on the work of the Home, and esp cially for donations towards the building fund.

Since the meeting was held, a friend has gene ously offered to give £50 towards the new buildin if "seven others will give or collect seven simil sums within the next three months." May I ve ture to ask for help in order to claim this ki promise, so that we may at once begin our muc needed work? ROSA M. BARRETT, Hon. Sec.

RESCUE WORK.

CHELSEA.

Two earnest Christian women, who have for many years laboured hard in rescue work in this locality, and have also been much blessed of God in their work, have for months felt the pressing need of a "Preventive Home." After prayer and consultation with a few Christian friends, they have taken a house in, Chelsea. It is not furnished yet, although several kind friends have sent in a few good serviceable articles of furniture. Perhaps some Christian sympathisers will feel influenced to take a tangible interest in this much-needed Home.

BAYSWATER.

For the glory of God, and to stimulate others engaged in the work of rescue, the following record is given of a few cases during the last year in a Home in Bayswater, in connection with the Refuge and Reformatory Union. The one thing that is put before these girls is the hatefulness of sin in the sight of God, and Christ as the all-sufficient Saviour. Some of the hardest and most hopeless cases have, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, yielded themselves to Christ, and by their changed lives are testifying to the saving grace of God.

A. B. lived for four or five years in the depths of sin. She laughed at the truth; but at last her stubborn heart was won. She is now at service living a consistent life, and, what is more, is striving to lead others to the Saviour. C. D. was sent away from one Home after another as incorrigibly bad. She, too, was brought to the Saviour, and spoke lately at a small mission to her fallen sisters, from which two girls have been saved, and are now giving evidence of a regenerate heart. E. F. gave up the man to whom she was engaged, because he was not a Christian. The testimony of her mistress is that "she lives a Christian." For many others we are deeply thankful, who are now living bright, happy, and truly Christian lives, "kept by the power of God."

The centre of a district abounding in such poor outcasts, it is greatly desired to extend the work; but for lack of funds (which, owing to the general depression, cannot be provided by the Central Society) it has to be curtailed. Means are needed for holding short missions in the lowest parts of the district. Some already held have been attended with much blessing. Also to provide a Home for girls who, while looking for a place, have no safe refuge where they may stay. Christians desirous of seeing the work, or helping it, may apply to Pastor Frank White, 80, Kensington Gardens-square; or Mrs. A. B. Stoney, 40, Colville-terrace, Bayswater, W.

SAILORS AT PORT SAID.

Some Christian friends are feeling the importance of suitable premises being secured for a Sailors' Rest in connection with the work of Mr. Eoll, at Port Said. He is well qualified to fill the post of missionary, on account of his knowledge of languages. Many vessels of all nationalities put in at the port. The following extract from a letter will show that there is at present a special opportunity for purchasing a site, where a Sailors' Rest or Mission Hall could be erected:—"The Canal Company are willing to sell me the last lot, alongside the canal, for 65 francs the metre, being 20 francs below what all the other lots have been bought at. The same price has been offered for this lot as for the others—viz., 85 francs. I have never asked the agents to keep it for me, but our daily prayer has been that God would stay their hands. We should need 250 square metres, this will cost £654. I calculate the whole amount for building, &c., will be about £2000. We have found it extremely difficult to hold meetings, having but four rooms for family use, and these are over-crowded with those who come to hear the Gospel. Souls have been saved.

"You may imagine how anxious we are to have suitable accommodation, so that the work may increase. I have the promise of £200 from two different parties, besides a small sum in the bank. I leave the matter with God."

If any of our readers are disposed to help in this very important work, we shall be happy to receive and forward their gifts.

DR. HEYWOOD SMITH'S NEW HOSPITAL.

Warrington Lodge, Maida-vale, is the address of the private hospital for ladies under the exclusive direction and control of Dr. Heywood Smith. It is the outcome of a public subscription raised by those who were scandalised at the attempt to boycott a medical man for what at the worse was only an error of judgment, prompted by the best of motives. Warrington Lodge is a handsome building in a commanding situation in Maida-vale. Loft, airy, convenient, and accessible, it is likely to become one of the most known and most useful of the establishments of its kind in the Metropolis. The house is detached. Its windows look out over a large, open place, close to the church in Warwick-road. On Tuesday afternoon last week it was thronged from garret to basement by a multitude of friends and sympathisers, who without exception expressed themselves as delighted with the convenience, the healthiness, and the advantages of the hospital.

At three o'clock a dedication service was held in the largest room. Rev. Neville Sherbrooke opened with prayer. The building was then formally handed over to Dr. Smith. A hymn of his own composition, full of joy and gratitude as to the past and of confidence as to the future, was sung by the crowded company. Mr. Stead having spoken briefly of the eventful past, Dr. Heywood Smith explained the object and nature of the new hospital. It is unique of its kind. The central idea is the accommodation of three classes of patients under one roof, so that the expenses of the free patients, or those admitted at the nominal charge of 5s. or 10s. a week, may be covered by the higher fees charged to well-to-do paying patients, who can have separate rooms, with exclusive attendance, from £5 5s. to £10 a week. Warrington Lodge, Dr. Smith was careful to state, is not intended as an asylum of chronic bed-ridden patients; he remarked that anyone who had £100,000 to spare could hardly do better than invest it in providing such an asylum. The place would be named Warrington Lodge, and Warrington Lodge only. The name of hospital or home would be discouraged, and everything would be done to enable patients to enjoy the convenience and the privacy of home, with the advantages of the highest medical advice and the most skilled nursing. Dr. Heywood Smith said that the Bishop of Truro, Bishop Sugden and Rev. H. M. Aitken were, unfortunately, unable to be present. He read a letter from his father enclosing a cheque for fifty guineas for the hospital, and expressing the best wishes for its success. In the course of the letter Dr. Smith said: "Referring to the circumstances that have led to its establishment, when the deputation from the medical staff of the Hospital for Women kindly called on me last year to present me with an address and piece of plate on the occasion of my retiring from active hospital work, I remarked that had professional men acted on Christian principle you would not have been so cruelly attacked as you have been by many of your merciless assailants. I have no hesitation in expressing my conviction that you were actuated by the best of motives in relinquishing the post of senior physician of the Hospital for Women, the highest appointment on the medical staff, rather than by remaining as such to become a hindrance to its future success, as you had been led to believe." After prayer by Mr. Denny and some words from Mrs. Heywood Smith, the doxology was sung, and the inspection of the building was resumed.

Every room is fitted with Tobin's ventilators, and the sanitary arrangements throughout are admirable. All the latest appliances for the care and convenience of the patients have been secured. In some of the private rooms beds are so mounted that they can be wheeled with ease from one side of the room to the other. The tables are made higher than usual, so as to enable patients to use them without stooping. All the wall papers are varnished. Arrangements for providing warm water are to be found in every room, and nothing is wanting to the comfort and relief of the patients. The operating theatre is admirably lighted, and the ghastly operating table is filled with all the most recent inventions for diminishing risk and facilitating the success of the operator. The alterations in the building were carried out by Mr. Hughes, of Grosvenor-buildings, New Bond-street, and the furniture made by the firm of Billord, of Great Portland-street. Warrington Lodge, when complete, will contain thirty-six beds. Eight patients will arrive to-day, and there is every prospect that the house will soon be full. Warrington Lodge is connected by telephone with 18, Harley-street, so that instant communication can always be had with the doctor. A highly trained staff of nurses has been provided, and everything promises for the success of the institution, which has been so successfully opened.—Pall Mall Gazette.

[We earnestly commend this most desirable "lodge" to the support which its able Director so well deserves. —Ed.]

FRESH AIR FOR POOR CHILDREN.

In view of the approaching holiday season, fresh interest attaches to the movement for affording a country change to drooping and sickly children of the poor. "Fresh-air missions" have of late been recognised as of considerable importance. Hence the Ragged School Union feel the children of their schools must share in the benefit, and that it is right such Homes should be under their own care, so that in the holiday wise, loving and Christian influence might be brought to bear on the children.

Last year the Committee opened two Holiday Homes; one on Thursley Common, Godalming, and the other at East Grinstead. Both most suitable in every way as holiday resorts for these children, no less than 600 enjoyed the benefits last season, and it is hoped many more will do so this year. May we trust that many, by communicating promptly with the Secretary of the Ragged School Union, Exeter-hall, Strand, London, W.C., will encourage them to go forward in this good and useful work.

GOSPEL WORK IN SPAIN.

Writing lately to a relative in England, Mrs. Wigstone, Calle Doctor 4, Linares, Provincia de Jaen, Spain, says:—

My time is fully occupied in visiting, and I have as much as I can do. The Lord is saving souls amongst us. Many, we believe, are truly converted; others are seeking salvation. In visiting from house to house we have a splendid opportunity of speaking to people who have never heard the Gospel. In every house there are so many families living in the different storeys; they come together to listen; by this means we invite them to come to the preaching, and one neighbour brings another. I have had women throw their arms around my neck sobbing, and crying out, "Yo quiero ser salva" ("I want to be saved"). Some have given up the pictures of saints they used to worship, and have Scripture texts on their walls.

I feel that God has called me to this place, and answered my prayers in giving me work to do, and making me very happy in it. We think of beginning a night school for teaching men and women to read. Then every night in the week will be occupied, and plenty of visiting in the day. We need to be much remembered in prayer just now.

THE SPEZIA MISSION.

On April 5 special services were held in Spezia, connected with the twentieth anniversary of this Mission. On this occasion various Christian labourers bore testimony to the faithfulness of God, the power of faith, the results of prayer, and the happy consequences of Christian union so manifested in the planting of the Mission, and in its stability and progress, even in the hours of trial and opposition.

The twenty years which have elapsed since the enterprise was begun by Mr. Clarke have been a most remarkable testimony to the power, wisdom, and love of God, which have overruled the most varied opposing elements for the strengthening of the Mission. Thus sustained during these two decades in its various undertakings for the good of Italy, it has received most remarkable fulfilments of the prayers of its friends. Very few of its agents have fallen on the field by death during this period, though many of its once noble supporters in Britain have been called to their reward. God has thus far raised up others whose energies are still directed to the sustenation and extension of the work; and, as the needs of the Mission are by no means lessening, but greatly augmenting, it is devoutly to be hoped that fresh supplies equal to the needs will continue to flow in, and that these be ever accompanied with ever-increasing prayer.

CORNWALL.—Miss North, of Axminster, has conducted a three weeks' mission in the Bible Christian Chapel, Looe, which, through the Divine blessing, has proved a great success. The addresses and Bible-readings were brimful of Gospel truth, put in a very attractive and impressive manner, and she drew a crowded congregation at each service. T. C. Jacob, Minister.

CHRIST WHO LIVES.

I LOVE to think of a Christ who lives!
Whose sorrows and griefs are o'er:
I love to think that beneath his feet
Is the cruel crown He wore.
He hangs not now on the lifted tree,
Nor sleeps in the silent grave:
He lives! and often his face I see,
As he bids my heart be brave.

Softly I say to myself, "He lives!"
I know it was well He died;
I know it was death that atoned for sin,
And brought me to his dear side:
But glad am I that I gaze not now
On a sad and weary face;
Nor wipe the blood from an icy brow,
So marred by the world's disgrace.

I love to think of a Christ who lives!
I gaze on his open side;
But, oh! it is joy that a living heart
Thence poureth love's living tide.
I gaze on the eyes once dim in death—
They beam with a light Divine.
While I seem to feel his vital breath,
As He tells me He is mine.

He lives! 'tis a living Christ we serve,
'Tis a living Christ we love;
Who took our flesh, with its wounds and scars,
To the Royal Court above.
He lives, and knoweth each pressing need,
And sympathy sweetly gives:
He lives who died. Oh! 'tis joy, indeed.
To think of a Christ who lives.

MR. RADCLIFFE AT THE STRANGERS' REST.

ON Friday, the 16th instant, a number of friends gathered at the "Rest" to meet Mr. Reginald Radcliffe. Various missions were represented by those who are actively engaged in different spheres of the Lord's work. After conversation and tea, Mr. Radcliffe announced that, although the ostensible aim of the meeting was to pray for missions and mission work, he was strongly impressed with the importance of prayer for blessing upon the workers as individuals first. With so many calls hither and thither, it is often difficult to get alone with God, and yet no work can be possessed of real spiritual power without this. Our Lord made this clear by his occasional withdrawal of Himself and his disciples from the activity in which they moved.

The first portion of the meeting was accordingly devoted to prayer of an exclusively personal character, which was felt to be a season of heart-searching and blessing. A large number engaged in earnest prayer, some more than once. Afterwards followed supplication on behalf of all missionary service for the Lord at home and abroad.

Before closing, Mr. Radcliffe, when all heads were bowed, invited any present who desired to devote themselves more fully to God, or who were conscious that they were not living as near to Him as they wished, to hold up their hands, to which several at once responded.

Mr. Isaacs, the secretary, writes: "I believe the meeting was a real blessing to many. We have never had such a meeting at the 'Rest' before, wherein the presence of the Lord was so realised. This has been the testimony of not a few."

MR. FRANCIS MURPHY has conducted with much success a Gospel Temperance Mission at Sharon, Mercer Co., Pa. Such a widespread interest in the cause has never before been experienced in that district.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—May 2, Ps. ciii. 12—22; May 3, civ. 1—12; May 4, civ. 13—23; May 5, civ. 24—35; May 6, Deut. iv. 1—13; May 7, v. 1—15; May 8, v. 16—29.

HOME FOR CHILDREN, PARIS.—Ten years ago this Home was established. Our family has increased until now we have thirty-three children in it. Deserted children of various nationalities have been received, and we have at present two who are the children of English mothers. Infants are adopted by us, when orphans or forsaken, from the earliest age, and are brought up in the Home until they are able to earn a living for themselves. Will your readers help us to succour those who are thus "ready to perish?" Communications can be addressed to M. le Pasteur Hocart, 81, Rue de Cormeille, Levallois-Perret, près Paris.

Letters to the Editor.

IRISH EMIGRATION.

DEAR SIR,—I have received £5 5s. in response to General Dobbs' letter, published in your issue of April 1, and four emigrants (two young men and two girls) left this last Saturday for Plymouth, en route to West Australia. A number of others are desirous to follow, and I will thankfully receive further contributions towards the cost of outfit and other necessary expenses.

THE SCRIPTURES IN IRELAND.

SIR,—Referring to your recent comments on Archbishop Walsh's Pastorate, in which he recommends the reading of the Scriptures, I would remark that no copy of the Douay Bible or Testament is published or sold by the Roman Catholic Church without notes; these very voluminous notes "make the Word of God of none effect."

An exact copy of Coyne's edition of the Douay Testament, without notes, has been reproduced, and may be obtained at 10, D'Olier-street, Dublin, for sixpence.

If each of your Irish readers would obtain one or two copies of this, and lend the book to any Roman Catholic neighbour who might be likely to read it, the result will be a sowing of the seed which will bear fruit. Our people are a devout race; the power of the priest is rapidly waning, and now is the time to make known the Word of God by individual effort.

Callan. OLD SUBSCRIBER.

THE JEWS AND PALESTINE.

THIS subject I have long studied with great delight, and shall be glad to refer "Inquirer" to a few among the many passages which plainly tell us the Israelites shall return to their own land. The land was given by God for an everlasting possession (Gen. xvii. 7, 8). They lost it through their idolatry, and the rejection of their Messiah, but there is abundant proof that they will be restored to God's favour. In Jer. xxxi. 34 we read: "I will forgive their iniquities, and remember their sins no more." This chapter refers to the return of Judah, and the lost tribes whom the Lord will find in his own time. In Jer. xxxii. 37 we read: "I will gather them out of all countries, whither I have driven them," and in chapter xxxiii. 7: "I will build them as at the first, and they shall dwell safely."

The Jews shall be raised to great distinction. There is a glorious future before them, for we read in the following verses they shall be a "praise and honour" before all the nations. Ezekiel, in chapter xxxvi., says they shall return to their own land; and in chapter xxxvii.: "They shall dwell there for ever." We cannot suppose this is a description of the heavenly inheritance, as we are told "They shall buy fields for money" (Jer. xxxii. 44), and "They shall dwell in their land that I have given to my servant Jacob" (Ezekiel xxviii. 25). There are many references to this subject in Zeph. iii., and Zech. viii. and x.

THE REVIVAL IN CHICAGO.

NOT for years, as many say, has Chicago been so moved religiously as at present. The whole city is on the qui vive, and is in a remarkably susceptible and impressible condition. Never before, perhaps, certainly not since the earlier labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, have such large and continuous throngs flocked to the preaching of the word. Never, doubtless, at any time has the press so conspired to give the word preached a full promulgation. The interest has grown, the influence of the meetings has accumulated, until now, by the Providence of God, Mr. Jones and Mr. Small have gotten to themselves such a spiritual advantage and such a purchase on the hearts of the people that they can do well-nigh as they will with the men who hang with unwonted eagerness upon their words.

It is too great a work to be checked. Believing this the evangelists have decided to cancel engagements made in smaller cities of the West, and continue the services already in progress in Chicago. —Christian Standard.

SEVERAL YOUNG STUDENTS from Edinburgh University are holding evangelistic services in different parts of Scotland. We have received news of deep interest aroused through the visits to Fountainbridge and Inverness.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

COMPULSORY teaching on Temperance is now the law in sixteen of the American States.

NUMBER 6 of the 9th series of the "Manchester Healt Lectures for the People," is a valuable lecture on Alcohol, by Dr. Edge. Price one penny.

IN the United Kingdom there are about 13,000 brewers. Sixteen years ago there were 32,000. The trade i going into the hands of the great firms.

AT Boston (U.S.), a powerful liquor trade association has been formed for Massachusetts, to control the elections, and, if possible, defeat the liquor laws.

THE anniversary services of the Scottish Temperanc League were held in Glasgow, April 24 to 26. Dr Macfadyen, Manchester, preached the annual sermon.

AT a recent Presbyterian Synod in New Zealand very encouraging reports were given as to the genera spread of Temperance, especially amongst the young.

MANY of the Presbyteries in Scotland have sen deputations to the licensing magistrates in their localities, asking them to reduce the number of public houses.

WE hope all our readers who have the opportunity will sign, and induce others to sign, petitions in favou of the Bill prohibiting sale of drink to children unde thirteen.

NORTHERN FRANCE is said to have a drinking hous for every forty inhabitants, or every group of 10·7 electors. In the South less drink is consumed than i the North.

The Temperance Record urges that while the humbles should not be forgotten, attention should be given t rescue from intemperance "persons of position an influence."

MR. W. J. GLOVER, now agent for the New Zealan Alliance, was recently accorded a public reception a Auckland. He conducted a successful mission at We lington, at which Sir William Fox, and other prominen Friends, assisted.

A TEMPERANCE UNION in connection with the Christian Policemen's Association has just been inaugurate for Manchester and Salford. The Union has branche in various cities and towns.

A TEMPERANCE CONGRESS is to be held, May 4 to 6, a Croydon. The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London and Rochester, and many other distinguishe Temperance advocates will take part.

THE New York State Women's Christian Temperanc Union has proposed that in the "Week of Prayer," 1887, one whole day shall be given to "Temperance," a second to "Social Purity," and a third to "Woma Suffrage."

MEETINGS in memory of Mr. Gough were arranged t be held at Sandgate, Mr. Gough's birth-place, April 28, 29, and 30. Mr. E. J. Smith was to recite selection from the "Orations." An illuminated address of condolence was to be signed, to be forwarded to Mr Gough.

WELCOME HOME, CARDIFF.

IN attending Rev. E. Payson Hammond's meeting here I was astonished at the remarkable intelligence and reality of the questions and answers o some very young children spoken to. Several o our distressed seamen have confessed with the mouths the Lord Jesus, and have believed his love. We have had good tidings from a crew of nine me it was my joy to bid farewell on the pier-head short time ago. The whole of these men had foun the Saviour in the meeting, and are seeking to serv Him.

The Refuge has proved a blessing to many, no only in providing food for the body, but in givin the bread that can never perish. We have supplie over 7000 meals, and fifty seamen, on the averag have been daily lodged and otherwise helpe eleven have gone to hospital through exposure an want before they came to us, and one aged on who was without shelter three nights, has died fro it. We still crave the sympathy of the Lord children. GEORGE LAWRENCE.

Welcome Home, 79, Bute-road.

ONWARD CHRISTIAN MISSION, WANDSWORT —The workers here have been greatly strengthene and uplifted by the blessing vouchsafed in connecti with a week's mission just concluded by Mr. W. Bailey ("The Sailor Preacher"), of the Open-a Mission. Night after night the Mission-room w crowded with men and women of the working clas To quote a local paper, "The audiences were profound interested in the preacher's discourse, and he was ab by simple fervour and religious experience to produce considerable impression." F. C.

MISSION HALL, WINCHESTER.—The Sunday se vices continue to be well attended, while the we evening meetings were so much appreciated last ye that they were held nightly from May to Decembe The visits of Gipsy Smith and Mr. W. R. Bradlau were greatly blessed, some of the worst characters the city being influenced for good. Through the ope air services held in the lowest districts, successf efforts were made to rescue fallen ones. Mr. Willi D. Gibb, the hon. superintendent, concludes his nin report by saying that he aims to provide simple Gosp services whereby the poor may hear the word of G and be saved.

SUNDAY, MAY 2.—JOSHUA XII.

"In the historical account of the wars of Joshua in the south and north of Canaan, the only kings mentioned by name as having been conquered and slain by the Israelites were those who had formed a league to make war upon them; whereas it is stated at the close that Joshua had smitten all the kings in the south and north, and had taken possession of their towns (x. 40, xi. 17). To complete the account of these conquests, therefore, a detailed list is given in the present chapter of all the kings that were slain, and not merely of those that were defeated by Joshua in the country on this side of the Jordan; but the two kings of the Amorites who had been conquered by Moses are also included, so as to give a complete picture of all the victories which Israel had gained under the omnipotent help of its God."—Keil.

"The twelfth chapter is only a summary of their conquests. The Holy Ghost not only gives us the victory over our enemies, but makes us know and understand the whole extent of the country, and defines the particular position of each, giving us details of everything it contains; of God's perfect arrangements for the appropriation of the whole, and the distribution of each part to his people so as to produce a well-ordered whole, one and perfect in all its parts, according to the wisdom of God. But here we have to realise the distinction maintained in the New Testament between the gifts of God, and the enjoyment of the gifts given. 'Ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things.' 'He hath made us sit together in heavenly places.' Alas! how many earthly things still remain unsubdued among Christians!"—J. N. Darby.

MONDAY, MAY 3.—JOSHUA XIII.

"Here commences the second portion of the book, which records in twelve chapters the division of the conquered territory among the tribes. It is apparent from the character of the statements brought forward that they were drawn from pre-existing documentary records, and, indeed, we are expressly told that Joshua caused a written description of a considerable portion of the territory west of Jordan to be made by men sent through the land for that purpose (xviii. 8, 9)."—Sp. Com.

3.—Which is counted to the Canaanite: five lords of the Philistines.—"The territory of the five lords of the Philistines was reckoned as belonging to the land of Canaan, and allotted to the Israelites like all the rest. This remark was necessary, because the Philistines were not descendants of Canaan (Gen. x. 14), but yet were to be driven out like the Canaanites themselves, as being invaders of Canaanitish territory."—Keil. The frequent reverses and continual trouble which Israel suffered afterwards at the hands of the Philistines, was the consequence of their neglect to obey the command here given to drive them out.

22.—Balaam also the son of Beor, the soothsayer, did the children of Israel slay with the sword.—A melancholy comment upon the wish expressed by this unhappy man, "let me die the death of the righteous." They that do not wish to live the life of the righteous, cannot expect to die their death.

38.—The Lord God of Israel was their inheritance.—This statement about Levi having no inheritance but the Lord Himself, is repeated twice in this chapter (ver. 14 and here). It does not mean that Levi's wants were not provided for, for the offerings, including the tithes and firstfruits, were to be theirs.

TUESDAY, MAY 4.—JOSHUA XIV.

2.—By lot was their inheritance.—"The casting of the lots was probably effected, as the Rabbins assumed, by means of two urns, one filled with slips having the names of the tribes upon them; the other with an equal number, representing separate divisions of the land; so that when one slip, with a name upon it, was taken out of one urn, another slip, with a division of land upon it, was taken from the other. The result of the lot was taken as the direct decree of God. In the account of casting of the lots, after the tribes of Judah and Joseph had received their inheritance, an interruption took place, and the camp was moved from Gilgal to Shiloh, and the tabernacle erected (xviii. 1—9), after which the other tribes manifested so little desire to receive their inheritance that Joshua reproved them for their indolence (xviii. 3), and directed them to nominate twenty-one from their own number, whom he sent out to survey the land, and divide it into seven parts; and it was not till after this had been done that the casting of the lots was proceeded with, and each of these seven tribes received its inheritance."—Keil.

10.—The Lord hath kept me alive these forty and five years.—"From these words Theodoret justly infers that the conquest of Canaan by Joshua was completed in seven years, since God spake these words towards the end of the second year after the exodus from Egypt, and, therefore, thirty-eight years before the entrance into Canaan."—Ibid.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 5.—JOSHUA XV.

8.—The south side of the Jebusite; the same is Jerusalem.—"Jerusalem, i.e., the founding or possession of peace, called Salem in the time of Abraham (Gen. xiv. 18), was the proper name of the town, which was also frequently called by the name of its Canaanitish inhabitants, Jebus, or "city of the Jebusites" (Judges xix. 11; 1 Chron. xi. 4). On the division of the land it was allotted to the tribe of Benjamin (xviii. 28); but being situated upon the border of Judah (xv. 8) it was conquered and burned by the sons of Judah after the death of Joshua (Judges i. 8). It was very soon taken again and rebuilt by the Jebusites, whom the sons of Judah were unable to destroy (xv. 63; Judges i. 21), so that both Benjaminites and Judahites lived there along with the Jebusites; and the upper town, especially upon the summit of Mount Zion, remained as a fortification in the possession of the Jebusites until David conquered it (2 Sam. v. 6, 7), made it the capital of his kingdom, and called it by his own name, "the City of David," after which the old name of Jebus fell into disuse."—Keil.

19.—Thou hast given me a south land, give me also springs of water.—A deep spiritual lesson is taught in these words, encouraging those who approach God as to how

From his gifts to draw a plea,
And ask Him still for more.

The argument used is parallel to "Thou hast delivered my soul from death, wilt not Thou deliver my feet from falling?" (Ps. lvi. 13). Just as the south land peculiarly needed the springs of water, so does the portion of God's children in Christ peculiarly need the presence and the power of the Spirit to enjoy it. Let Achsah's prayer be used, and of One greater than her father it will soon be said, "and He gave her the upper springs and the nether springs."

THURSDAY, MAY 6.—JOSHUA XVI.

"This and the next chapter are closely connected, and assign the boundaries of 'the children of Joseph,' i.e., of the kindred tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh. These two tribes, or more strictly speaking, the tribe of Ephraim and the half tribe of Manasseh, drew one lot only, no doubt because it was all along intended that their inheritances should be adjacent. These two chapters accordingly describe (1) the southern boundary of the whole territory of the children of Joseph (xvi. 1—4); (2) the limits of Ephraim in particular (xvi. 5—10); (3) those of Manasseh (xvii. 1—13; and (4) the discontent of the descendants of Joseph with their inheritance is recorded, together with Joshua's answer to their complaints (xvii. 14—18). The territory allotted to these two powerful tribes comprises the central and in every way the choicest part of Canaan, west of Jordan. The hills of this district making up what is called (xx. 7) 'Mount Ephraim' are less high and far less barren than those of Judah; the water supply is much larger, and the very rich and fertile plains of Sharon and Esdraelon are left between the rocky fastnesses of Benjamin on the south, and the high lands of Galilee belonging to Issachar on the north."—Sp. Com. So true was it that "the birthright was Joseph's (1 Chron. v. 2), and that the rich cluster of blessings foretold both by Jacob (Gen. l. 25) and by Moses (Deut. xxxiii. 13) should be his, "the precious things of the earth and fulness thereof."

FRIDAY, MAY 7.—JOSHUA XVII.

1.—Manasseh; for he was the firstborn of Joseph.—"And, therefore, was to receive not only 'the territory on the east of Jordan, won,' as the following clause points out, by the valour of the Machirites, but also a portion with the other tribes on the west of Jordan, the holy land of promise strictly so-called. Thus, though Ephraim took precedence of Manasseh (xvi. 5), according to the blessing of Jacob (Gen. xlviii. 20), yet Manasseh received the double portion which was the peculiar privilege of the firstborn (Deut. xxi. 17)."—Sp. Com.

14.—Why hast thou given me but one lot and one portion to inherit.—"As the descendants of Joseph formed two tribes (Ephraim and Manasseh), they gave utterance to their dissatisfaction that Joshua had given them ('me,' the house of Joseph, ver. 17) but one lot, but one portion for inheritance, though they were a strong and numerous people. There was no real ground for this complaint. As Ephraim and half Manasseh did not amount to more than 58,000 or 59,000, this tribe and a half were not so strong as Judah, with its 76,500, or even Dan with its 64,400, or Issachar with its 64,300 men (Num. xxvi.), and therefore could not justly lay claim to more than the territory of a single tribe. Moreover, the land allotted to them was in one of the most fertile parts of Palestine. Joshua, therefore, sent them back with their petition, and said (ver. 15): 'If thou art a strong people go up into the wood and cut it away.' As the answer of the children of Joseph (ver. 16) indicated cowardice and want of confidence in the help of God, Joshua contented himself with repeating his first reply, though more fully."—Keil. He encouraged them, moreover, by what seems almost a prophetic forecast: "Thou shalt drive out the Canaanites, though they have iron chariots, and though they be strong."

SATURDAY, MAY 8.—JOSHUA XVIII.

1.—The children of Israel assembled together at Shiloh.—"The situation of Shiloh is undoubtedly the modern Seilon, two or three miles east of the main road, and rather more than half way between Jerusalem and Nablous. Its very name—which means 'rest' (Gen. xlix. 10)—was probably bestowed at this juncture, when God had given the people rest from their enemies. The tabernacle with its contents continued at Shiloh during the whole period of the Judges until, in the latter days of Eli, when the ark was captured."—Sp. Com.

2.—Seven tribes, which had not yet received their inheritance.—"The two tribes and a half, it will be remembered, had already received their portions on the east of Jordan; Judah, Ephraim, and the remaining half of Manasseh had also been provided for as has been described (ch. xv.—xvii.). Thus there remained still seven tribes out of the twelve to be settled in their homes."—Ibid.

3.—How long are ye slack to go to possess the land.—They had reached Shiloh, whose very name spoke of rest or peace secured, but it may be this very sense of security lulled them to sleep as to the further privilege or duty of going on "to possess the land." So is it often with Christians, who, though at peace with God through the blood of Christ, need the exhortation, "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold of eternal life."

DISTRESS IN IRELAND.

Sir,—I have just returned from Ireland, where I employ a number of poor workwomen, both distressed ladies and peasants, at embroidery and knitting. The fearful distress now existing there amongst those once accustomed to every comfort is simply appalling. I was beset with appeals for work from ladies now dependent on their needle as their sole means of support. In one case the lady that called on me represented three sisters who only possess one gown, one bonnet and shawl among them all; she assured me with tears that if I could not give her work, one of these articles must be pawned and then they could not even go out to seek employment.

I have employed all I have means to pay at present, but if I could raise a small fund to provide materials for the new and fashionable coloured embroidery now in vogue, I could easily find paying employment for a hundred more. Will your readers help me to aid their suffering sisters to help themselves? I will gladly give an account of my stewardship at the end of May, so that it will be seen what the money entrusted to me will have effected. Subscriptions for this will be received directly by myself at the following address until May 15, after which Long Orchard, Templemore, Tipperary, Ireland, will find me. Mrs. Jerome Mercier, Kemerton Rectory, Tewkesbury, and Lady Mostyn, of Talacre, Overbury, have also consented to receive any sums sent to them.

Yours faithfully,
Mary Power Lalor.
Kemerton-court, Tewkesbury.

THE TRANSVAAL.—The Wesleyan missionary, Rev. George Lowe, writes that there is a great change taking place in the Transvaal in reference to spiritual things. He affirms that the kingdom of Christ is making advances with a rapidity that astonishes all who look on. Men come from distant kraals to see the missionary, and to tell him of the work which God is carrying forward. He affirms that native Christians are preaching and teaching without pay or reward, simply from love to the Master, and from personal conviction of the truth and power of the Gospel. A few weeks ago one came to him who had been preaching and holding a Methodist class-meeting for about twenty years, during which time he had not seen a missionary.—Rock.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For the father of a large family given to intemperance.——For a great blessing upon the circulation in every house in a town of some Social Purity publications.

BIBLE AND GOSPEL VAN.—We are about to commence our fifth summer's campaign with this van. In the past we have received many tokens of the Lord's presence and blessing. Each season has brought an increased demand for the Scriptures and blessing in the Gospel. My fellow-labourer, Mr. Wharton, having returned from New Orleans, after a very fruitful mission there, purposes joining me. Our annual report will be sent on application. Any friends wishing to communicate with us may address, care of Mr. P. Moi Crane, Mersey Bank, Didsbury, near Manchester.

All persons who believe that the Holy Scriptures should be circulated only in their uncorrupted integrity are respectfully invited to attend.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

President—Right Hon. Earl of Aberdeen.

Over Fifty Thousand of our poorest City Children regularly attend the 180 Ragged School Missions affiliated with the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

The operations include Sunday and Bible Schools, Day and Infant Free Schools, Week-night Schools for Rough Lads and Girls, Industrial Classes, Gospel Mission Services, Mothers' Meetings, Ragged Churches, Bands of Hope, Temperance Meetings, and Crèches. Country Houses provided for the weakly or convalescent. Emigration is also promoted, and numerous other agencies for the benefit of the poor children and their parents. Additional funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully acknowledged by John Kirk, Secretary.

Offices—Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

THIS Society is employing nearly 130 earnest, faithful, and experienced Readers—most of them in the poorest localities in the Metropolis—who visit from house to house and room to room, bringing the Word of God to the poor, the sick, the erring, and the outcast; they also help generally in the spiritual work of their respective parishes.

Unless speedy help is received several grants must be withdrawn for want of funds.

MARCUS RAINSFORD, Clerical Sec.
J. MARTIN TILBEY, Lay Sec.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

President—The RIGHT HON. the LORD MAYOR.
Chairman—Capt. the HON. F. MAUDE, R.N.
Secretary—REV. H. BLOOMER.

Object—To win Souls for Christ.

Twenty-three Agents are constantly at work in the Port of London. The results of their previous efforts, made in simple faith, show that they have been greatly blessed by God.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED.

Numbers of The Christian, Magazines, Tracts, &c., are most necessary, and will greatly assist the Chaplains and Missionaries.

The Secretary will be pleased to give an account of the Work either at School Room, Lecture Hall, or Drawing Room Meetings.

Offices, 31, New Bridge-street, Ludgate Circus, E.C.

THE CHURCH ARMY.

PRINCE'S HALL, PICCADILLY, FRIDAY, MAY 7,
THE ANNUAL MEETING will be held at 3 p.m., presided over by

THE ✣ LORD ✣ BISHOP ✣ OF ✣ TRURO,

Supported by the selected speaker, the Rev. A. M. W. CHRISTOPHER (St. Aldate's, Oxford), The Revs. Canon Jackson (Nottingham), Canon Money (Cheltenham), The Revs. J. F. Andrewes, W. Carlile (Hon. Sec.), R. Catteral, G. Crewdson, E. W. Moore, R. N. Rankin, F. S. Webster (Principal of the Training Home), Colonel Finch White, T. H. Armitage, Esq., M.D., E. Clifford, Esq. (Treasurer), H. Marshall, Esq., A. B. Stoney, Esq., and others.

Most of the speakers will be from some of the coming from various parts of the country.

At 7.30 (Doors open at 6.30),
GREAT PRAISE MEETING and Thanksgiving, when News from all parts of England—FACTS FAR STRANGER THAN FICTION—will be recounted by some of the Staff and Soldiers, assisted by Brass and Concertina Bands.

N.B.—Those unable to attend can send contributions (which are urgently needed) to the Rev. W. Carlile, Hon. Sec., 36, Southampton-street, Strand, London, W.C.

ADMISSION FREE. Family Ticket will Admit Four to Reserved Seats, at both Meetings, 2s. 6d.

The Fourth Conference of the Church Army will be held on THURSDAY, MAY 6, at the Stafford Rooms, Titchborne-street, Edgware-road, W. 11 a.m.—Reception. 7 p.m.—Consecration Meeting, at Brunswick Church, 12, Upper Berkeley-street, Marble Arch, led by the Rev. C. A. Fox, M.A.; and on MAY 7, at 7.45 a.m., Holy Communion at Westminster Abbey. Soldiers, Associates, and friends are heartily invited.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, and 6, Regent Square, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of Mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others. The applications for admission are painfully urgent.

HENRY THOMPSON, Treasurer.
WM. HORNIBROOK, Secretary.

Funds are greatly needed.

Bankers—London and Westminster, Bloomsbury Branch, High Holborn.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the Evangelistic Societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of The Christian.

PLAIN QUESTIONS:

A Series of Pointed Appeals in the VERY WORDS OF SCRIPTURE. Neatly printed in Coloured Ink on Tinted Paper. In Packets of 150 Tracts, assorted, 6d.; 300 Tracts, 1s.; or 1000 copies, assorted, 2s. 6d.

LIST OF QUESTIONS.

1. WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?	Matt. xxii. 42.	9. DOST THOU BELIEVE?	John ix. 35.
2. IS IT WELL WITH THEE?	2 Kings iv. 26.	10. WHEN WILL YE BE WISE?	Psalm xciv. 8.
3. WHAT SHALL I DO WITH JESUS?	Matt. xxvii. 22.	11. HOW SHOULD WE LIVE?	Ezek. xxxiii. 10.
4. HOW SHALL WE ESCAPE?	Heb. ii. 3.	12. WHAT IS YOUR LIFE?	James iv. 14.
5. WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT?	Mark viii. 36.	13. IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?	Lam. i. 12.
6. WHY WILL YE DIE?	Ezek. xviii. 31.	14. WHERE ART THOU?	Gen. iii. 9.
7. WHAT HAST THOU DONE?	Gen. iv. 10.	15. WHITHER GOEST THOU?	Judges xix. 17.
8. WHEN WILT THOU RETURN?	Neh. ii. 6.	16. WHAT SHALL WE DO?	Acts ii. 37.

A PRACTICAL SUGGESTION.

A Gentleman engaged in preaching the Gospel speaks thus of this novel Series of Gospel Tracts:—"I take as my subject for the evening the Question on one of the Leaflets, such as 'What think ye of Christ?' The Scripture Texts quoted on either side of the 'Question' serve as 'points' in my Address; they are—

1. 'Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.'
2. 'God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, CHRIST DIED FOR US.'
3. 'Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows. . . He was wounded for our transgressions; He was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed.'

"The Hymns, of which a verse or two are given on the Leaflet, are sung at the Meeting; and at its close every member of the congregation receives a copy of that Leaflet as he passes out of the door. This plan is repeated until I have thus run through the whole Series of sixteen Tracts."

150 copies of "PLAIN QUESTIONS" may be had for Sixpence—either Assorted, or of any one kind. Or 1000 copies for 2s. 6d.; post-free, 2s. 9d.

London: Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

A TIMELY TRACT FOR MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

Mrs. BELL and her CUSTOMERS:

A Talk about our Girls; and how to Protect them. With Full-page Illustration. Eight Quarto pages, well printed in good readable type.

3s. 6d. per 100; or 500 for 17s. 6d.

"Mrs. Bell" here gives her "Customers" some sound and sensible advice respecting the training of our maidens. The tract is eminently adapted for giving away at Mothers' Meetings; for leaving at the homes of the working classes; for young women's meetings; or for distribution amongst factory and shop girls.

And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

A GOSPEL TRACT, WHICH SHOULD BE SCATTERED BROADCAST.

"TIT FOR TAT!"

By Rev. C. J. Whitmore. With Full-page Illustration. Four Quarto pages in good readable type.

2s. per 100; or 1s. for 50; 17s. 6d. per 1000.

This telling Gospel Story in tract form, with its attractive Engraving on the front page, is specially adapted for distribution amongst the working classes. It presents the Gospel in a novel and striking manner; and shows what a terrible "Tit for Tat" awaits those who now reject the Saviour.

THE

AN ATTRACTIVE

Quarto Volume of Music & Words.

By IRA D. SANKEY and J. McGRANAHAN.

Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"It is as fine a collection of Sacred Airs as can anywhere be found. All the Hymns and the Tunes are beautiful, impressive, gracious; and the rendering of them, and the hearing them sung in private or public alike, have led many to change their whole course of life."
Oldham Chronicle.

"Of this Sacred Song Book it is scarcely needful for us to say a word. Thousands have listened and thousands have sung them, and will retain their good impressions, when all the mists have rolled away."—Baptist Messenger.

This Volume, which is largely composed of New Sacred Songs, Duets, Choruses, and Anthems, has been used alternately with "Songs and Solos," during the great London Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Mr. Sankey and Mr. Mc Granahan are already well known by their hymns, which are sung all the world over; and the present collection, which is specially suitable for Gospel Choirs, will doubtless add to their reputation as true Gospel musicians.

New Part Songs, Choruses & Anthems.

Written and Arranged expressly for Male Voices

By JAMES McGRANAHAN.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Limp, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

The Gospel Male Choir was, during the last five months of the London Mission, a special feature of the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. There are, doubtless, many more who would wish to dedicate their voices to the service of the Master; and with the present volume (which is arranged for 1st and 2nd Tenor and 1st and 2nd Bass) in their hands, and the hearty co-operation of a few brethren like-minded, this wish can be easily gratified. Says Mr. Mc Granahan:—"Organize a quartet, a double quartet, or better still, a chorus of male voices; and prove the power for good in the harmony of male voices when consecrated to the glory and service of our divine Master."

"It is a splendid collection of New Part Songs, Choruses, and Anthems, expressly arranged for male voices. Many of the pieces are the very words of Scripture, and are set to tunes which give great force and sweetness to the words themselves. The book cannot fail to be a blessing wherever used."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
LETTER from Mr. W. SMITH, of NEWCASTLE.

The writer, who resides at 277, Shields-road, Newcastle-on-Tyne, writing me on behalf of a patient in that locality, who was anxious for my advice, says:—"I have received great benefit from your medicine at several times:—at one time especially, when I had had a severe cough for some time, which settled on my lungs, and I raised blood, so that I thought, and my friends also, I should have to give up my calling. I obtained your medicine, and with the blessing of God it quite restored my health. I have not had such an attack since.

"The bottle I got from you for the poor woman at Gateshead has done her much good, and she is about again.

"I recommend your medicine wherever and whenever I have the opportunity to do so. If this letter is of any use, you can freely use my name.—W. Smith, Dec. 13, 1885."

THE DEACON'S WEEK.

Or, A Week of Prayer turned into a Week of Practice. By Rose Terry Cooke. Printed as an Eight-page Quarto Tract for General Distribution. With Full-page Illustration, and five smaller Engravings.

3s. 6d. per 100; or 500 for 17s. 6d.

"A clever little story, showing how for one week, instead of meeting together for prayer for certain objects each evening, the members of a church had a week of practice. At the expiration of this time they met, and the lot fell upon one, a deacon, to give his experience. It was not the best of records, as he said himself; but it was very instructive withal. The little book should be widely read, and will be found interesting and profitable."—Nonconformist and Independent.

The boy with his whip, and the girl with her doll, will before long rule—real factors in Church and State; and train real lives for the weal or woe of the nation. See the coming mother in that little old-fashioned darling, rocking her doll to sleep, and humming the lullaby tunes which so recently sounded in her own ears! See the voter, the orator, the merchant, the banker, the editor, the senator, in the stout youngster with bootlegs outside his trousers, and uncombed head crowned with torn and twisted cap. Music and oratory, enterprise and money, railroad schemes and political devices, power—social, religious, commercial, and educational, lie all unfashioned and undirected in the little brains and muscles and hearts of the children around you."

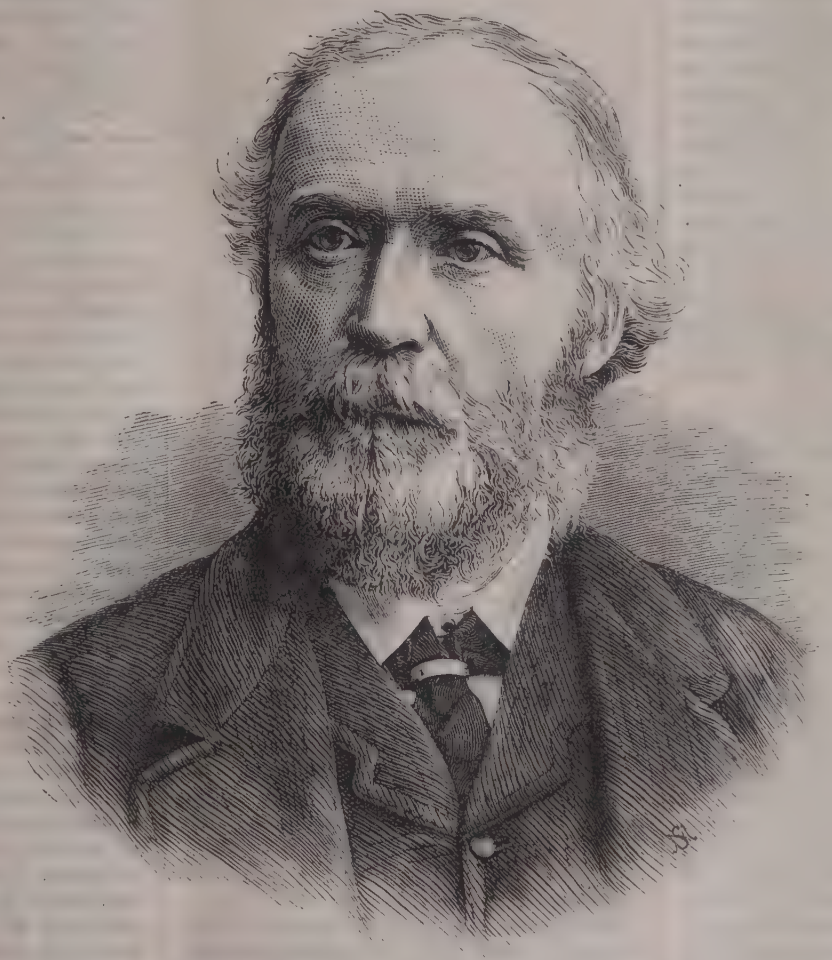
THE LATE

MR. ALEXANDER BALFOUR, LIVERPOOL,

Christian Merchant and Philanthropist.

On Friday, April 16, there passed from the scene of his earthly career, to the immediate presence of his beloved Master, one of the noblest spirits and truest disciples whom that Master has ever lent for a season to this sinful and sorrow-stricken world. Many throughout the United Kingdom and the world are mourning to-day the loss of a dear friend and benefactor; and we have thought it well to present to our readers a very short record of his life, in the hope that so inspiring an example may thus reach many who were not privileged to enjoy his personal acquaintance.



Alexander Balfour was born in the town of Leven, Fifeshire, a county which boasts the nativity of Thomas Chalmers, Adam Smith, and many another who has added renown to the name of Scotchman. His ancestors, a long-lived race, were distinguished by staunch principle, solid mental calibre, and open-hearted hospitality—qualties which were markedly reflected in his own person; whilst, in addition to these, he possessed a strongly accentuated individuality, an indomitable will, and a personal force which, directed as it invariably was into channels of goodness and benevolence, was a source of unusual benefit to the world in which he lived.

Having completed his education in the fine old university town of St. Andrews, he entered a mercantile house in Liverpool, and eventually joined Mr. Stephen Williamson, another Fife man, and until lately Member of Parliament for St. Andrews, as a merchant and shipowner, the firm of Balfour, Williamson & Co. becoming the pioneers of the Valparaiso trade with Liverpool, and afterwards forming an extensive connection with San Francisco. When Mr. Balfour came to reside in Liverpool, he attended at first the ministry of Rev. Charles Birrell, of Pembroke-place Baptist Chapel, and afterwards that of Rev. James Towers, of Birkenhead, and their preaching was much blessed in awakening his religiou life. When he decided to serve Christ, "he made up his mind," as we have heard him relate, "that there should be no reservations."

Thenceforth entire consecration was his aim. It was decided by the partners that five per cent. of the profits of the firm should be given away to Christian and charitable objects, and this, too, at a time when their transactions were necessarily small and uncertain. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth." Most true did this prove in the case of Mr. Balfour. While his generosity knew no bounds, and he found a delight in spending for others, his business continued to prosper, till it had become one of the greatest shipping interests in Liverpool. He had a supreme contempt for mere money-getting as a principal object of existence, and when told of some colossal fortune being left by one who had distinguished himself in no other way, he would say with a pitiful scorn, "Now, I call that poor man's life a complete failure." Nor was it only on the large scale that his liberality was noticeable. One was being continually surprised by his acts of delicate thoughtfulness for others. Poor and deserving people were helped in the most considerate way often without their being able to trace the source from which the aid came. His own relations experienced his constant loving-kindness. Little children, and boys at school, were made happy by his youthful sympathies and kindly deeds. In travelling, or visiting friends, he had a sunny smile for all. In many a household a visit from him was anticipated as a coming joy, and afterwards remembered as a red-letter day. Circumstances requiring his frequent residence in Chili, he established a Bible Society in that country, assisted in erecting a church and schools in Valparaiso, visited the hospital, and worked among the railway employés. He was known there also as a hospitable entertainer of strangers, and a good friend to the officers and men of the naval squadron on that station.

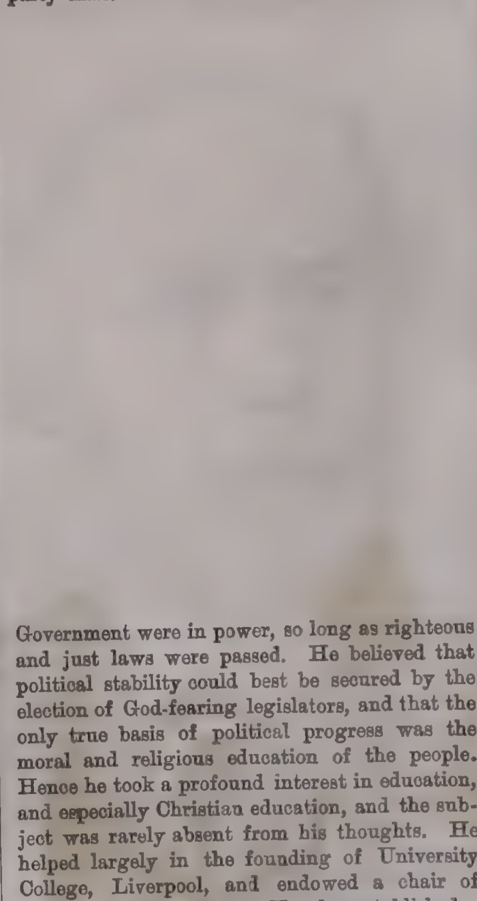
On his return to England, about 1863, he arried a daughter of Rev. John Roxburgh, D.D., of Glasgow, one of the leaders of the Free Church of Scotland, and, settling again in Liverpool, identified himself with all kinds of philanthropic and Christian work. Recognising that his first duty was towards his own subordinates, he made the interests of his sailors a matter of deep concern. No portion of his ships received more careful thought than the forecastle, and the moral and spiritual, as well as the physical, welfare of his crews received his earnest attention. He established in Duke-street a Home for the sailors of the firm, where they might be protected from the temptations besetting seamen in a large port. Amusements of various kinds were furnished, and everything done to make their surroundings congenial. The ships of Balfour, Williamson & Co. enjoy the highest reputation among seamen.

Mr. Balfour also extended his reforming efforts to the mercantile marine generally. He was for twenty-five years Hon. Secretary of the Missions to Seamen, and, along with the late Mr. Chas. MacIver, was one of the original promoters of the Liverpool Seamen's Orphanage in Newsham Park. He loved sailors with a special attachment, and we remember on one occasion, while taking a voyage with him, how on a Sunday morning he would walk along to the forecastle, Bible in hand, would descend the companion, and chat with the men, finally reading a passage of Scripture, or giving a short address, and engaging in prayer. He was an incessant labourer in the cause of temperance, in season and out of season, striving to inculcate habits of sobriety among the people, and at the time of his death was engaged in an inquiry which had for its object the education of the poor in the use of milk, and a more adequate and cheap supply of this essential article to our large cities. Along with his dearly-beloved friend Canon Ellison, he took a prominent part in forwarding temperance legislation, and at one time visited Sweden, in order to study the working of the Gothenburg system. He published several papers and pamphlets on this and kindred subjects.

In the Town Council of Liverpool, of which he was for eight years a member, he set himself with unflinching courage to oppose proceedings which he believed to be detrimental to the moral and material well-being of the town, and by his transparent sincerity of purpose, commanded the respect of those most hostile to him. Along with his friend, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., he was the founder and munificent benefactor of the Young Men's Christian Association, of which he was President at the time of his death. The Liverpool Evangelisation Society, the Medical Mission, Strangers' Rest, Mrs. Birt's Children's Refuge, Bands of Hope, Sunday free breakfasts, ragged schools, and many other institutions counted him as their unfailing friend and generous supporter. For many years his contributions to the Town Mission enabled it to pay the salaries of several missionaries, and at Mount Alyn, his lovely country residence in North Wales, he had several cottages devoted to the use of Christian workers in the city who needed rest and country air. Time and space forbid us to enumerate the public charities which had the advantage, not only of his pecuniary support, but of his wise counsel, and hearty co-operation. He had, indeed, like his friend Lord Shaftesbury, a passion for doing good, and his supreme happiness lay in unselfish devotion for the good of others. His gardens and greenhouses were emptied for the benefit of poor and sick folks in the city, and he had sometimes to be laughingly reminded that the injunction was to love our neighbours as ourselves, not better than ourselves. Nothing made him happier than to see bands of orphans playing in the park, or companies of pupil-teachers or other city workers enjoying the gardens and shady trees of Mount Alyn.

The Daily Post, of Liverpool, in a leading article, says: "He was of remarkably tender disposition, and was so easily moved by sights and stories of distress that in his almsgiving he was sometimes imposed upon; but no one would have had him harder or more calculating. His very faults were beautiful. Moreover, he was no foolish or indiscriminate distributor of charity, but a thorough man of business." He took an active part, along with Mr. Thomas Matheson, in arranging for the visit to Liverpool of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, at whose first great meeting of 2000 Christian workers he occupied the chair.

Many of his friends would have been pleased to see him occupying a seat in the Imperial Legislature; but he often said that he should feel parliamentary duties distasteful. He had not patience enough to stand the tedium of debate, and he would often have felt the exigencies of party allegiance too severe a strain on his conscience for him to be what is called "a good party man." To him it mattered little what Government were in power, so long as righteous and just laws were passed. He believed that political stability could best be secured by the election of God-fearing legislators, and that the only true basis of political progress was the moral and religious education of the people. Hence he took a profound interest in education, and especially Christian education, and the subject was rarely absent from his thoughts. He helped largely in the founding of University College, Liverpool, and endowed a chair of moral philosophy in it. He also established a college for pupil teachers, and took a deep interest in all allied questions.



While thus engaged in large schemes of public usefulness, he was continually pouring forth his tender and abundant sympathy, like the gentle dew of heaven, on all who needed it, himself bearing their burdens, and so fulfilling the law of Christ. His was no mere "cheque-charity," which, indeed, he considered to be no charity at all. He gave himself for others, made their sorrows his own, and lavished time, thought, and energy on their behalf. It was no uncommon thing for him to give away more than half his income; but so quiet and unostentatious was his benevolence, that no one ever guessed its real extent, and he always discouraged any public recognition of his own good-doing, while he delighted to recognise and to honour the generosity of others.

One frequently hears the statement made that it is impossible at the present day to conduct a successful business in strict accord with the precepts of the Gospel. The career of this true saint of God offers a sufficient disproof of the sceptical utterance. His private journals show how constant was his reference, in every transaction, to the Divine will, how completely he sought to be guided only by obedience to the precepts of Christ, and how hateful to him was the very thought of dishonour or self-aggrandisement. These journals give evidence of a communion with God like that of the ancient patriarchs, a humble acknowledgment of mercy far beyond his deserts, and a willing and constantly-renewed dedication of life and means to his service. Here, indeed, was the secret of his happy and beneficent life. Those who saw him in the bosom of his own family knew how all his actions were sanctified by prayer, and how his house was the scene of all things that are pure, and true, and lovely, and of good report. His marvellous simplicity of nature, and his complete unconsciousness of self lent a peculiar interest to his personality. He had much of the perfervidum ingenium Scotorum, and his unconventional manner, and intense, emphatic utterance, aided by the expressive gestures of his thinly-tapering, nervous fingers, and evident strength of conviction, never failed to make a deep impression on his hearers. His denunciations of wrong were unsparing, but there was a knightly courtesy that gilded all his speech.

So indifferent was he to praise or blame, that, if he saw his name referred to in the public prints, he had not the curiosity to read what was being said about him. With him Self was always the last subject of thought. Mr. Balfour had little patience with a conception of the Christian life which consists in self-absorbed contemplation, and which holds aloof from municipal and political duties. In his view, it was the high privilege of the Christian to leaven public life, and amid every sphere of society to let his influence be felt. He was thus the genial friend and hospitable entertainer of many who differed widely from him in religious belief, but he never failed to use the opportunities which his intimacy gave him to speak of the truths which to him were all-important. If he invited a dinner-party, his first desire was that his guests should b thoroughly happy, his second that they should be so selected as by a healthful friction to stimulate one another to fresh ideas and aims, and h had himself intense pleasure in the society of hi friends. His cordial greeting was no mer form, but the expression of genuine delight.

Though a Presbyterian, alike by family connection and conviction, his sympathies were fa too catholic to be affected by mere ecclesiastica differences. He might be said to have constituted himself by his rich benevolence an honorar member of all Christian organisations, and h breathed an atmosphere purer than that of an sect.

In the midst of this career of Christian di cipleship, the call came to be ready for a high service. Only one month ago, Mr. Balfour wa found to be the subject of an insidious diseas requiring surgical interference for its remova When informed of its certainly fatal termination if left alone, and of the extreme risk whic an operation would entail, he calmly said: "We doctor, the call must come to each of us soo or later; the great thing is for us to be resting on the Rock of our salvation." His next utterance was that he must take immediate steps to get another trustee appointed in his place for the Y.M.C.A. Thus, even at this crisis, the cause so dear to him was first in his thoughts—himself last. The best surgical advice in London and Edinburgh was sought, and it was decided that, although the danger was enormous, an operation should be attempted.

Meanwhile, the very grave circumstances in which he was placed made no appreciable difference in his conduct, or thoughts. He placed himself unreservedly in his heavenly Father's hands, made all necessary business arrangements, and with the calmness of childlike trust, prepared to leave the world. Those who were admitted to his intimacy at this time will never forget that spectacle of Christian heroism. His voice was as cheery as of old, as he played in the morning with his children; his interest in public affairs was unabated; his spirits were as happy as if he had not a care; and to the last day of his life his thought was for others. One who saw him two days before the operation which was to prove his entrance into glory, wrote immediately after seeing him, "I cannot help saying that on Sunday I felt that there was a grandeur, even a glory, about Mr. Balfour in his utter self-forgetfulness, in his emptying of self; I really felt that in his presence I understood the nature of our Saviour as I had never done before."

On the morning of the operation, at family prayers, after praying with touching simplicity for each of his children, he prayed, "Lord, remember the great community of Liverpool." That community was never absent from his thoughts. For it he lived, and for it he would have willingly died. His last act, before going upstairs to submit to the ordeal, was to write a letter of advice to a young friend, a clergyman, in whom he was much interested. Then, having once more committed his dear wife and family to the keeping of their Father in Heaven, he lay down, and gave himself over to the surgeons' hands. As he became anæsthetised, he called with a loud voice, "Glorify thy Name," a prayer which has since been answered by the profound impression which this great and good man's death has made on the community. At first the hopes of his friends were high, and all symptoms seemed to be favourable, but on the third day he gradually sank, and at four o'clock, as the dawn was breaking, and the world awakening from its sleep, his spirit awoke to an eternal day, to a joy unspeakable and full of glory.

What the effect of his death was on the community with which he was so bound up was best witnessed to by the scene at the funeral, which took place at the Parish Church, Rossett, near his country home, on Tuesday, April 20—a scene the like of which will probably not be seen again by any of those who were present. It was a lovely sunny day, such a day as he loved to welcome his friends and neighbours to his beautiful home. The Y.M.C.A. had written asking to be allowed to bear the body of their beloved President from the house to the church, but this was thought to be impracticable. A large number of the members, however, followed the coffin, which was literally buried in lovely floral wreaths, the last tributes of affection from many friends, far and near, who could now in no other way testify their love and gratitude.

Mourners of every rank stood weeping round the grave, from the great nobleman to the humble day-labourer. Hundreds of the leading citizens of Liverpool had come by special train, and representatives of numerous charities and institutions were present, including a hundred orphans from the Seamen's Orphanage, to whom he had been a father. The service was conducted by the Bishop of Liverpool, assisted by several of his clergy, and the lesson was read in the thronged church by Rev. R. H. Lundie, of Fairfield Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. Balfour had been an active member for many years. All creeds and sects were represented among the mourners, and it might truly have been said, as was said of the first martyr, that "devout men carried him to his burial, and made great lamentation over him."

Great was the sorrow for one so dearly loved; great was the grief of those who owed it to him that they had ever learned what true life consists in, who had received their first impetus to Christian living from his bright example and persuasive encouragement. Many were there who felt that henceforth a great void must exist in their world, and that an incalculable moral and spiritual force was now removed. But a thankful joy mingled with the mourning, joy for his saintly life and his triumphant death, joy for his abundant entrance into the kingdom prepared for all that love and follow Christ, and for the undying ministry of his pure and beautiful example.

BIBLE STUDIES.—13.

ARISE.

(1) Arise from the dead (Eph. v. 14) "Damsel, I say unto thee, Arise" (Mark v. 41; Luke vii. 14). "The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live. He that heareth my word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life . . . and . . . is passed from death unto life" (John v. 25, 24).

(2) Arise, go over this Jordan (Joshua i. 2). (The path was made through the waters by the presence of the Ark.) "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me" (Gal. ii. 20). "Buried with Him . . . risen with Him" (Col. ii. 12).

(3) Arise, walk through the land (Gen. xiii. 17). "Every place whereon the soles of your feet shall tread shall be yours" (Deut. xi. 24). "According to your faith be it unto you" (Matt. ix. 29). "The Lord is rich unto all that call upon Him" (Rom. x. 12). (This command came after Lot's separation. The children of God get a clear view of their inheritance when they walk with Him, and are clear of alliance with the world.)

(4) Arise and eat (1 Kings xix. 7). "My flesh is meat indeed . . . He that eateth Me, even he shall live by Me" (John vi. 55, 57). "Thy words were found, and I did eat them" (Jer. xv. 16).

(5) Arise, shine (Is. lx. 1). "Ye are the light of the world . . . Let your light . . . shine" (Matt. v. 14, 16). "Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while He talked with him" (Ex. xxxiv. 29). "We all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (2 Cor. iii. 18).

(6) Arise, and be doing (1 Chron. xxii. 16). "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few" (Matt. ix. 37). "To every man his work" (Mark xiii. 34). "Workers together with Him" (2 Cor. vi. 1).

THE FRENCH MISSION INTERIEURE intends holding its general assembly at Vigan in May. It will then have to decide upon a grave question, whether henceforth the Mission shall be the special work of the Reformed Church, or whether its principles shall continue to be those of the Evangelical Alliance, on which the Society was founded.

SEAMEN IN FRANCE.—Mr. Henry Cook, of the Portsmouth and Gosport Seamen's Mission, writes from Havre:—We have concluded a month's evangelistic work here on board the Mystery Gospel schooner. The audiences have been most attentive to the word preached by Pasteur Whelpton and others. The work among the English—visiting the shipping, circulating the word, and Gospel work has been very encouraging. The vessel is now leaving for the Ports Douarnenez, Quimper, &c., to help the work under the care of Mr. Jenkyn Jones, pasteur in this part of France. We ask a deep interest in the prayers of your readers.

A SONG.

AWAKE, my heart, and sing
A hymn to my Redeemer-King!
Though thou art but a clod
Of cold, dull earth, while He is God.

Yet, as a heaven-blest field,
E'en clods do fruit and fragrance yield;
If winter once be gone,
And earth the sun have looked upon:

So, too, may such as I
Sing praise, if Christ, my Lord, draw nigh.
If on his garden blow
The warm south wind, let spices flow,

And incense fill the air
From every plant He planted there.
Well may the heart rejoice
And thrill to hear the Bridegroom's voice!

Wake, then, forsake your nest,
Each waiting hope within my breast!
Mount on unwearied wing
And make, with joy, the welkin ring!

I sing of life begun,
Outlasting earth, and star, and sun;
I sing of death destroyed;
Led captive by the Crucified!

I sing a Father's love,
Which nought from us can e'er remove:
We have a house—a home;
No longer orphans here we roam.

I sing a heavenly Friend,
To guide and help us to life's end;
Our cold hearts to inspire
With living breath of heavenly fire.

I sing Immanuel!
God deigns, on earth, with man to dwell;
In thy belovèd name
O Christ, what treasures do we claim?

Light, liberty, and truth,
True beauty, and immortal youth,
Forgiveness, peace, and joy,
And honeyed bliss no heart can cloy.

Thy name, thy name I sing,
My Bread from Heaven, my Living Spring!
My Shadow from the heat;
When storm-winds blow, my sure Retreat!

Bliss passing human thought,
Or rapture poet-dream hath caught,
Lie stored within thy Name,
O Jesus—whom we crowned with shame!

And all this bliss Divine
Thou bidst me freely take as mine!
My Saviour-Lord, I crave,
Take thou my heart—'tis all I have!

MR. ARNOT IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

DEAR SIR,—Many of your readers will be interested to hear that letters have come from my son, F. S. Arnot, dated December 30, 1885, within one day's march of Nana-Kandungu, where he intended to remain some time before pushing on to the Garenganje country. He had a very trying journey so far, with troublesome carriers, and some days had to wade knee-deep in water. On his journey he passed through old Katema, and saw the chief, who said he knew Livingstone, and was sorry to hear of his death. This man is mentioned in Livingstone's book.

It will be seen from the map of Central Africa that fully half of the journey has been accomplished, so that he will probably have begun to establish a mission station in the Garenganje country ere this.

He reports his health as excellent, though he was suffering from a so-called accident with his gun—blowing off the top joint of his left forefinger. Having no one to dress the wound, he gave his lancet to a native, and told him to cut the first joint clean off.—I am, &c.,

WM. ARNOT.

Raywood House, Pollokshields, Glasgow.

MINISTER AND PEOPLE.

By Rev. R. LAWSON, Maybole.

"Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel.—Ezekiel iii. 17.

There are three different ideals of a Christian minister, each true in its own way, but each imperfect when taken singly.

The first ideal is that of the Preacher, the man of the pulpit, the man of eloquence and earnestness. And this, doubtless, is a leading function of a true watchman. He is to press home the Law, and proclaim the Gospel. "By manifestation of the truth, he is to commend himself to every man's conscience in the sight of God."

But what is to be the end of this preaching? Is it not conversion? And if there are no conversions, of what use is it? We have clever preachers, and pleasant preachers, and instructive preachers, but the thing wanted is profitable preachers. Where are the preachers who are successful, under God, in making men true Christians? Where are the men on fire with burning earnestness to compel outsiders to come in to the Gospel Feast? The truth is that the converting fire seems to have gone out of the Christian churches at present, and gone over to mission-halls and out-of-door meetings.

I am strongly of opinion that the Christian churches of this country as a whole must awake out of their smooth, respectable ways, and ask themselves what they exist for, if they are to exist at all. At present they are asleep. They are dreaming in this dreadfully earnest life of ours. And the awaking voice ought to come from the pulpit, and that voice cannot speak too plainly or too earnestly.

Another ideal of the true minister is that of the Pastor, who visits from door to door, and warns or pleads as he sees needful. And this also is a good and necessary part of a minister's work. He should not be content with preaching the Gospel. He should talk the Gospel. He should carry the message of God home to every fireside, and to every soul gathered round that fireside.

But the question comes—Who does this? We have certainly ministers in abundance who drop in for a little friendly chat to the houses of the members of their congregations; but where are the true pastors who speak personally and anxiously to each one as to his prospects for eternity? For this, and nothing short of this, is the true pastor's work. It is not the "fine body" who is perpetually "visiting" that does good. It is the man whose presence is a blessing wherever he goes, because he carries the Spirit of God in him, and speaks out of his fulness.

We need more faithful pastors. And yet, would more faithful pastors be tolerated? Would not the careless flee from them and join some other church where they would be left more at ease? Oh, truly we are in a sad case! As in the old days, "the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means, and the people love to have it so." May God awaken both people and pastor to a sense of the truth of things!

But there is a third ideal, and, in my judgment, a higher ideal still, of the true Christian minister, and that is the Leader in every good word and work. This world seems to me a fight—a never-ceasing battle of good against evil; and the Church, in my view of it, is Christ's army enlisted to fight in this warfare. The Duke of Wellington spoke out of the heart of the Christian religion when he said that the Church's "marching orders" were—"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." And my true beau-ideal of a Christian minister is neither a man with gown and bands preaching grand sermons in a pulpit, nor a "fine body" visiting every house and talking pleasant things to all and sundry, but a Christian soldier, waving his sword over his head, and calling on his men to follow him into the thick of the struggle against evil.

I have a great fear that Christian churches in these days are being coddled into spiritual invalidism. They must have their eloquent sermons to tickle their ears on Sundays. And they must be "visited" and made much of at their own firesides during the week. But where is the Christian work done by them, except in the matter of a little missionary contribution now and again? I believe people have come to think that attending church is spiritual work, and that there is a merit in listening to the message, whether they carry it out or not.

A Christian congregation is an organisation of Christians. And what is it for? Surely not for their own edification alone? Surely, having accepted the Gospel for themselves, they are bound to carry it to others. Surely a regiment exists for other purposes than merely for drill and parade; and yet are not most congregations mere show regiments of this sort?

And if every true Christian congregation ought to consider itself a company or battalion in Christ's army, it is plain what the minister ought to be. He ought, as his highest and noblest function, to consider himself as a God-appointed officer, with sword in hand, to lead his forces against all that is evil, and in defence of all that is good. May God inspire all our hearts with more of this Christian enthusiasm! The word is, "Ministers to the front!" With what poor power I have, I call on the congregation to rally round me, so that we may be enabled to do more work for God and man in the future than we have done in the past!

FAITHFUL AND TRUE.

A successful mission had come to a close in one of the parishes of a large town, and a strong desire came upon me to see an extension of the work. I earnestly prayed that the churches of all denominations might unite in one great mission for the whole neighbourhood, and the place be stirred from end to end. The thought then occurred, "but where can we meet?" There was no building in any way suitable but the large Town Hall, and that was seldom if ever so used. I knew that God had "the hearts of Kings" to move as He will, and prayed that He would give us the Town Hall.

Just at this time I left home for a week or two, not having mentioned this matter to anyone. The first time I passed through the town after my return, I noticed in the shop-windows announcements of a preliminary prayer-meeting convened by the promoters of "the forthcoming united mission." It is needless to say that it was with no common interest my steps were bent to the place of meeting, on the appointed day. The meeting was a crowded and enthusiastic one; and there I learnt that the use of the Town Hall had been granted for the mission, that all the evangelical churches were prepared to join in the work, and that the meetings were to be conducted entirely by the ministers of those churches.

This last arrangement was, I confess, to me at first a great trial of faith. I was afraid the non-churchgoers would not be induced to come if the preachers were those whom they might hear every Sunday if they would. However, when the opening day of the ten days' mission came every fear vanished; the hall was filled in every corner, the people overflowing on landings and stair-ways; and so it continued night after night. Inquirers flocked to the room allotted to them, and "there was great joy in that city." K. L. M.

FORGIVENESS.

Is it not brought before the daily experience of the readers of The Christian, how far we are falling short of the fulfilment of the very first distinguishing mark of a Christian? I speak of that practical outcome of Christian love which shows itself in slowness to take offence, and in the forgiveness of injuries real and imaginary. Alas! for the bitter jest, the harsh judgment, the cruel criticism from some of us who in various ways are uttering the profession of a higher Christian standard.

Forgiveness is the very flower and fruit of Christ's love in the heart: "If thy brother repent, forgive him." Do not let us be too severe as to his repentance; let us rather cherish the faintest sign, that we may be able to say to our Father, "Forgive me my trespasses, as I forgive him or her who has trespassed against me." Let us inquire whether we have not overstated his trespass against us, and see if we have not made it much harder to forgive by talking about it to some other whose temper is unchastened, and who is clever to mark and to emphasise the faults of others. Have we remembered our own maxim with regard to evil speaking; first to ask, "Is it true, is it kind, is it necessary?" By neglect of this, what roots of bitterness have been suffered to grow up between friends and fellow-workers. Nay, can we not sometimes detect in our own heart a motion of revenge, disguised under some other name it may be, but yet identical with those of the professed pagans who boast of revenge as the threat and the practice of their lives? Renew the right spirit, O Lord! We need perpetual renovation day by day in the fulfilment of our common duties; the spirit of love must be breathed out and breathed back again, ever coming and going like the breath of the body in the fresh pure air of the heaven upon earth, which lives only in the beams of the Sun of righteousness. THE STORY OF A HANDKERCHIEF.

On the occasion of Mr. John B. Gough's funera at Hillside, a little handkerchief was placed over the back of his chair, the latter being placed a the head of the coffin. The story of that handkerchief was told by Mr. Gough in an addres in Cooper Institute, on the occasion of th fifth anniversary of the National Temperanc Society, in May, 1870. We find it in the Goug Memorial pamphlet, just issued by the Society Mr. Gough said:—

"I have in my house a small handkerchief not worth three cents to you, but you could no buy it from me. A woman brought it, and sai to my wife, 'I am very poor; I would give hi a thousand pounds if I had it, but I brough this. I married with the fairest and brightes prospects before me; but my husband took t drinking and everything went. The pianofort my mother gave me and everything was sol until, at last, I found myself in a miserabl room. My husband lay drunk in the corne and my child that was lying on my knee wa restless; I sung, 'The light of other days ha faded,' and wet my handkerchief through wit tears. My husband,' said she to my wife, 'me yours. He spoke a few words and gave a gras of the hand, and now, for six years, my husban has been to me all that a husband can be to wife, and we are getting our household goo together again. I have brought your husban the very handkerchief I wet through that nig with my tears, and I want him, when he speaking, to remember that he has wiped awa those tears from me, I trust in God, for ever These are the trophies that make men glad."—New York Observer.

THE UNIVERSAL FATHERHOOD OF GOD.

The dogma of the Universal Fatherhood of God is becoming so popular that every lover of truth should test it well, trying it by the only standard—the written Word. We can have no certain knowledge in such a case, except through revelation—therefore, to the Word and to the testimonies. For our part, we are amazed that such a dogma should be taught so widely in the name of Bible truth. The longer we examine it the more utterly unscriptural—yea, the more antagonistic to Scripture—does it become.

Christ and his Apostles taught that men were by nature outside of the kingdom or family of God, and that by the new birth of the Spirit, by receiving Christ, they became members of the kingdom and family. "Ye are of your father the devil," He said to the Jews. "The good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one;" "To as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God." The Sermon on the Mount, in which He speaks so much of "Our Father," is manifestly addressed to the members of the new kingdom, for He speaks to them as "the salt of the earth," "the light of the world." In Matt. vii. 21, &c., He plainly declares that those only who do "the will of my Father which is in heaven" shall enter into the kingdom.

We challenge anyone who can, to show clear proof that either Jesus Christ or his Apostles taught this new doctrine of the Universal Fatherhood of God, or the consequent doctrine of the universal sonship of mankind. We are prepared, on the other hand, to prove abundantly that they taught exactly the opposite.

But did not the Apostle say, "We are all the offspring of God"? Certainly; but, as he was addressing a heathen audience, he was careful not to say, "We are all the children of God." He did say that later on, but it was when writing to Christian brethren, and even then he was careful to add, "by faith in Christ Jesus," as though he would specially guard himself from the notion of a Universal Fatherhood. When the Apostle said that we were God's offspring, he alluded to the great truth that to God we owe our very being and preservation, and that we were created in his image. But this falls immeasurably short of saying that to all men belong the peculiar love, and privilege, the liberty and the life, of the children of God. Those who confuse the Creator relationship with the Fatherly one must have very low and unscriptural ideas of the majesty and splendour of the privilege of sonship with God.

Perhaps we shall be told of Malachi's words, chap. ii. 10: "Have we not all one father? Hath not one God created us?" &c. But they prove nothing, if taken in their connexion. They were addressed to the ungodly and unrighteous priests, who abused their office by dealing treacherously against their brethren. These are here reminded that the sons of Levi are brethren to the res of their nation, having "one father," and having been created by the same God. Probably Abraham was alluded to in the words "one father." But if God were meant, it is only the voice of Israel, speaking nationally of God as the covenanted Father of his people; there is no thought of the Universal Fatherhood.

We protest most solemnly against this dogma. First, because it cannot be found in the Bible, and to speak on such a subject without Scriptural authority is highest presumption. Secondly, we object because this, like all other errors, subverts the truth. Believe in the universal sonship of man, and what becomes of such words as: "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God;" "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus"? Next, the substitutionary work of Christ must go, for no true father needs expiation. With a father it is always enough for the son to confess. Only a judge or ruler demands satisfaction for the law broken; he is bound by absolute justice to exact punishment. Not so the father—he is ever free to forgive. Preach God as the "All-Father," and immediately you find there is no more place either for the atonement or for the general mediation of Christ. But you cannot stop here. The entire revelation rests on the fact of atonement by substitutionary sacrifice. Say, as many are now saying, that the notion of expiation by sacrifice has come to us from ancient heathenism, and you substantially deny the revelation itself.

We are very far from saying that all who receive this error will carry it to its logical conclusion. Many people are very much wanting in the logical faculty. But we may be sure that in the long run—in the course of two or three generations of believers—it will be fully extended and applied.

One word more. May it not be that this error has sprung partly from the defective preaching of the truth? Have we not sometimes so spoken of God's love to his own as to leave the impression that He had no love for the unregenerate? In exalting the Father's love for the children, we have almost overlooked the strong compassion, the bright and glorious generosity, that is ever flowing towards each member of our race, even the unworthiest. For his own children He has that love of relationship and of complacency which enabled Christ to say, "Thou hast loved them as Thou hast loved Me." For the world at large, the Christ-rejecting, godless world, there is the Creator-love of God, immeasurably inferior to that of the Father, yet how great, how strong in pure pity, how much superior to the noblest human love, none can tell.

Since writing the above we have received the following apposite extract, sent in by a friend, from Miss Whately's article on Charles Kingsley (Leisure Hour, Jan., 1878):—

> This confusion [of the Creatorship and Fatherhood of God] it is which has reacted so injuriously in the teaching of Kingsley, and others like him. Much they say is excellent in itself, so far as it goes; but their teaching loses its power by losing its distinctiveness. Without definiteness there can be no real power. Their scientific studies might have shown them that where there is no repulsion there can be no attraction. . . . Wherever the Church has lost her power of repelling, there she has lost her power of winning. The river of God's love to man is broad and deep, beyond all that it can enter the heart of man to conceive. But if its banks be destroyed, it loses in depth what it gains in breath, and becomes not a river, but a marsh.
> And this vague kind of teaching will also tend to cripple the Christian in standing up for Christ. The armour that is worn without the girdle will hang loosely, and incommode rather than strengthen the wearer. Without some separateness of spirit from the world; without a resolute acknowledgment that his standard is a different and a higher one than that of the world, the Christian can neither keep himself pure, nor benefit those among whom he is placed. GUERNSEY.—The Mission Crew of the Y.M.C.A. of Guernsey, Channel Islands, have a lifeboat which they use in all kinds of weather for distributing Bibles, tracts, &c., but for the better performance of the work they desire to have a small craft of some seventeen or twenty tons register, which could be used as a sailing and floating Bethel. Tracts, Testaments, or Bibles in any language will be welcomed. Any help in this or other ways may be sent to Mr. John Haworth, Chemist, St. James'-street, St. Peter Port, Guernsey, who will also give further information if desired.

SERVICE AND THE COMING OF CHRIST.

The angels in heaven serve the Lord, they stand and wait in his presence (Luke i. 19). The cherubim delight to do his will (Ezekiel i. 10). The prophets humbly stood before Him to do his pleasure (1 Kings xvii. 1). All creatures serve Him: even Satan is made to do good service, though he is a bad servant, for he never desires to please the Lord.

When Christ comes again, and we are raised to the throne of God and of the Lamb, it will be our life-work and our joy to serve Him (Rev. xxii. 3). And now, while we are here on the earth, we should find our chief delight in serving our Heavenly Father and the Lord Jesus Christ, as we may be led of the Holy Ghost. Day by day, and all the day long, from the moment that we open our eyes till we fall asleep, we should see the Lord present and be satisfied with Him, and live and serve and suffer to please Him. There are times for special waiting on God, and times for active and definite and continued service, as well as times of suffering.

When Christ was on earth He was emphatically The Servant. And we are not his true disciples unless we live to serve. The Thessalonians were commended for imitating the Lord and his Apostles (1 Thess. i. 6). Also Paul wrote, "Ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven." What these early Christians did, we most assuredly have to do now, especially in these last days of this dispensation.

If we regard one of the aspects of the seven churches that are mentioned in the Revelation as seven conditions of the Church of Christ in seven periods of time, then, doubtless, this is the Philadelphian period (Rev. iii. 7 to 13). It is to this church that the Lord has set "an open door" that none can shut, ver. 8. Was there ever a time when there was such an open door for service as now, the fields so extensive, and the opportunities to speak in the name of the Lord so numerous? And He has given "a little strength," or strength for a little time, to occupy the open door. All the "strength" is of the Lord. There never was a day when so many agencies were employed as now, and the Lord is employing all classes of society in his service, independent of sex or age.

One of the messages that was sent to the approved church of Smyrna was, "Be thou faithful unto death" (Rev. ii. 10). The members of that church died. There is no mention of death to the church of Philadelphia, but He sent the message, "Behold, I come quickly" (iii. 11). Some moment, while this church is patiently serving Him and waiting for Him, He will appear, and all will be taken up "from the hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world" (ver. 10; see also Luke xxi. 34, 36). Christ will come as suddenly as a flash of lightning (Matt. xxiv. 27). Oh, to be ready! But He will not come till all whom He will have ascend to meet Him are gathered out of the world into his Church. Therefore his servants are called on to watch for souls, and to "hold fast" what Christ has given, that no one take the crown (ver. 11). Not that we are to seek our own glory, but only his, whose servants we profess to be (John vii. 18).

When the saints are taken up, then, "the synagogue of Satan," the merely nominal professors of religion, "the Laodicean church," which He is to "spue out of his mouth" (Rev. iii. 16) will know who are the members of his own true Church (ver. 9).

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Cor. xv. 58). K.

MR. ROBERT HOGG, late missionary at Dalry, Ayrshire, and Uddingston, who left the latter place about fifteen months ago, and joined the Evangelisation Society at Melbourne, Australia recently received a call to a large and flourishing church at Rutherglen, Victoria, which he accepted, and was inducted to the charge as their minister on October 10 last.

OUR CHRISTIAN WORK.[*]

THE PRESENT DEPRESSION: ITS CAUSE AND REMEDY.

By Rev. SAMUEL WILKINSON, Taunton.

Dear Brethren and Friends,—Called by your kindness to the position I now occupy, I desire to speak to you with simplicity and directness. May God make the words I shall speak helpful to us, so that they may promote the result which we are all anxious to realise, first in the deepening of our own spiritual life, and then in the extension of the kingdom of our Lord, through our instrumentality and labours.

We meet as Christian workers, and we have a common purpose. Whether ministers or deacons, delegates or Church members, we heartily desire that our work may be crowned with blessing. We should not feel satisfied unless in some fair measure we see the Lord's work prospering in our hands. It is not in our power to command prosperity—that God alone can do; but it is given to us to work and pray for it, with the distinct assurance that our toil shall not be in vain. As we patiently persevere, quietly yet earnestly endeavouring to fulfil our calling, we may lay claim to the ancient promise: "Ye shall go out with joy and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree: and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off."

It is important to have a right conception of

THE SERVICE WE ARE CALLED TO RENDER

in the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. We may readily gather what that is, from Holy Scripture, which is our guide in these matters, "the only rule of faith and practice." We are wont to say (and, speaking broadly, it is sufficiently accurate) that our Christian work contemplates the edification and enlargement of the Church. As one has said, "We have a work amongst the living and a work amongst the dead." To advocate the interests of Christ's kingdom by the culture and sanctification of believers, and by leading the unsaved to the knowledge and love of Christ, must be our aim wherever we are placed, and however varied and manifold may be the details of our service. One is our Master, we must aim to please Him. Does not His voice fall upon our ear daily? If it does not, it is not because He is not speaking, but because we are dull in hearing. This is what He says: "Occupy till I come," and this, also, pointing to his cross as He says it, "Ye are not your own, but bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your bodies and spirits which are his."

Which of us does not long to be more successful in our work?

THE MARKS OF SUCCESS

will not be difficult to discover. Where shall we look for them? Shall it be in the rapid growth and architectural beauty of our church buildings; in the greater attractiveness of our services; in the increase of our wealth, or in the variety or completeness of our organisations? These things are important, and may be desirable, but you will agree that it is not in this direction we turn for evidence of real and permanent success in Christian labour. Rather it is in the spirituality and devotedness of our Church members, in the stedfastness and untiring diligence of our workers, in the activity and liberality of our flocks, and in the number of those who are brought to love and serve the Redeemer. When we bring men into living association with Christ, so that He becomes the object of worship, the ground of dependence, the centre of affection, the pattern for imitation, then are we truly successful in our labour. Does not true piety largely consist in fellowship with God and in obedience to his will? It is easy to place a "Life of Christ" on the drawing-room table, but it is another thing to be personally "like Christ," and to have his life exhibited in ours. But to nothing less than this are we called—to manifest the spirit of Jesus in our conduct, and to "walk even as He walked."

To what extent the work of the Church has been successful is a question to which, no doubt, very different answers would be given. Men of sanguine temperament view things in a different light from those whose minds are cast in an opposite mould. To the one class everything appears bright and cheering; they are delighted with the manifestations of progress which they think they see on every side, the signs of the long-expected golden age are beginning to appear. To the other class all things are dark and forbidding; the sky is leaden, and there are dense clouds gathering which betoken a terrific storm. They believe we are moving on from bad to worse; that the marks of degeneracy and decay are distinctly visible, and that the climax of evil will soon be reached, bringing with it a catastrophe of awful magnitude and far-reaching results.

It is likely that the real truth lies between the two extremes; things are neither so bright nor so dark as representative men on either side affirm. For myself, while I would carefully avoid morbid views, and cultivate the hopeful spirit which is characteristic of Christianity, I confess I am unable to accept the roseate picture which many draw of the Church's prosperity and the world's progress. It does not appear to me to be in harmony with the facts of the case. That the age is one of progress we all know, but in the sphere of religion, of vital Scriptural Christianity—the religion that elevates and sanctifies the individual—that raises and purifies the community—can we say there is great progress here? Can we say the age is an age of faith? Is not that

THE GREAT LACK OF THE AGE?

In the absence of a firm and vigorous faith, how can there be large spiritual successes, and a rapid growth of the Redeemer's kingdom?

Nor is it the part of wisdom to shut our eyes to the statement of the prophetic word which assures us that "in the last days perilous times will come;" or to overlook the solemn question of the Master, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" Unless we are prepared to say that these and many other Scriptures of similar import had their fulfilment in Apostolic days (which few could seriously maintain), we have times of sore conflict before us, ere the fulness of blessing is bestowed, and "the kingdoms of this world are those of our Lord and of his Christ." In my opinion the "perilous times" have come, and perhaps the greatest peril of all is that many Christian men do not see it so, and, therefore, are not prepared to speak and act as the presence of such times demands.

There are those, however, and among them are some of the ablest and most sober-minded of the leaders of thought and action in the Christian Church to-day, who have gone up to the watch tower, and proclaimed the alarm with courage and fidelity. If they are right, the Church's fiercest battle with the powers of evil has yet to be fought. In that conflict her endurance will be tried to the uttermost; but her triumph is assured, because the Lord Christ, her King and Head, will lead her to victory. The forces of truth are mightier than those of error and sin, and "greater is He that is with us than all that be against us."

Truth may be driven into a corner, but it cannot be destroyed. Though its light may now be dimmed, and only partially diffused over the earth, it will yet fill it with radiance and beauty. "As I live," saith the Lord, "the whole earth shall be filled with my glory." It will gild its mountains and shine across its plains, and "all flesh shall see it together." It must be so, for "the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

It is believed by many that there is at the present time a

that conversions are comparatively rare—that a large amount of the piety of the day is of a feeble type—that the power of the Spirit is not so manifest in connection with our various agencies as it was, and that, notwithstanding the vast amount of machinery in operation, there is needed a new baptism of power, in order that the energies and activities of the Church may be employed with more marked and general success. I fear this witness is true; if so, it ought to cause deep searchings of heart, and earnest inquiries, "Why is it thus?" since it is certain the Gospel is not changed in its nature, nor in its adaptation to the spiritual wants of mankind. We must be thankful that, though the blessing vouchsafed may be limited at home, the promised showers are falling with more copiousness on the foreign field, and that the power of the Gospel is being felt in the utmost parts of the earth. The more the attention of our churches is directed to the needs of the heathen world, the more fruitful will they become—the reflex influence will show itself in the revival of piety in our own borders.

Can we assign any cause for the spiritual depression which undoubtedly prevails? I do not think it is difficult to place one's finger on some of the causes: they are only too manifest.

I.—I would ask whether

had not something to do with it? The relation between doctrine and life in every community is close and intimate. If the teaching is not Scriptural and definite, it is in vain we look for marked spiritual success. The history of the Church makes this connection plain. Widespread revivals of vital piety have always been associated with the full and powerful exposition of evangelical truth, and with the earnest setting forth of the Gospel of God's grace in its simplicity and fulness. Whatever tends to throw this into the shade will be hurtful both to Christians and to the unsaved—to Christians, who should live spiritually upon the truth, which is inseparable from Christ Himself, the support of his people's life—to the unsaved, who would hear but little (in the circumstances I am supposing) of the way of life and peace through which alone they can obtain salvation.

A considerable change in theological opinion has taken place, we all know, during the last twenty-five years. The system of truth which was expounded by Calvin and Owen, by Leighton and Bunyan, Edwards and Fuller, and, more recently, by Chalmers, Candlish, and Hodge, is now distinctly repudiated by many, frowned upon by more, and viewed with coolness and dislike by a larger number still, as antiquated, out of harmony with the spirit of the age, and unfitted to cope with the difficulties and dangers and special needs of the men and women of the nineteenth century. I am free to say that in my judgment, however much that system may be opposed, it has never been refuted by anyone, nor do I ever expect to see that task accomplished, whoever the intellectual gladiator may be.

But probably I shall be told this is a period of transition and of sifting, and that some time must elapse before the theology of the future can be distinctly formulated. I reply that while I firmly believe with the Puritan Robinson "that God has still more light and truth to break forth from his Word," it is certain (as Principal McAll once put it) "the new light will never prove the old light to be darkness," besides, if I am upon what is, demonstrably, to my judgment, a Rock, I would fain know why I am to go in search of an unknown foundation, and, perhaps, sink in the mire, while the "transition" is being effected. Between the Rock and the "terra incognita," or Rock versus Swamp, surely I may prefer the Rock which is firm and durable, and affords a fine prospect, too. I will, at least, hold my footing there, till I know of something better elsewhere, which as yet no one has been able to show me.

"But what," it is sometimes said, "if, after all, it is only the form and method of stating these truths that has changed, and the substance is unimpaired?"

[*] An address delivered before the Somerset Congregational Union, at Chard, on Tuesday, April 13, 1885.

Ah! "If it be" so! But against that view of the matter I must protest with all the earnestness in my power. Whether the broader theology be true or false, this I am certain of, it is nor of the Puritan age, nor of the great evangelical lights who flourished at the beginning of the century. "No substantial difference!" I think I know its features too well to be deceived. Is there no real difference (to mention two or three points out of many) between the teaching which represents the Scriptures as the Word of God—a God-breathed book, an infallible guide—and that which refuses its claim to a proper and plenary inspiration, and is most at home when suggesting doubts and difficulties respecting its genuineness? Is there no difference between that view of the death of Christ which regards it as a satisfaction to the Divine Justice and a vindication of the Divine Government, and that which chiefly regards it as a means of producing a moral effect upon the human heart? Is there no difference between the teaching that declares the punishment of the impenitent and unbelieving to be endless, and that which affirms a further probation after death, and a prospect that ultimately all the lost will be restored?

These are sufficient to show what a gulf lies between the two systems. Do not let us be deceived; it is not a question of phrases, or the putting of things. If the one is true, the other is false; if the one is sweet, the other is bitter; if the one deserves our cordial acceptance, the other deserves and should have our firm and unflinching resistance. And this much I must add, that, wherever these broad views are preached, they are calculated to wither and blast the spiritual life of the people, to impair devout and holy feeling, and to paralyse those Christian activities which convey a flood of blessing wherever they are put forth.

II.—HAS WORLDLY CONFORMITY

nothing to do with the prevailing depression? The growth of a worldly spirit in the heart of the Church is too patent to be called in question. It shows itself in a hundred ways; indeed, so much has it developed of recent years that the old lines of distinction are almost obliterated. The wall of separation is broken down, and what remains of it is almost hidden from view by weeds and noxious growths. How can there be a vigorous spiritual life in such circumstances? How can the blessing of God descend upon us while we are thus running counter to the principles of his Word, and making friendship with that which is his foe? Have we not practically cut out of our Bible very much of its teaching on this subject? As for instance, the counsel of St. John, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in Him," "For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, the pride of life, is not of the Father, but of the world."

The Apostle Paul teaches that the world is crucified unto us by the cross of Christ, and we unto the world. Where do we find this double crucifixion? Is it in the love of luxury and the greed of gain; is it by the ardent pursuit of wealth, too often by methods of a questionable character? Is it in the increased desire for pleasure and amusement, and the unnatural and hurtful association of these things with the Churches of Christ, as if it were part of the Church's duty to find amusement for the people! Is it in the fact that entertainments and concerts (which I had almost said have become a part of our Congregational agency) are crowded, while the prayer-meeting and the lecture are sparsely attended. Is it in the acceptance of the world's style of living and of dress. Christian ladies taking up the world's fashions, which are sometimes very ridiculous, and not always strictly modest? And all the while we boast that we are the descendants of the Puritans, who would have condemned our conduct in these things as unworthy of our principles. It has been affirmed, and I am afraid with too much truth, that "cards, billiards, dancing, and even theatre-going have become common among professing Christians!" Is this compatible with a high-toned piety? Could any church flourish in which these things were winked at by its members and officers?

Is not the witness for truth in this way obscured, and the great cause of Christ hindered by its professed friends? The Church has indeed a most important duty to perform in relation to the world; it must endeavour to reach it and to save it by means of the Gospel of God's love; but it must not go down to the world's level and accept its rules of life and conduct. Jesus Christ is the Lawgiver for his people; his word is binding upon the Churches; and by the pen of his faithful Apostle He has given the unmistakable counsel, "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God."

When we enter the Christian home do we find the altar of prayer and praise daily set up with reverence and devoutness? Is the good old plan of setting apart one evening in the week for directly religious service commonly observed? Is not the carried to such lengths as to render almost impossible the prosecution of sacred studies? In consequence of this, many young persons, otherwise well instructed, have a very slight acquaintance with Christian doctrine, Church polity and history—subjects with which they ought to be familiar. The pressure of the needful examinations is so great that often there is little time or disposition left for other lines of study.

When we enter the house of God, we perceive at once a very marked and salutary improvement in regard to the buildings themselves, and the services are certainly more attractive than they used to be. But alongside of these improvements have recently grown up habits which are injurious both to old and young, and which make the work of preaching a task when it should be an inspiration and a joy. I refer especially to the practice of once a day attendance, which has grown rapidly of late, inflicting bitter wounds on many a pastor's heart.

The Sabbath sickness, which the late Dr. Mellor so graphically described, has increased its ravages; and to what can it be traced, except to a lack of interest in the services (notwithstanding the new and attractive features which have been generally introduced), or to a lowered sense of responsibility in regard to them. The demand for what are called entertaining, if not sensational sermons, rather than spiritually impressive and instructive ones, bodes no good, stamps the piety that seeks them as feeble, and ought, if we are faithful to our charge, to be firmly resisted.

These things go far to account for the lack of power that is deplored; they are not in accordance with the spirit of the Gospel, however much they may be with that of the age. If a great revival should, in God's mercy, come to us, they would speedily be altered; indeed, if the love of Christ possesses the soul, it will, for the most part, instinctively lay them aside. They will not satisfy hearts filled with God's Spirit, and longing to be instruments of blessing to their fellows.

III. In addition to these, there is existing a sort of which is exceedingly hurtful in its influence, especially upon our young people. It is not exactly unbelief, but it is a subtle spirit which casts an air of doubt over all definite religious truths, speaking disparagingly of them as things we have outgrown in this advanced age, and can afford to do without. It does not deny that the Bible is a Divine book, in some sense, but it takes the liberty to sit in judgment upon it, and to reject as much as it pleases, whereas our true attitude in relation to the Bible is that so well expressed by Dr. Sinclair Paterson in his work, entitled "In Defence," where he says, "I accept it implicitly as God's testimony to truth. I do not dare to judge his Word, for indeed it judges me." The spirit I speak of does not altogether reject the Gospel, but it fritters away all that is most precious, declaring that St. Paul's thoughts were "coloured by the speculations of his age," so that we must receive his glowing utterances with caution.

I am reminded of a conversation I had with a gentleman I met some time ago in one of the Channel Islands. He was an eminent astronomer and mathematician. The talk turned on religious matters. He said to me, "Yours is Paul's doctrine, but Paul misunderstood his Master." I could only say, if Paul misunderstood Christ, who might be expected to understand Him? Since Paul received the Christian doctrine directly from Christ Himself, that He might publish it in all places, is it reasonable to suppose Christ would leave him in error as to what He meant, or send him forth with a distorted and misunderstood Gospel, or that He would set his seal to that mistaken teaching in the hearts of multitudes? The Apostle, at any rate, believed he rightly interpreted the Master's words, and was absolutely devoted to Him. It will be our wisdom to accept Paul's exposition of the Gospel of Christ, rather than any modern interpretation of it, for that is really what is sometimes offered us under cover of Christ's exposition of his own teaching.

It is the same subtle spirit which robs the prayers of the Church of much of their potency, by saying that while they influence the mind of the worshipper in a salutary way, they are not to be viewed as a means of obtaining direct and positive blessing.

By this spirit the ministry is not regarded as a Divinely-appointed channel of instruction and consolation; and of course when this element is ignored we need not wonder if an historical lecture is preferred to a sermon, or a scientific discourse to the unfolding of the Word of God.

The ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper are treated after a similar manner, as being mere signs, instead of "means of grace;" in such case no blessing is anticipated, and it would be impossible that any could be received. But we know that wherever there is a believing heart there is a substantial blessing. I grant, fully, that for perplexity felt by thoughtful minds we should make much allowance, and deal with honest doubts in a fair and serious way; but this semi-sceptical spirit, who can grasp? This cavilling tone, who can deal with it? Our young people are in special danger, and should be warned earnestly, for this temper is most deadening in its tendency, and must interfere greatly with the success of our labours. It is practical unbelief, and did not Jesus say He could there "do no mighty works because of their unbelief"?

And now in what direction do we

LOOK FOR A REMEDY?

May we not anticipate brighter times—times of larger blessing? Undoubtedly, if we use the appropriate means, and cast from us those evils which work so much mischief. There are no new remedies for spiritual feebleness and depression. It is in the right use and adaptation of the old ones to our present needs that we must look for revival and returning prosperity. What has succeeded aforetime will succeed now, if employed with wisdom and earnestness—"Rend your heart, and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God, for He is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth Him of the evil." "Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil, learn to do well." "Ask, and ye shall receive; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and to you the door shall be opened." "Ask ye of the Lord rain in the time of the latter rain. So the Lord shall make bright clouds and give them showers of rain, to every one grass in the field." Faith and prayer are the old prescription; a powerful one it is, and it has lost none of its potency.

What we want is a firmer faith in God, the living God, the Hearer of prayer; and in the revelation He has given to us. When we open the Book, we must say, "This is God's voice to me. What is here written, I must believe; what is here required, I must do."

Rash, dogmatic statements about Scriptural truth one would not desire; but as little do I like those feeble and uncertain utterances which send the people away to thread their steps through a maze of perplexities, instead of showing them "a plain path for their feet," and entreating them to walk in it. To scatter doubt is the work of the enemy. Let the Lord's servants humbly, but boldly, declare the counsel of God. We must be able to say, as the Apostle did, "We also believe, and therefore speak."

I take it we have a creed (though it be not imposed by authority), for a creedless Church and ministry can never be spiritually and permanently effective, or fulfil its proper function as a witness of Christ. Yet we know full well that the mere possession of a creed, however accurate, will not make our work successful. We must grasp the teaching it embodies with a faith which is a living force, utter it with the fulness of an earnest love, and press it with zeal and fidelity upon the acceptance of the people. While I would retain a creed, definite and full—for what I deem solid reasons—yet still more would I desire that the image of Christ, who is the sum of it, should be engraven on our hearts, and that our whole being should be submitted unto Him.

Then, too, we must give greater prominence to the central truths of Christianity. Christ crucified and risen, and exalted at the right hand of God, and soon to return in power and glory, must be the main theme of those of us who preach in his name. We must never tire of telling the story of Redeeming Love, and we must tell it as those who feel the power and preciousness of it in our own souls. From all our reading and researches, we must come back to this, for in it stands our own and our people's salvation. If we allow this to fall into the background, we cannot hope to be successful. God will not set his seal to anything else; so we have no alternative. We must go on lifting up Christ, relying on the promise, "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me."

I have not forgotten the words addressed to a body of students by the late Dr. Raleigh, in which he said, "Be not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ: sooner or later every preacher of anything he puts in its place. To preach the same truths as have been preached in the Church from the beginning will not be grievous to you, while to your hearers it will be pleasant and safe." I was one of the students who listened to those words, and I am prepared to endorse them to-day. In such shifting times as the present, let us exhibit those foundation truths which stand unshaken as the great mountains from age to age; ever fresh as the morning breeze, or the inflowing waves of the sea.

As the quaint Puritan, Richard Sibbs, observed, "Christ Himself, or something tending to Christ, must ever be the theme and mark to aim at."

We want also to "abide in Christ," and to be more deeply consecrated in our whole life and aim to the Master's service. It is easy to talk of revivals, but

LET US BEGIN AT HOME.

Do not we need to be revived. This can only be had by personal fellowship with the Saviour; by keeping close to his side, listening continually to his voice and walking humbly with Him. We are too cold towards the Master, too slack in obeying his orders, not completely surrendered unto Him. Yet it is in making that surrender unto Christ that we shall find our work a pleasure, and may confidently anticipate God's blessing. It is all summed up in this word, "Ye are not your own, but his."

"Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee."

Then, as leading up to these things, and yet, too, the crown of them all we need to be

"FILLED WITH THE HOLY GHOST."

We can neither exercise strong faith, nor apprehend the power of the Cross, nor be fully consecrated to Christ, unless we receive much of his Spirit. We are entirely dependent upon Him. Do we realise this as we ought, and plead earnestly for this gracious baptism? What are we in our own religious life? what in our public labours? what are we in our studies, in our pulpits, in our Sunday-schools, in our Church services, in our manifold organisations and evangelistic labours? what are we without Him? We want his power; we want it in fulness. This, indeed, would change the whole aspect of things—transform our barrenness into fruitfulness, and make the Church a mightier force than she has been since Pentecost till now.

Come, O Wind, and breathe upon us that we may be holy, effective, and successful workers in the vineyard of our Lord!

SLAVERY IN MOROCCO.

The Committee of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society have just published a Report made to them by Messrs. John V. Crawford (late H. M. Acting-Consul in Cuba) and Charles H. Allen, F.R.G.S., Secretary to the Society. This Report is the outcome of a visit undertaken by them, on behalf of the Society, to the principal seaport towns of the Empire of Morocco, and contains a large amount of most important and valuable information.

The Authors, introduced by Mr. A. E. Pease, M.P., have had an interview with Mr. Bryce, M.P., Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. Mr. Bryce, who has travelled in Morocco, appeared much interested in the views laid before him by the deputation, especially in the proposal to have the seat of the British Legation removed from Tangier to one of the cities in the interior, so that the British Minister might be in personal contact with the Sultan. Until this is done, it is affirmed that there is no chance of obtaining the Sultan's consent to the suppression of the slave trade in Morocco, which is still as active as ever.

This idea of removing the British Legation (necessarily leading the way for all others) from Tangier to one of the large cities of the interior is again and again insisted on in the Report. It is to be feared, however, that, under present conditions, what would be gained in one way would be lost in another. These Legations form a Diplomatic Circle which we heard called in Tangier a Diplomatic Ring. Our own Representative at Tangier has been so little regarded as having the interests of his countrymen at heart, that they prefer in case of need to seek the aid of the American Consul to that of the English Minister. Yet an endeavour was lately made to oust the American Consul, which, having been fully inquired into has been denounced as an intrigue by the American Government.

There is no position in which unsullied integrity and incorruptible disinterestedness are more essential than in our representatives abroad; none where the fierce light of a well-informed and enlightened public opinion is more necessary to keep men straight. Remove the Legations into the interior, where they will be surrounded by notions parallel to those of our Dark Ages, and where they have every temptation to feather their own nests as quickly as possible, and, unless they consist of men of incorruptible virtue and strength of character, they will be of less use than at Tangier, where they are to some extent amenable to the influences of civilisation and Christianity.

We quite admit the necessity of securing a freer access to the Sultan and his Ministers, and greater influence over them; but, in order that that influence may be of the right kind, our representatives must be selected for no other reason than that they are competent, trustworthy, and reliable men, and the people at home must keep themselves much better informed than they are at present as to their representatives in foreign lands.

The following extracts from the Report are sufficient to corroborate what we say. They relate to cases of horrible oppression and cruelty:—

> The Great Powers of Europe and the United States have resident Ministers within five minutes' walk of the den where this poor lady is dying by slow degrees, and these potent Ministers of the united power of the civilised world ask Europe and America to believe that they have not sufficient influence with the Sultan to procure the liberation of this afflicted woman!
> We laid the case of this unfortunate prisoner before their Excellencies Sir J. Drummond Hay and the French and German Ambassadors, all of whom declared ignorance of his existence. It is hoped that they will now do something to procure his release. His name is Boo-Mahdi.
> I hope this dreadful and disgusting picture will excite the pity and indignation of Christians at home. The publication of these particulars may cause the British Minister at Tangier to obtain, at all events, the removal of these cruel fetters from the three unhappy Kaids now lying in the prison a few hundred yards from where I write. . . .
> Many of the poor wretches are confined at the caprice, or to gratify the animosity or cupidity, of some native official. I am very sorry to be obliged to add that a great many of the false and fraudulent claims on which numbers of Moors are imprisoned are made by native protégés, and with the knowledge and consent of European officials.
> The protégé system is distinctly discouraged at the English Legation. In some others, however, it is not so; and the yearly increasing number of native protected subjects not only causes embarrassment to the Moorish Government, but it opens the door to an immense amount of tyranny which is perpetrated on the helpless, unprotected natives of the Empire.
> Can any person wonder, after reading these cases, that the Moorish Government should look with a jealous eye upon the establishment of foreigners in Morocco, and should strive against the extension of any further rights and privileges to Christians? It is questionable whether these dreadful instances of abuse ever reach the ears of the Foreign Legations, or if they do, it is in such a one-sided form that the delinquencies of their protégés are easily overlooked through the machinations of subalterns.
> It would be most fortunate if the diplomatists at Tangier could be induced to unite in bringing their collective influence to bear upon the Sultan for the general good.

We submit that the facts above stated or quoted by the Authors of the Report do not lead to the following conclusions with which the Report ends:—

> It must be borne in mind that the Sultan's will is law, and if we wish to regenerate Morocco, and open it up to commerce, the Legations must be where they can have direct access to him, and make their united influence felt.
> By direct contact with the representatives of Europe and with Europeans generally, the Sultan and his people would soon become reconciled to the progressive influences of the age we live in.

On the contrary, they show that the Legations themselves, and the officials connected with them, are, by neglect or actual misconduct, responsible for much evil, and that, if this exists at Tangier, it would be greatly increased if the Legations were removed to the interior.

Having said this, however, we heartily commend the pamphlet with its most timely intelligence. (55, New Broad-street, E.C., with map, 6d)

THE CHURCH ARMY.

Dear Sir,—The wonderful blessing which has attended the efforts of the Church Army has caused us far to out-grow our present temporary and very cramped Training Home. This department of the work is of vital importance, as on the training of the evangelists will depend, with God's help, our whole future. Rev. F. S. Webster devotes his services without remuneration, and lives in the Training Home with the men.

How are we to meet the demands for workers that come to us on every hand? In our extremity we have made a "venture of faith," and secured a building on remarkably advantageous terms, which will exactly suit us, and accommodate more than double our present number. We have to find £4000 by May 15. I am sure if your readers could see the miracles of grace that are continually wrought amongst us, in changed hearts, lives, and homes, they would feel that this agency has a strong claim on their support. Our working people themselves gave over £4000 last year, mostly in pence, to further the work.—Faithfully yours,

W. Carlile, Hon. Sec.

36, Southampton-street, Strand, W.C.

SOUTHWOLD, SUFFOLK.—In a letter received from Mr. J. Dodsworth, he says:—We have just concluded a very successful eight days' mission, conducted by Mr. Thomas Payne. Much good is being done here.

"THE FIELD IS THE WORLD."

NOTES OF MISSIONARY PROGRESS.

The disinterested conclusions of a well-informed, impartial eye-witness, are deserving the attention of those who wish to form a just estimate of the value and success of any enterprise. Miss C. F. Gordon Cumming has contributed to the current number of Good Words, a paper entitled "A Traveller's Impressions of Christian Missions," in which she notes some of the "startling differences in the results produced by mission work in divers lands," which, when journeying, she has had the occasion and inclination to remark. Making acquaintance with mission work in Hindustan Miss Cumming was struck at first by the apparent hopelessness of the attempt to évangelise India, seeing what little fruit, comparatively, had resulted from the many years of faithful toil expended there. Closer investigation, however, revealed that it was in the very nature of the work that it should be to a large extent hidden from view—for when is the operation of under-mining self-evident to a superficial observer? Yet its importance and utility are none the less sure, because not at once obvious to careless bystanders.

In religious countries, such as India and China, there are time-honoured, intellectual systems to be dethroned from the affections and prejudices of the people before the Gospel of Christ can be generally received. Another obstacle has arisen, strange to say, from the very multiplicity of agencies at work in these great countries; for alas! the differences of doctrine and, worse still, the bigotry of sects are apt to confuse and even repel the uncomprehending heathen.

Far other have been the difficulties encountered by the missionaries to the Islands of the Pacific. "Here there is no struggle with highly cultivated intellects. . . . Almost as a matter of course, these brown races acknowledge the mental superiority of the new comer. For awhile they may reject the teaching which bids them turn away from their accustomed pleasures, but sooner or later they are sure to yield." Expecting little that was good at Fiji, what was Miss Cumming's surprise to find those islands completely Christianised? So great has been the success of the Wesleyan Missionary Society's labours there that "carefully trained native ministers and teachers" reside in every village, where also chapels and schools are standing which have been built by the people themselves.

> During a residence of two years in the Fijian Archipelago, I had occasion to visit a large number of these villages, as a guest in the house of the teacher, or the chief. I lived in the midst of the kindly, courteous people; I marked the reverent devoutness of their lives, the simple earnestness of their bearing at the never-failing morning and evening family worship, and frequent church services; and I found it hard to believe the facts related to me by reliable eye-witnesses, of the appalling scenes of carnage, fighting, human sacrifices, most debasing idolatry, and loathsome cannibal feasts, which five, ten, or fifteen years previously had formed thé incidents of daily life in districts where now English ladies and their children may travel, or even settle, in perfect security.

In visiting the Friendly, Navigators', and Society Islands Miss Cumming's experience was the same. "Not one trace of idolatry is to be found in any of these isles." Ancient barbarous customs "are replaced by Christianity of a thoroughly practical sort—a Christianity which exercises a far more decided influence on daily life than it appears to do in our own British Isles." The Sandwich Islands, also, are another trophy of the Gospel, having been won to Christ in the early years of this century through the agency of the American Congregational Mission. At the present time Fijian and Hawaiian converts are earnestly labouring as missionaries to neighboring islands, a work in which several have already lost their lives. We agree with Miss Cumming that—

> In glancing at the history of the last half century of mission work in the Pacific, it is obvious that the progress of the good work has undoubtedly been more rapid, in consequence of the wisdom with which the various Missionary Societies agreed to divide the isles, instead of wasting their strength by competing in the same field.

Not only do we commend Miss Cumming's excellent paper for perusal, but also her example, for the emulation of those whose privilege it is to seek recreation abroad. If Christians would but identify themselves, wherever they go, with the Lord's people, showing a lively, sympathetic, and practical interest in work done for Him, they would, besides giving encouragement and help to the labourers, find for themselves increased pleasure and enlargement of heart.

When in Burmah recently, Lord and Lady Dufferin visited the Karen Christians. The mission to this interesting people started in the time of Judson, has been conducted by American Baptists, and its converts now number at least 20,000. We have heard that when the pioneer missionaries first delivered their message, one of their audience—an old man, with flowing silvery locks–rising, told how his people (the Karens) had an ancient tradition, to the effect that some day a white man should come from the far West, bringing them the tidings of the true God and the real religion. He believed that the saying had that day been fulfilled in their hearing; and, with tears, the old man entreated all present to believe the good news just communicated to them.

> The annals of this Mission will compare in thrilling interest with anything recorded in the New Testament, or in the history of the spread of Christianity in any land.—Rock.

Another triumph of the American Baptists has been their Telegu Mission, the Jubilee of which was recently celebrated at Nellore. The following, from The Freeman of April 30, is a comparison of the years 1836 and 1886: "Then there was but one station; now there are twenty from Madras to Chicacole, and from the sea to Hanamakouda, centres of Christian work and influence. Then there were but two missionaries; now about fifty. Then there were not ten disciples; now there are 30,000. Then there was but one small school; now there are many stations and village schools, a High School, and Girls' School, and two theological seminaries, Then there was one small thatched chapel; now there are many commodious, comfortable, and beautiful houses of worship." At Ongole there is now the largest Baptist Church in the world, its members (i e., baptized believers) numbering 14,162.

The blessing which has attended the London Missionary Society's efforts in Madagascar is universally known; yet one never wearies of hearing it. Every fresh proof of the reality of the work there is read with interest.

> Madagascar is almost a miracle of missionary triumph. The native Christians of that island have given more than £300,000 for the spread of the Gospel within the past ten years.—Illustrated Missionary News.

According to the Norwegian missionares labouring in Madagascar the people of the Hova kingdom have already profited by the sufferings which the country have endured through the French war. Hypocrisy has been checked, and devoutness and humility substituted, a state of things which is manifest in the Spirit and larger attendance at the prayer-meetings. Here, again, is proof that there is no exception to the all things working together for good.

Various have been the countries mentioned in this short sketch; and varied have been the results and experiences of mission work herein recounted, yet in all we trace the one connecting link—the way of the Lord preparing! In the Islands of the Pacific "the valleys are being exalted;" in China and India "the mountain and hill made low;" in Madagascar (and Christian lands generally) the crooked is being made straight, and the rough places plain, because "the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

EASTBOURNE SEAMEN'S MISSION.—A crowded meeting, chiefly of ladies, was held in aid of the funds of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, at Eastbourne, on Thursday night, April 29, presided over by Mr. G. F. Chambers, F.G.S. During the meeting, Mr. Mather, the Director of the Mission, gave a detailed account of the work in the North Sea, with powerful lime-light illustrations, and highly complimented the ladies of Eastbourne for making articles of clothing and other acceptable gifts for the crews of the trawling fleet.

John T. Markley.

ARE YOU A STRANGER?

In "that day" the Lord our King will say, "I was a stranger." But how shall we know our King among the strangers? And how shall we know the strangers amid the great city throng?

A thoughtful business man was pressing his way up from one of the wharves of Montreal, one sultry morning in August, when he noticed on the opposite side of the street a man, apparently lost in thought, going leisurely towards the river. In a moment he seemed to hear his heart's voice say, "Go speak to that man."

He paused, but his tongue seemed dumb: and he said, "But, Lord, what can I say to him?"

Instantly the thought came, "Ask him if he is a stranger." And hastening across the street he walked beside the man and, laying his hand upon his arm, said kindly, "Will you allow me to ask if you are a stranger?"

"Yes, I am a stranger," was the reply, with a troubled and questioning look.

"Yet not a stranger to the Lord Jesus, I hope?"

"Indeed, I am, then; and, what is more, He does not want to knowme, I am sure."

"But He does know all about you, and you will not doubt his love when you come to know Him." Then taking him by the hand he continued, "If you are not in haste, will you stop a moment just here?"

And the two stood on the corner while with prayerful persuasion the stranger was induced to speak of himself, of his struggle with poverty, his long and weary journey in search of employment, his bitter discouragement, and his determination that day to take his own life.

Then Jesus was lifted up, the gracious, loving God, the Saviour, the ever-present Friend, able and willing to sustain beneath every burden. Jesus was introduced to the stranger as only one loving, devoted friend can introduce another; and the same promised presence that had guided the steps, the thoughts, the words, was in the earnest entreaty, and won the heart of the wanderer. He accepted Christ then and there.

Subsequently for many days, as he afterwards testified, his way was full of trouble; but the Lord went before, kept him steadfast, and brought him at last into a "large place."—American Messenger.

DROOPING LILIES.

Mr. Chorley, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N., the director of the North-East London Gospel Missions, writes:—We have taken for a term of years, with option of purchase, a most commodious country house, standing on the summit of Brigadier-hill, in its own grounds, of half an acre, surrounded by fields and woods, forming part of the ancient Enfield Chase. Here we have commenced our country holidays for poor children with an instalment of twenty-four. The main feature of our holiday scheme is that we take the children for a fortnight and make no charge whatever. Indeed, from the terrible destitution prevailing around some of our Mission-halls (Bow Common, Old Ford, and Poplar) we are often obliged to furnish a few odd garments, or a pair of shoes into the bargain, if the "drooping lilies" are to be freshened with a blow of country air.

We have begun the season with a few pounds left over from last year's contributions, but have only sufficient for the first fortnight's company. We have over a thousand poor children in our six schools, and though we do not strictly limit ourselves to these, yet it will be seen how many pitiful pale faces are wistfully turning towards our country retreat.

MR. ARROWSMITH has conducted a fourteen days' mission at Barrow-in-Furness, in connection with St. Mark's Church. Many testimonies have come to light of the good work done amongst the children. In almost every class in the Sunday-schools there are some who profess to have found Jesus as their Saviour. Besides the children's services, there were others for parents, young men and women, domestic servants and others, all of which have been greatly blessed. Mr. Arrowsmith also held several drawing-room meetings.

A LESSON IN FAITH FROM AN AFRICAN CHILD.

[The servant of the Lord who wrote the following is now in glory, but the lesson of simple faith recorded by her remains. May many little ones, and many grown ones too, learn it, and may prayer arise from many hearts for the salvation of Africa's children.]

I should very much like to tell you about something that happened to-day, showing how a little black girl prayed and trusted in Jesus, and how her prayer was answered. This afternoon I went out to a neighbouring town. In the morning I had made some bread, which was in the oven when the time came for me to start, and as I was in haste I could not wait for it to finish baking, and so I called a little girl twelve years' old, and told her to stay in the house and attend to the bread and take it out of the oven in about twenty minutes' time. Afterwards she was to shut the door (which closes with a spring) and leave the house for play. I had a key with which I could enter when I returned. After I had gone, Tittie, instead of paying attention to what I had told her, went at once to play, and presently a little boy who knew nothing about the bread shut the door. When little Tittie found this out she was in a great state of alarm. She had been trusted with the bread; I was not expected back for two or three hours; and the door was closed against her. She could not get to her work although she could see the oven through a window.

Three hours afterwards I returned. Before I reached the house I was met by some children who said, "Ma, Tittie's crying." "What for?" said I. "Because the bread is burnt." "How is that?" I asked. "Wana shut the door and Tittie couldn't get in to take it out of the oven" came the answer. I very soon opened the door and went to the oven and there found the bread only just sufficiently done. Tittie who had followed me said directly, "Ma, that is because I prayed." "What did you pray for?" I asked. "That God would not let the bread burn, and you see He has not." I questioned her further and found that she and three other little girls had had a prayer meeting lasting all the afternoon. They had each prayed in turn that God would not let the bread burn, and although the bread was in the oven four hours instead of one, their prayer was answered; it was not burnt at all.

I must now explain to you how this, although a direct answer to prayer, was not a miracle. We use here an oven heated by an oil lamp, and today I had put in a new kind of wick. This did not burn well, and, therefore, did not make the oven so hot as usual, thus making the bread take longer to bake. We have never known such a thing to happen with the oven before. I was so pleased to find the child had taken her trouble to Jesus that I did not scold her for her inattention to my wishes. There is much that I should like to tell you about these little ones. When first I came amongst them they used to laugh at nearly all I did or said, but now we are getting used to one another, and before long I hope shall love one another very much; but I want you dear children who love the Saviour to pray for them and me, that I may be able to bring many of them to know and love Him too, and to trust Him in everything.

REDEEMING THE TIME.

IN Col. iv. 5, Paul exhorts us to redeem the time; or, as it might be rendered, to "buy up the opportunity." That injunction is being very literally obeyed by the young men spoken of in THE CHRISTIAN of April 22, as having devoted themselves for work in China.

Two of these, Mr. Arch. Orr Ewing and Mr. Graham Brown, are passing, eastward bound, along the Riviera, and addressing meetings wherever they stop. On Sunday, April 25, they spoke at two meetings, held in the Scotch Church, San Remo. Both told of their conversion, of how they were led to forsake business and home and friends to go to China, and of the faith and joy that filled them in prospect of the work. Rev. Alex. Robertson, who presided, spoke of the honoured names they bore in Scotland, and, in the name of all present, wished them God-speed on their journey, and assured them of the Christian sympathy and prayers that would follow them. In the evening Mr. A. Orr Ewing addressed a meeting of Italians, Mr. Gordon Oswald acting as interpreter.

The missionaries proceed to Venice, from which port they sail direct to Shanghai.

NORTH SEA FISHERMEN.

SIR,—I have received the following communication from the Great Grimsby Ice Company:—

"We are informed that the Edward Auriol left our fleet on March 26, and there has not been a Mission vessel near them since. There is a coper in the fleet now that is doing a very great deal of harm. A lot of the men went on board for tobacco, and instead of getting the latter they got that infernal drink. The men got wild with drink, and many of them did not get on board their own vessels, and some of them have come in and left the vessels undermanned. This state of affairs is terrible. Please to order a Mission vessel to the fleet at once, and let us know when you have done so, and also the date we may expect her to join our fleet."

In addition to the invaluable surgical and medical aid supplied to the smacksmen on board the Mission vessels, we have, since last November, effectually checkmated the coper by selling tobacco at 1s. per lb. in five of the fleets (the coper's price being 1s. 6d.), but twelve Mission vessels are required to keep pace with the demands upon our help. It is hard, very hard, to know that these pests of the North Sea are still pursuing their calling in fleets where no Mission ship is stationed. A completely-equipped vessel costs £2150. Will not your readers place it in our power to despatch one to every fleet?

Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P., and Mr. Samuel Hoare, M.P., have recently consented to join me as Trustees of such vessels as may become the property of the Mission, and I may quote the remarks of the former in conclusion:—"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future.

Your obedient servant,
E J. MATHER, Director.

OPENSHAW.—In connection with the Gospel services conducted here by Mr. Henry Lakin and Mrs. Cole, God has given a great blessing to this town. The Christians have been much quickened, and many unconverted men and women have given themselves to the Lord.

EVANGELISATION.—The low state of spiritual life in the Churches at home is due, in great part, to the lack of earnest effort to send the Gospel to the destitute abroad. That the spirit of missions is the spirit of Christ is proven by the fact that only in proportion to what the Church is doing for the heathen world, is the Church spiritually prospered.—Rev. Dr. Pierson.

Letters to the Editor.

DIRECTED EMIGRATION.

SIR,—I have just heard from one of my correspondents in the Canadian North-West, who returns to me the counterfoils of the introductory letters I sent him with the first of the six parties of respectable young men who have gone there this season with the consent of their friends, to learn farming. These counterfoils give me the names of each young man, the date of his arrival, and the address of the farm he has been placed on.

During the last five years I have sent out about one thousand young men for this purpose, many of whom are now working their own land, after thus getting the necessary experiences, and this one correspondent writes me that he has situations ready for 115 young men. The spring is the best time for going to Canada, and the cost of outfit, rail, &c, is about £20, full particulars of which I am willing to give to the friends who are determined to emigrate for farming, not intemperate or lazy, prepared for a rough life, and possessing those qualities of character, industry, and thrift which are necessary to success everywhere.—Yours, &c.,

W. H. NEWEIT.

"IRELAND IN THE PAST."

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me to say a word or two about the letter signed "R. S. Dobbs" in your issue of April 22? May I also say that, knowing Ireland thoroughly, and taking a deep interest in her affairs, I join the writer in the cheerful view he takes, although I cannot adopt the background he gives to the picture of the past and present of that portion of the United Kingdom? For example, evidence is not forthcoming, either written or traditionary, that seventy years ago both gentry and clergy were guilty of "card-playing for money," "field sports," and Sunday dinner-parties, to the extent indicated. It is true that both amongst Protestants and Romanists religion was in a low state; but neither the clergy nor the laity were wholly given over to evil practices. Then, as to "Mr. Brown," being the only one who, nineteen years since (if that be what is meant) preached the Gospel, happily facts lead in a less gloomy direction. That which is said about the question as to the "Divinity of Christ" being disallowed at a school examination, must be taken along with the fact that that doctrine was commonly preached by the episcopal clergy, intensely emphasised by Presbyterians, and even Roman Catholics did not deny it. I pass over the story about Mr.———'s congregation going to the Romish chapel as irrelevant. But I cannot overlook what is said of the nobles and gentry and the wives and daughters of farmers, of which I must say, that whatever colourable excuse may have been given in certain isolated cases, the sweeping charge preferred is not supportable by anything more reliable than unwholesome gossip.

I wish simply that such statements as those of the letter under notice may not go forth unquestioned, for if they do, not only will a handle be given to the foes of Ireland's religious interests, but it will—most inadvertently no doubt—have been supplied by one of her best friends.—Yours, &c.,

CLERICUS.

GLASGOW Y.M.C.A.

MR. GEORGE CLARKE recently concluded a fortnight's mission in the Christian Institute. The meetings on Sabbaths were for men only, and the large hall was crowded in every part. The first Sabbath sixty-seven rose for prayer and the second Sabbath seventy-two. Every night during these two weeks the hall was filled, and as a result of the mission over 300 names have been handed in of those who have professed to trust Jesus.

It was touching to notice the interest young men and women took in their companions, and the joy at seeing them deciding for Christ. Some most interesting cases of conversion have taken place, and our hearts are full of gratitude for what the Lord has done. Mr. Clarke addressed large meetings in Kelvinside Free Church for ladies only in the afternoons.

BALL'S POND.—Four weeks' Gospel services, at the Wall-street Mission-hall, have been refreshing seasons, both to saint and sinner. On Easter Monday several of the poor of the district were invited to tea, and afterwards, a meeting for consecration was conducted.

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE,

JUNE 23, 24, and 25.

Beloved Christian Friends,—The Mildmay Conference will, God willing, take place on June 23, 24, and 25; and it is our privilege to invite you to be with us on that occasion.

A subject, one always of deep importance, but the consideration of which seems to be specially demanded at the present time, has been selected:

"THE BELIEVER'S SEPARATION UNTO GOD."

Shall we be wrong in affirming that the prevailing, the pre-eminent sin of the children of God in every age has been alliance with, conformity to, and absorption in, the world? When we look at the union of the sons of God with the daughters of men in antediluvian days, of Israel with the Midianites in the wilderness, and with the surrounding nations in the promised land, of the Church of Christ with the world in the present dispensation, we see how in each succeeding period disregard to the command to "come out and be separate" has been the fertile source of dishonour to the name of God, of disaster to his people, and of damage of the gravest character to the world. The device, the too successful device, of Satan, has ever been to "teach the servants" of the Lord "to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols," and thus to draw them aside from the path of separation unto Him who has purchased them with his own blood.

And what has been the terrible result? The final pages of Revelation show how the professing Bride of Christ, who once, for a brief moment, looked forth "as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners," has degenerated till, regarded in her general appearance, she is seen as "Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth!" The Divine foreshadowing has been, alas! but too exactly fulfilled, and though there have ever been a faithful few—for God has not "left Himself without witness"—how small, how lamentably small, their number; their light, how faint and dim!

And is it not so now? The line between the Church and the world seems well nigh obliterated; the maxims and ways of the world are introduced into the Church; numbers, professedly engaging in work for the Lord, are found eagerly seeking the friendship and enjoying the amusements of his enemies; and the holy ordinances of the Church are prostituted that the world may delude itself into the name and profession of Christianity.

Brethren! ought these things so to be? Oh! how solemnly, how tenderly, does our God plead with his people regarding their unfaithfulness to Him, and invite them to return to their first love, when "Israel was holiness to the Lord." Shall He plead in vain? Is not the subject of "Separation unto God" one of unspeakable, of paramount importance? Shall we not do well to come together in a spirit of prayerfulness and humility, to consider our condition—to confess our guilt, to recognise anew our consecration to Him to whom we are espoused?

In inviting you so to do, we venture to make a suggestion, and we make it earnestly. By too many the Mildmay Conference has, we fear, been regarded as an occasion for hearing interesting and powerful addresses, of meeting with Christian friends, and of religious enjoyment. To drop in for one or another of the meetings, and to be satisfied with hearing this or that speaker, has been a fashion with many. Now, while we would not urge those to abstain from coming, who can by no effort on their part come for more than one day, or even one meeting, and while believing that such shall not go "empty away," we would most urgently press upon those who have it in their power, to attend the whole series of meetings, that is, the principal ones. The subjects, you will observe, are strictly consecutive, and are thus arranged with the design of leading the minds of all who come into a line of truth, which we believe to be according to the mind of the Spirit, and which if apprehended, and humbly pursued, must surely affect all our lives most powerfully.

Such is the result we prayerfully anticipate from the Conference. May our gracious God grant it for his dear Son's sake! We ask you to unite with us in frequent supplication that He may guide us in all the necessary arrangements, incline the hearts and touch the lips of those whom He is pleased to put in trust with his message to us, and to vouchsafe a very rich manifestation of his humbling and healing presence to all who shall attend. If He is pleased to deal thus with us—and why should we doubt it?—we may surely expect that the spiritual results of the Conference of 1886 shall be felt throughout a far wider circle than that of those who may be actually present at it—even throughout the whole Church of Christ, militant here on earth.

The God of peace be with you.

CITY MISSIONARIES AT EASTBOURNE.

The annual excursion of the London City Mission took place on Wednesday, April 28. A dreary rainy morning gradually brightened up into a splendid day, and by the time that Eastbourne was reached the sun was shining forth in all its radiance. Listening en route for any items that might be gleaned relative to the Mission and its men, we learned from one of the secretaries that considerable loss has of late been sustained through the cessation or diminution of annual subscriptions, by reason of the general depression in trade. On the other hand, it was gratifying to hear that the demand for labourers has increased, so that at least double the present number of missionaries could immediately be provided with work were sufficient funds forthcoming. Statistics show that probably there is no class of Christian workers anywhere to be found, among whom, as a body, there are fewer instances of delinquency or failure.

Not less interesting was it to note the unfeigned joy with which some of these devoted labourers, in response to inquiries, recounted the manner in which God had used them for his glory. In one instance a potman was so deeply convinced of the evil of his ways through the visits and converse of the Public-house Missionary that he left his situation and became a chimney-sweep. In another case the opposition of the men at the bar was so completely subdued by the Word spoken, that the most violent among them said to the missionary, "You are a right good fellow; you shall have the first pull at my pot of beer." Further converse made it equally evident that for the most part these men are remarkably fitted for the work in hand, and not a little beloved by those whose salvation they seek. One of them told us that when recently holding a farewell service among the policemen, there was a most affecting scene, many of them crying like children.

Arrived at Eastbourne, the friends made unanimously for the beach, surveying for a time the splendid stretch of blue waters, on the peaceful surface of which glided many a boat filled with pleasure-seekers, whose merry voices could be heard far away. Presently the company began to scatter; some marched off to Beechy-head; others were content to stroll about on the warm sands; some went on the water, while others ventured in it. Anyway, everybody appeared immensely to enjoy the outing, and well they might, for a more magnificent summer's day we have seldom known, not even in July. Devonshire-park, with its skating-rink, temperance refreshments, lawn-tennis, and other recreations, was courteously thrown open at half-price to the excursionists, and everything that could be done to make the occasion a pleasant one was arranged for, and vigorously carried out.

The handsome and commodious Pavilion was crowded in every part for the tea and public meeting; the latter was intended to awaken further interest relative to the Mission. Rev. R. Woodward, vicar of All Saints, offered a hearty welcome to the missionaries. He regretted that in his parish no poor were to be found, a defect which one of the later speakers offered to remedy by sending him a batch from the East of London. He was followed by Rev. J. Bathurst, vicar of Holy Trinity, who warmly re-echoed his brother clergyman's sentiments. Rev. Mr. Miller, who was introduced by Mr. Sawell as "our representative in this town," attributed much of the interest taken by the people of Eastbourne, in the London City Mission, to the successful meetings which had been held in the town, when reports of the work had been given by delegates sent down from headquarters. The support rendered was only right, as they in the country were always swelling the population in London. Canon Welpton claimed to say a word as one who formerly was stationed in London, and surrounded with a mass of poor who could never have been reached but for the help of his two missionaries.

Then came Rev. Burman Cassin, whose cheery address was mainly an amplification of an acrostic, which was spelt out and enforced amid the greatest appreciation of the assembly:—

E arnestness of purpose.
A ctivity of habit.
S trength of endurance.
T ruthfulness in teaching.
B enevolence of disposition.
O neness of aim.
U nflinchingness of duty.
R ighteousness of life.
N earness of communion.
E ternity of reward.

It only now remained for Mr. Hutchinson, in the name of the Society, to thank the friends at Eastbourne for all they had done, including the £80 which they subscribed to the Mission last year. This was seconded by Mr. Dawson; and then the Secretary, Mr. C. M. Sawell, made an appeal for extended help, which Mr. Noakes enforced. The Mission hoped next summer to present 150 of the men with a five-pound note, and a large number of them would be going to the Ventnor Home; hence the call for funds. The meeting broke up for another hour's stroll on the beach. Even then some of the missionaries preferred to redeem the time by singing and preaching the Gospel to passers-by; a hope may therefore be indulged, that while much physical benefit was received, some good seed was sown, the fruit of which will appear by and by.

MR. C. KING IN SCOTLAND.

Invited and assisted by Rev. Mr. McEwing, Mr. King held a week's mission in Tollcross U.P. Church, from April 18 to 25 Much interest was awakened. Mr. King gave his Bible-readings on the Book of Ruth in the afternoons, and to large audiences in the evening he preached the Gospel with much power. The numerous uplifted hands at the close, desiring salvation or consecration, showed the presence and power of the Holy Ghost. Rev. Mr. Drysdale, of the Free Church, and other friends rendered valuable assistance.

On April 25 Mr. King was asked to hold a seven days' mission in the adjoining village of Shettleston. The subject of Bible-readings was Exodus. The Gospel addresses were illustrated by "life in prison:" a warning to young men and women; not a few have cause to thank God for Mr. King's visit and stirring words.

A REMARKABLE MEMORIAL SERVICE.

A rather remarkable service was held in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Morice Town, in memory of the late Mrs. Dinnick, one of the oldest members of the Connexion, who recently died at her residence in Paisley-street, at the venerable age of eighty-two. The deceased, who had been for many years a widow, was the mother of fourteen children. Nine out of the fourteen are ministers of the Gospel, most of them in the Primitive Methodist body; and no less than six of the rev. gentlemen were present at, and took part in, the service. In accordance with the wishes of the deceased, who held strong views antagonistic to the customary ceremonials and displays on such occasions, there was no set "funeral sermon;" but each of the brothers took part in the service, either in leading prayer, reading the Scriptures, expounding or exhorting. Mrs. Dinnick had expressed a desire that it should be a "service of praise," and her desire was complied with.

At the funeral of the deceased no "mourning" was worn by the friends, and the undertaker's trappings usually considered indispensable on such occasions were discarded.

SOUTHGATE, N.—The first anniversary of the opening of the Baptist Chapel here was held on Tuesday, April 27, all the seats being filled at both the tea and public meeting. The statement by Mr. Wickerson showed that there was a real work being done, not a few having been converted to God. On Sundays there is morning and afternoon school, two public services, two meetings for prayer, and a service for children in the evening. An effort has been made to reach the working men of the town by having a special service for them on Saturday evenings. Altogether the past year has been one of great blessing.

Notes and Comments.

Next week we shall give a portrait and sketch of Mr. Gawin Kirkham, Secretary of the Open-Air Mission.

The editorial "Letter from Abroad" is unavoidably omitted in our present issue.

Mr. Geo. Müller, writes an Australian correspondent, is in Melbourne. He seems to be in good health, and is addressing crowded audiences.

We are glad to notify our readers, in advance of a review of the book, that Messrs. Longmans have issued a new, cheaper, and unabridged edition of Dr. Edersheim's "Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah," 2 vols., 8vo. The price of the original edition was 42s., but the present edition is issued unabridged at 24s.

Mr. Axel Gustafson, author of the able work on the temperance question, entitled "The Foundation of Death," leaves England by the Germanic this day (May 6), accompanied by Mrs. Gustafson. We regret to learn that loss of health necessitates this voyage to America. We trust that in a few months both will be able to return to England thoroughly restored.

Letters come to us, some of which dwell upon the advance of the present times upon the past, and others of an opposite purport. There is truth in both views; while both fail to meet the question of the relation of the professing Church to the anxious times which are passing over us. All nations and peoples are open to the Gospel as never before, and Christianity more than ever occupies men's thoughts. On the other hand, secret and anti-Christian societies threaten all social order in Europe. How many professed Christian disciples are sceptical, or joining the world in the amusements that help dead souls to forget God. In what numbers of churches and chapels is the Saviour for the lost hidden by false learning, or by semi-Popish bewilderments and spectacles. Meanwhile devoted ministers and Church members are made to feel that they stand by themselves.

The following has reference to a Note in our last. We are delighted to present our "Constant Reader's" more cheerful view.

> Sir,—In the course of your otherwise excellent remarks on the Christian integrity of the late Mr. Forster, you expressed the opinion that "unfortunately for our country, this faith in practical religion seems to be becoming more and more dissevered from our politics." I can hardly believe that the sentence by itself is a deliberate expression of your judgment on the question, and it may be that a paragraph will appear in this week's issue somewhat modifying the strength of the statement. If, however, you really adhere to the view it expresses, I venture respectfully to dissent from the conclusion, and should like to know what evidences there are that a severance is taking place between religion and politics.
> Supposing your statement to be correct, there ought to be no difficulty in showing at what periods of our history practical religion exercised a more powerful influence upon political life than it does at present. But when can we find that this was the case? In the seventeenth century? During the Georgian era? Prior to the great Reform Bill? Before the year 1868? I doubt very much if during any of these periods the nation was blessed with more godly statesmen than it now is, and I certainly cannot believe that the atmosphere of politics was more impregnated with Christian sentiment. The record of the past is blotted by the most grievous errors. Bloody wars disgraced our professions of Christianity; inequalities and injustices continued unredressed; vice and drunkenness were licensed by Parliament; the social condition of the people was desperate and dangerous; and, when at last we are beginning to undo these wrongs, it is strange that we should be told that, "unfortunately for our country, practical religion seems to be becoming more and more dissevered from our politics." The history of past legislation, and of our high-handed dealings with other nations, seems to point to the conclusion that religion and politics have indeed been severed; but is this the case at the present time? I think not altogether; for a marked improvement is slowly taking place.
> Among our leading statesmen there are many whose faith in Christianity is publicly avowed, while others, whose religious belief can hardly be defined, are among the foremost in advocating truly Christian reforms. Unconsciously, perhaps, to themselves, these last are promoting the kingdom of Christ. The House of Commons probably never contained so large a proportion of godly members as it does to-day, and the introduction of working-men representatives, some of whom are well known in their respective denominations, is one of the most cheering results of the late election. Peace, Purity, Temperance, and Religious Equality, all have their champions, distinguished for their earnestness and devotion to the truth. Outside the precincts of Westminster Palace there are the great religious bodies, ready at any moment to bring pressure to bear in the right direction; there is the religious press, wielding a mighty silent influence in the homes of the people, and dealing more and more with political questions; and there are thousands of our best religious men taking the lead in political associations and political work. In the face of these facts may we not thankfully acknowledge that, fortunately for our country, practical religion is becoming more and more associated with our politics?—Yours truly,
> A Constant Reader.

The Second Report of the Royal Commission on Trade states that representatives of the Trades Council complain of the injury done to the Sheffield trade by false marking. Should we not, as those who profess to believe that it is righteousness which exalts a nation, lay these things to heart, for they relate to more than one town or to one industry? Can any adequate estimate be made of the effect on workmen who are required by professing Christian masters to mark goods as superior steel when both men and masters know well that it is inferior?

In these times of sharp competition many business men are subjected to what in mechanics is called "the breaking strain." The temptation to get on and to make money dulls and deadens the conscience, until the transactions of each day include, almost as a matter of course, sharp practice and smartness verging upon dishonesty. The religion of the Christian man of business ought to keep him from anything dishonourable, but there is reason to fear that in many instances misrepresentation in order to gain money in trade is looked upon as something pardonable. In business, as in everything else, the Christian should be an exceptional man, easily to be distinguished from the selfish worldling; a man in whom there could not be anything grasping or unscrupulous, and with whom it would be safe to send a child to deal.

In an address on "Power from on High," lately delivered at Clapham, the Rev. Dr. Clemance described the waiting attitude of the disciples before Pentecost as marked by four characteristics, each one of which may suggest valuable thought to those who are now looking to the Lord. A calm conviction of the headship of Christ, the living Lord; a consciousness of their utter helplessness without his power; an unwavering faith that He would not disappoint them; and readiness to act it out when the power came.

The generally well-informed French correspondent of The Guardian tells us that the dimensions of the Universal Exhibition of 1889 can "hardly be called less than appalling." Almost the entire west end of Paris will be converted into a huge fair, and the expense is computed at a little short of two millions sterling, with a receipt calculated at rather more than one million. The writer connects this "costly bid for popularity" with the facts that a French loan of £60,000,000 is projected, and that there are continued deficits with a standing budget of £120,000,000 a year.

One of the Society papers has in strong terms brought under public notice a matter to which we thought it our duty to call attention in these columns a few weeks ago, when some exception was taken to the views which we expressed with regard to what we could but consider as cruelty. There are some sports which call for the exercise, not of manliness, but certainly of courage, but that which we condemned is not of these, as it is at once unmanly and cowardly. It is encouraging to find that a journal, which to a great extent is given up to gossip, feels constrained to say:—

> The sport is misnamed, for it should be styled "worrying poor stags to death." The creatures are as tame as a cat and far more friendly. If Bill Sykes ill-treats his donkey he is brought before the magistrates; but not so these chartered torturers. We once more ask, where is the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals? If the Society does not interfere to put a stop to hunting timid, inoffensive stags, the public should at once withdraw their subscriptions.

A correspondent, addressing the editor of the same journal, says:—

> I yesterday witnessed the finish of a meet of Her Majesty's Staghounds. The stag, after being badgered for half an hour by a crowd of men and boys, was finally captured in an orchard, in such an exhausted condition that it could hardly stand. It was then dragged along a road by two men at the head and another man at the tail for a distance, I should say, of nearly a quarter of a mile. It fell down once or twice on the road, and after some difficulty was lodged in an outhouse.

Doubtless if a representation were made to Her Majesty on the subject, a good result would follow, and at any rate Royal sanction and support would be withdrawn from "sport" which is less manly than hunting a cat, because it is unattended by the element of risk which accompanies that brutal amusement.

It is not only the noble stag that suffers from such barbarous amusements, but the still more noble horse, as a report of steeplechases at Eridge, Sussex, on Easter Monday, illustrates in a very ghastly way. A local journal says:—

> In the main, the running and jumping were good, but the racing was not without grievous disaster, two horses being sacrificed as the result of falls.

If a poor man, by means of iron spikes and whipcord, had, even in pursuit of his industrial calling, goaded on two donkeys to death, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals would have brought him before the magistrates, and public sentiment would have been shocked at his brutal cruelty. But here we have magistrates, and gentle ladies, under the patronage of a peer of the realm, who can find their amusement in the struggling anguish of panting horses, forced on to death by the whip and the spur, and the law is silent before this public scandal. The Spaniards might well point to England when reproached for the inhumanity of their bull fights.

Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"The sketch of the life of James Scott, by the Rev. Andrew Bonar, D.D., is interesting and full of pathetic beauty. Mr. Scott seems to have been a man of intense Christian enthusiasm. His life work, so early closed, began when other young men have scarcely realised responsibility, and was carried on with eager earnestness through the recent wonderful period of religious revival in Scotland. Side by side with Mr. Moody, Mr. Scott laboured till strength broke down, and consumption closed the active, useful life at the age of thirty-eight. A helpful book for Christian workers."—Christian World.

THE

AN ATTRACTIVE

Quarto Volume of Music & Words.

By IRA D. SANKEY and J. McGRANAHAN.

Tinted covers, 1*s.*; cloth limp, 1*s.* 6*d.*; cloth boards, 2*s.* 6*d.*

"It is as fine a collection of Sacred Airs as can anywhere be found. All the Hymns and the Tunes are beautiful, impressive, gracious; and the rendering of them, and the hearing them sung in private or public alike, have led many to change their whole course of life."
Oldham Chronicle.

"Of this Sacred Song Book it is scarcely needful for us to say a word. Thousands have listened and thousands have sung them, and will retain their good impressions, when all the mists have rolled away."—Baptist Messenger.

This Volume, which is largely composed of New Sacred Songs, Duets, Choruses, and Anthems, has been used alternately with "Songs and Solos," during the great London Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Mr. Sankey and Mr. Mc Granahan are already well known by their hymns, which are sung all the world over; and the present collection, which is specially suitable for Gospel Choirs, will doubtless add to their reputation as true Gospel musicians.

THE

A COLLECTION OF

New Part Songs, Choruses & Anthems.

Written and Arranged expressly for Male Voices

By JAMES McGRANAHAN.

Tinted Covers, 1*s.* 6*d.*; Cloth Limp, 2*s.*; Cloth Boards, 2*s.* 6*d.*

The Gospel Male Choir was, during the last five months of the London Mission, a special feature of the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. There are, doubtless, many more who would wish to dedicate their voices to the service of the Master; and with the present volume (which is arranged for 1st and 2nd Tenor and 1st and 2nd Bass) in their hands, and the hearty co-operation of a few brethren like-minded, this wish can be easily gratified. Says Mr. Mc Granahan:—"Organize a quartet, a double quartet, or better still, a chorus of male voices; and prove the power for good in the harmony of male voices when consecrated to the glory and service of our divine Master."

"It is a splendid collection of New Part Songs, Choruses, and Anthems, expressly arranged for male voices. Many of the pieces are the very words of Scripture, and are set to tunes which give great force and sweetness to the words themselves. The book cannot fail to be a blessing wherever used."

Christian Treasury, Dec., 1885.

"These are 'Pearls' indeed. The gifted authoress has added a rare volume to her already large stock of books; and the reading public will thank her for this delightful work. We wish it the wide circulation it well deserves."

The Record, Dec. 18, 1885.

"The expositions of, or rather lessons from, the Parables, have been written since A. L. O. E. went to India as a missionary. They were intended to aid in bringing Hindus and Mohammedans to the faith of Christ, and are written from an Oriental point of view. Nevertheless, English readers will enjoy and may profit by them. All will rejoice to receive a fresh work from the hands of so old a favourite as A. L. O. E."

Church Sunday School Magazine, Jan., 1886.

"A delightful contribution to Biblical literature, and especially valuable on account of its local colouring, the writer, as will be known to most of our readers, having been now for some years engaged in mission work in Hindustan. The illustrative portions, in themselves striking, are made entirely subservient to the forcible appeals of the writer; and we can but echo the remark in the Publishers' Preface, that no one can read what is written without being struck with the manner in which the Parables adapt themselves for use in Evangelistic Lessons.' The volume is enriched with a series (twenty-four in number) of specially-designed Illustrations—good both in their design and drawing."

From "The SWORD and TROWEL" for May.

"This adds another to the already long list of text books. This book has a practical reference exclusively to Christian service, and touches upon the parts which the heart, the lips, the eyes, the ears, the hands, and the feet are to play therein. There is much freshness and force, both in the idea and its treatment, and we think it will hold its own with its many competitors."

"Its counsels are wise, loving, and direct. Its aim is to lead the reader to have a clean heart and a clean life—to consecrate all to Christ. . . . All that art, taste, and skill can do to make the theme attractive has been done by the well-known publishers. The result is that, within and without, 'The King's Palace' is simply perfect."

Irish Congregational Magazine.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY. A SERMON in connection with the Eighty-second Anniversary of the above Society will be preached in the TRINITY PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, Clapham-road, S.W., on SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 9, 1886, by the Rev. D. MacEwan, D.D. Divine Service will commence at 11 a.m.

Tinted covers, 6d.; Limp cloth, 9d.; Cloth boards, 1s.

LIFE OF JOSHUA POOLE.

A Remarkable Narrative of God's Saving Grace.

"Illustrated by scenes and incidents far more romantic than romance itself."—Baptist Messenger.

"This is the life of no other than 'Joss the Fiddler.' Under this title he has hitherto become extensively known, and hereafter, we trust, will be still better known as Mr. Joshua Poole. We have here a faithful narrative of his past history, in which he is left almost entirely to tell his own tale of sorrow and of joy. If any should question whether there be such conversions in our day as of Manasseh, or the penitent thief, or the Philippian jailor, we need only refer them to this narrative. It is an undeniable proof that the good old Gospel has lost none of its powers."—Sword and Trowel.

PLAIN QUESTIONS:

A Series of Pointed Appeals in the VERY WORDS OF SCRIPTURE. Neatly printed in Coloured Ink on Tinted Paper. In Packets of 150 Tracts, assorted, 6d.; 300 Tracts, 1s.; or 1000 copies, assorted, 2s. 6d.

LIST OF QUESTIONS.

1. WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?	Matt. xxii. 42.	9. DOST THOU BELIEVE?	John ix. 35.
2. IS IT WELL WITH THEE?	2 Kings iv. 26.	10. WHEN WILL YE BE WISE?	Psalm xciv. 8.
3. WHAT SHALL I DO WITH JESUS?	Matt. xxvii. 22.	11. HOW SHOULD WE LIVE?	Ezek. xxxiii. 10.
4. HOW SHALL WE ESCAPE?	Heb. ii. 3.	12. WHAT IS YOUR LIFE?	James iv. 14.
5. WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT?	Mark viii. 36.	13. IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?	Lam. i. 12.
6. WHY WILL YE DIE?	Ezek. xviii. 31.	14. WHERE ART THOU?	Gen. iii. 9.
7. WHAT HAST THOU DONE?	Gen. iv. 10.	15. WHITHER GOEST THOU?	Judges xix. 17.
8. WHEN WILT THOU RETURN?	Neh. ii. 6.	16. WHAT SHALL WE DO?	Acts ii. 37.

A PRACTICAL SUGGESTION.

A Gentleman engaged in preaching the Gospel speaks thus of this novel Series of Gospel Tracts:—"I take as my subject for the evening the Question *on one of the Leaflets, such as 'What think ye of Christ?' The Scripture Texts quoted on either side of the 'Question' serve as 'points' in my Address; they are—*

1. 'Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.'
2. 'God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, CHRIST DIED FOR US.'
3. 'Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows. . . He was wounded for our transgressions; He was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed.'

"The Hymns, of which a verse or two are given on the Leaflet, are sung at the Meeting; and at its close every member of the congregation receives a copy of that Leaflet as he passes out of the door. This plan is repeated until I have thus run through the whole Series of sixteen Tracts."

150 copies of "PLAIN QUESTIONS" may be had for Sixpence—either Assorted, or of any one kind. Or 1000 copies for 2s. 6d.; post-free, 2s. 9d.

THE FORTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING Will be held at EXETER HALL, on MONDAY, MAY 17, at 3 p.m. GEORGE WILLIAMS, Esq., in the Chair. Sir R. N. FOWLER, Bart., M.P., and other friends will give Addresses (see future advertisements).

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

The Life and Times of JESUS THE MESSIAH.

BY THE

Rev. ALFRED EDERSHEIM, M.A. Oxon., D.D., Ph.D.,
Warburtonian Lecturer at Lincoln's Inn.

New, Revised, and Cheaper Edition. 2 vols., 8vo., 24s.

British Quarterly Review.—"The distinctive character and, as we think, the great practical value of this book, lie in the collection of what we may call Jewish evidence and illustrations in the Jewish standpoint from which it is written and in the Jewish atmosphere with which it is imbued. A Jew by birth, nurtured in the best Jewish learning, and with a large acquaintance with Jewish literature and customs, Dr. Edersheim is a Christian convert and minister, strongly evangelical in his views and imbued with a devout feeling."

Nonconformist.—"Of Jewish origin, and steeped to the lips in Rabbinic lore, Dr. Edersheim is peculiarly fitted to expound and popularise the local and national circumstances amid which that marvellous life was lived; and accordingly there is no such picture in English from this point of view as that which he has given us. From wider and deeper Jewish learning, much of which others have only skimmed, or consulted at second-hand, he is able, and apparently feels himself bound, to correct numerous errors into which previous writers have fallen."

Or, THE LIFE STORY OF BELLA COOKE:

A Record of Lovingkindness and Tender Mercies. Written by Herself.

"This is indeed a wondrous record."—Word and Work.

"The autobiography of an Englishwoman, long resident in New York, and who has a wonderful story to tell of the Lord's faithfulness."—Christian Leader.

"With the sense of holy awe upon us, as of having been in the presence of a saint of God, and caught a glimpse of the power and the calm, and the holiness and the hush within the veil, we would bring before our readers the Life Story of Bella Cooke, which has just been given to the British-reading public. From beginning to end it is a 'record of lovingkindness and tender mercies'—a complete refutation of the too oft-accepted theory of the connection between sin and suffering, and a living, marvellous testimony to the truth—'He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might He increaseth strength.'"—The Christian.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, and 6, Regent Square, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of Mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others. The applications for admission are painfully urgent.

Spiritual Power for Missionary Work.

By REV. GRIFFITH JOHN, Missionary to China.

With Preface by

Rev. HENRY SIMON, of Westminster Chapel.

"If anyone wants to have his soul stirred within him for his work at home, let him read 'Spiritual Power for Missionary Work.'"—Lay Preacher.

"This is an eloquent discourse upon the need of the Holy Spirit's influence in work for Christ, and is followed by a powerful plea for increased help to the missionary cause."—The Baptist.

"Let missionary students read this short essay; and let its reasoning be laid to heart by those also who have to work at home. If the Churches were baptized with the missionary spirit, how rapidly the Gospel would now spread in the world!"—Methodist.

At a meeting of the London Congregational Union, Rev. T. McDougall, of Kentish Town, made a point that might be usefully borne in mind by young preachers. Within a few months after settling over a small and poor village congregation, they marry, and become involved in difficulties that sorely hinder their usefulness. Clerical celibacy is not to be commended, but the self-denial which beginners in commercial life practise might be imitated by those of whom an Apostle has said that he would they should be "without carefulness."

The Countess of Aberdeen attended the annual meeting of the Presbyterian Sabbath-school Union in Dublin a few days ago, and after distributing the prizes addressed the young people present. From her ladyship's keenly practical address we take the concluding passages as likely to be useful to children of larger growth :—

> If you set about doing everything in good earnest you are sure to succeed in life, and to become useful men and useful women. Those who have laboured for you want to remind you that you must set about your religion in the same way; you must be earnest and thorough. No truth, however real, no form of religion, however beautiful, can be of any use except you try to make it real. You would be the same as a soldier going out to battle, who has not learned the use of the gun and sword. Your religion will be of no use to you unless you make yourself familiar with its truths, and make it a religion that will enter into every day and every hour, and exercise an influence on every thought and word and action. No belief in any creed or form will give us real religion unless the knowledge and belief in the real living Saviour is always present with us.

It is recorded of the Venerable Bede that at the close of his useful life he called his scholars round him that he might dictate the closing chapter of his translation of the Gospel of John. "There is still a chapter wanting," said the scribe, "and it is hard for thee to question thyself longer." "It is easily done," said Bede, "take thy pen, and write quickly." Through the day the youth wrote, and when evening fell, "There is yet one sentence unwritten, dear master," said he, sadly. "Write it quickly," said Bede. "It is finished now," said the scribe. "Thou sayest truly," answered Bede; "it is finished now;" then adding "Glory to God," he died. What a lovely motto that would be to affix, and what noble lives ours would be if we could affix it to all our work! Why should it not be possible? For there is no proper work or duty which love to Christ may not ennoble, and which the presence of Jesus may not sanctify. The simple and humble daily task must not be set aside in order that we may take up something which appears to be work of a higher order in the Lord's service, but the lowly present duty must be done as for the Lord and in the Lord's sight; then almost instinctively, at its completion, with the sigh of relief would come the dedication and the thanksgiving, "Glory to God."

Ladies who are interested in young women, shop assistants, servants, and others leaving the provinces for London, may do good service by placing themselves in communication with the "Travellers' Aid" department of the Young Women's Christian Association. 71A, Old Cavendish-street, W. This Society affords help in the way of protecting young girls who are without relatives in the Metropolis, from the dangers to which they are exposed in London. Perhaps not the least important of the kind measures taken by the Society's agents is that of making inquiries respecting the situations which are so frequently advertised in such tempting terms, and which only too often are but baits to draw girls to their ruin. There need be no hesitation in applying for help and advice, as both will be willingly given.

Since a celebrated Roman Catholic peer recently took his weakly little infant to be bathed in St. Winifred's Well in North Wales, the superstition with regard to the miraculous efficacy of the water has been deepened. It is said that the priests who have charge of the place have just entered into a new lease of it at an increased rental. As most tourists who visit Holywell are made aware, the well is supposed to mark the place where St. Winifred's head fell when Caradoc decapitated her, and before St. Bevno united it to the body again and restored the maiden's life. From the spot a spring commenced to flow, and fragrant moss grew, and the stones are still marked with blood, say those who exhibit the well. Years ago, however, it was pointed out that the moss is the Jungermannia asplenoides of Linnæus, and the supposed bloodstain on the stones is the Byssus Iolithus of Linnæus; but the legend survives because it pays to work it. Only a few days ago "the advantage of bathing in St. Winifred's Well" was advertised as one of the desiderata of a girls' boarding school.

It is by no means a healthy sign that there should be so intense a craving for material manifestations of spiritual power. Due, possibly, to a want of satisfaction with God's present order, it betrays, as a great writer has said, "a lack of appreciation for the wonderful treasures, the common things of the faith, already committed to the Church's keeping." It becomes us, in these latter days, to remember that there is always an order in God's working, in harmony with which we must work. Dora Greenwell has said that a missionary labouring for Christ in a heathen savage country, might reasonably look for power to work a miracle as an attesting sign from an unknown God that he was declaring: but she adds, "Would this be needed?" and goes on to point out that even the miracles wrought by our Lord upon material nature were only types of the greater works that were to follow them, auguries of conquests in the moral and spiritual order, foreshadowings of the mighty and merciful works which were to be wrought in that order and within the soul.

Let total abstainers thank God, and take courage. The tremendous efforts they have made have produced results which all the world may see. Ever since 1876, when our drink bill reached the unprecedented total of £147,000,000, the improvement has been very great. For 1885 it was £123,000,000. With our larger population it would have been £162,000,000, if we had spent as much per head as we did in 1876. It is fair, then, to say that the expenditure has fallen one-fourth. No doubt the people have had less to spend. Bad trade helps to sober a nation. But not a little of this improvement is due to the general enlightenment and awakening produced by the total abstinence enterprise. Let us take heart. Our next great advance will be made when licences will be granted, continued, or abolished, strictly in accordance with the will of the ratepayers of each district concerned. They bear the burden of the poverty and taxation created by this damning traffic; it is only just that the power of control should be yielded to them. We may be sure that when they get this power, they will use it to effect. There is no single item in the programme of present-day politics so big with the promise of beneficent results, as the questions of Local Option and Prohibition. We would urge every Christian patriot to give it his best thought; if possible, to adopt them; and, adopting, to labour and pray for their success.

This is from an aged missionary in India. We should be glad to be able to believe that matters are not so dark as he paints them :—

> Comparatively few Europeans now make any profession of godliness. But knowledge is increasing, and Christianity is more and more regarded as one sect among many; or, rather, a multitude of sects, each with its peculiar caste customs. The form that education is now taking, under the auspices of our Universities, deserves the attention of the friends of missions at home. It is absurd, mischievous, and now, to a large extent, antagonistic to the Gospel . . . What we want is the simple Gospel, preached and exemplified by earnest-minded men; not even the science of the Gospel, but the Gospel itself—the good news of God's love and righteousness, revealed in Christ Jesus, preached, proclaimed, not scientifically expounded in opposition to Hinduism, but lovingly offered to all, as the message of Him who loved us and gave Himself for us.

Mr. Sutherst, barrister, who takes an active part in the agitation on behalf of the curtailment of the hours of labour for young people in houses of business, made the following statement in a recent interview with a Pall Mall Gazette reporter :—

> The evidence taken by the Committee reveals a state of things that is a scandal and a disgrace to any civilised community. It is now in evidence that there are great wholesale firms in the City which in the busy times—that is to say, for six months in every year—keep scores upon scores of lads fresh from the country, from eight o'clock in the morning till eleven or twelve o'clock at night, chained to the desk of an entering clerk in underground rooms, where the gas is kept constantly burning. These lads are kept for two or three years to learn a business they can master in three months, no wages whatever in many instances being paid them during this arduous apprenticeship. I was much impressed by the way in which Mr. Broadhurst brought out by his questions into clear, hearty relief the contrast between the employers rolling in wealth, living in palaces, driving their carriages, and dining sumptuously every day, and their miserable boy slaves imprisoned fifteen or sixteen hours every day in gaslit cellars earning almost nothing. What a spectacle it afforded of gross callous selfishness and cynical indifference to the welfare of their hands! If our Bill passes, we shall stop all that. The young life shall not be ruined by premature exhaustion.

In an early survey, last Saturday, of the newly opened collection of paintings at the Royal Academy, The Pall Mall Gazette congratulates the British Matron on the comparative absence of representations of the nude. Our contemporary says :—

> As the human form divine is the noblest work of God, so is its adequate portrayal the most difficult work of human art. The study of the nude may well be an indispensable preliminary for a correct drawing of the human figure; but the proper place for it is the studio, not the exhibition. As that eminently sane critic, M. Chesneau, remarks, in his new volume of art criticism, "By all means learn your business, but you need not bring us your class books to look at."

For our own part, we cannot believe that the study of the undraped figure is "indispensable," in any proper estimate of the acquirement of the painters' art; for that there is good professional authority. Even if it were with one consent deemed to be so, we should be inclined to say, Perish Art, but let us preserve our self-respect and the modesty of our children.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey have now closed their successful evangelistic campaign in the Southern States. Mr. Moody is announced to be in Chicago the first week in May, to take up the work begun by Messrs. Jones and Small, after a week of services by Messrs. Sayford and Turner. Mr. Moody desires to make the campaign a very vigorous one.

Mr. Henry Richard, M.P., hon. secretary of the English Peace Society, has sent to the press a copy of an interesting memorial, signed by fifty members of the French Chamber of Deputies, which was presented to M. de Freycinet, as representing the Government of France, by M. Frederick Passy, president of the French Peace Society, in favour of promoting a settlement of the Turko-Greek difficulty by arbitration.

A correspondent in Ireland says in a recent private letter:—

> May I say how very glad I am to read the calm and moderate way in which you write of the present crisis in Ireland. I fear many of the clergy are unwittingly making enemies, by the unwise and extreme expression they give to their views. My own opinion is that Protestantism has had no chance in Ireland yet, simply because it has been identified with all that the people most hated; supported first by their money, unwillingly given for the purpose, and afterwards given unfair advantages (as they thought). If no favouritism is shown, and if Protestants are wise now, I believe a very few years will see an immense number of converts. At bottom, the people hate this interference of the priests with their politics. And is not Protestantism identified with progress and freedom, and Roman Catholicism with retrogression and ignorance?

The Report of the Representative Body of the Church of Ireland, which will be laid before the General Synod at the coming meeting, has just been made accessible; we are glad to observe that it has been compiled in a spirit of moderation, and that it is free from that element of bitterness which has characterised so many expressions of opinion with regard to the possible future of the Irish Episcopal Church. Of course much of it is devoted to financial affairs, stress being laid upon the facts that during 1885 there was a decrease of £10,000 in the amount received under the head of Assessment, and that the prospect with regard to the mortgages on land is a very grave one. But there are passages which show that the Representative Body have not lost either hope, confidence, or faith, and that in writing as we have done with regard to the possible future we expressed views shared by many earnest Christians in Ireland.

After referring to certain "discouraging facts," the Representative Body say:—

> Those, however, who look below the surface cannot fail to see plain indication that the Church has largely recovered from the blow which some thought would prove fatal, and that she is year by year acquiring greater strength and developing fresh energies.

The report concludes thus:—

> The Representative Body have no desire to forecast the future, but, whatever it may be, they are convinced that the Church in Ireland will never cease to be a great power for good in the land, and they entertain a firm trust that all things will be ordered by Him in whom all earthly power consists, for the good of his Church and for the safety and welfare of this kingdom.

To these noble words, calm and restful, because they are based upon trustful faith in the Divine government, everyone who has the welfare of Ireland at heart will reverently say, Amen.

A very important pamphlet on the Irish question has just been published by Rev. William Arthur, entitled "Shall the Loyal be deserted and the Disloyal set over them?" (Bemrose & Sons. 6d). In it he quotes from an equally significant pamphlet by Dr. T. Maguire, an Irish Roman Catholic and Professor of Moral Philosophy of Trinity College, Dublin. Every student of the Irish question should read them both. It is evident that no legislation ought to take place until the momentous proposals before Parliament have received full and deliberate consideration.

DEEP DISTRESS IN WALES.

Dear Sir,—I desire to ask your readers for some help towards the relief of real and severe need, which is I fear steadily deepening, in the Brecon and Glamorganshire villages, of which reports had reached me in Devonshire. During the past week I have made careful local inquiries, and find that although as yet the grim, gaunt days of 1878 are scarcely reproduced, there is much haggard misery, and that many families, who suffer uncomplainingly, are nearly upon starvation edge.

In face of the almost universal poverty and suffering now prevailing, the present Welsh destitution has not been pressed upon public sympathy; but the local liberality that has been forward for its mitigation is now evidently altogether inadequate to meet the advancing pressure, which in the Swansea Valley and at Briton Ferry especially, seems tightening into the famine-grip.

Before giving a very few eloquent statistics, I wish to make one clear, explicit statement, in respect of the privation, the claims of which I now plead. That there is not the semblance nor suspicion of anything in the nature of a "strike"—nothing even of difference or of difficulty between the employers and the men unhappily out of employ. The existing distress is the result, pure and simple, of the absolute stoppage, through trade depression, of many important iron and tin works and large collieries that were the sole support of many thousands, while no other work is at this time obtainable for the hands thrown out. I have seen some forty men from Briton Ferry, where things are now worse than they were three years ago, when The Christian gave deeply-valued aid, standing, poor fellows! outside the gate of the Neath Union, waiting in hope of a job of stone-breaking at 9d. a day, which, in the case of a man with a family, is not far removed from starvation.

At Ystalyfera, where some ten blast-furnaces and seventeen tin mills, with the collieries that fed them, are now hopelessly idle, 1500 hands, which represent at least 5000 mouths, have been thrown out for the past four or five months; and there is nothing working in the neighbourhood, where, through the brotherly self-denial, so often exercised, of the regular hands, an odd turn of work in the week may be had. There, too, I am told, the local committee, who have long been doing first-rate work, will be forced, through diminished funds, to discontinue some of its relief. In the Rhondda Valley also, and at Maesteg, above Bridgend, I heard of deplorable distress, while in several other places things are very "tight." All through the district, too, there is much sickness, consequent upon the long-continued privation.

I have but to add that I shall very thankfully receive any aid that my old generous friends will entrust to me for the next fortnight, at the address below given. Later on I will ask permission to notify in your columns any advisable change of residence, with, it may be, a few added details respecting the distress.

RAILWAY SERVANTS IN SCOTLAND.

A vigorous effort is being made to establish throughout Scotland branches of the Railwaymen's Christian Association. Already in several of the larger centres the work has commenced, and with good results. Mr. H. E. Walton, Railway Mission Evangelist, has for some weeks past been labouring in this direction—holding meetings of railway employés, and urging upon them the advantages of banding together for mutual Christian edification. In this work he has received assistance from Mr. G. Clarke, late secretary of the Mission. In order to further the object in view, a Conference of railwaymen was held in Glasgow on April 24. The small hall of the Christian Institute in Bothwell-street was crowded with delegates and sympathisers, many of whom had travelled long distances to be present. Mr. D. Spencer, secretary of the Railway Mission, had journied from London to take part in the Conference and the subsequent meetings. Besides Mr. Spencer, there were on the platform Mr. G. Clarke (who presided), Mr. H. E. Walton, Messrs. J. A. Campbell and J. McClure (of Glasgow), and Mr. Elliott (of Edinburgh). Delegates from some twelve or fourteen towns gave reports of the work among railway-men in the various localities, the tenor of these reports being very encouraging and satisfactory. The Chairman, with Messrs. Spencer and Walton, gave sound practical advice to the delegates, and indicated methods whereby existing associations might be made of more value, and new ones formed.

In the evening about one thousand persons met for tea in the fine large hall of the Institute. This was followed by an enthusiastic meeting, presided over by Mr. J. Campbell White, who was accompanied on the platform by three railway directors and several gentlemen of influence in Glasgow. The addresses were full of ardour and hopefulness, and were received with considerable warmth by the crowded audience.

On the following day (Easter Sunday) open-air and indoor services were held in various quarters. The evening service especially was of an interesting character, some 500 marching in procession from the Institute in Bothwell-street to West-square, where Gospel addresses were delivered.

The entire proceedings connected with the first Scotch Conference were abundantly successful, and augur well for the future. It is plain that already the work of the Railway Mission has taken firm hold in the North, as it has done in England, Ireland, and abroad. There is, however, abundant need for earnest work everywhere. It is hoped that the forthcoming annual meeting, to be held on May 20 in Exeter Hall, will give a stimulus to the operations. Mr. D. Spencer, Secretary, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., will gladly afford all necessary information.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—May 9, Deut. vi. 1—12; May 10, vii. 1—11; May 11, xi. 18—32; May 12, xvi. 1—12; May 13, xvi. 13—22; May 14, xvii. 14—20; May 15, xviii. 15—22.

BATH Y.M.C.A.—Prebendary Anderson has concluded a series of five interesting addresses on the Christian Evidences. The attendances have been most encouraging. We need help just now to enable us to move into larger and more commodious premises. Friends who live in Bath, and those who have derived benefit from visits to this city, are earnestly desired to assist.

J. A. Stooke,
5, Quiet-street, Bath. General Secretary.

KILBURN HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN.—Thirty four have been cared for and trained during 1885, and the new year began with a good balance in hand. Six new pupils have been admitted, most of whom were totally incapable through culpable neglect of parental training. The new report details the varied systems of teaching adopted, and expresses intense gratitude to God for the success vouchsafed in the past. Friends are asked to remember the annual sale to be held in the autumn, and to address all communications to Miss Emma Newberry (Lady Superintendent), 127, Portsdown-road, Maida-vale, W., who will be "glad to meet with a few pupils in the neighbourhood for one of the elder inmates to teach, being quite competent, and thoroughly understanding the theory of music."

SOLDIERS IN INDIA.

Secunderabad is the largest military station in India; there are one calvary regiment, one battery R.H.A., two field batteries, and a garrison battery, and two infantry regiments, besides three Native regiments. About two years ago Rev. W. Burgess was enabled to have a pretty little church erected in this very central locality; the church seats 250 comfortably. A portion was partitioned off, i.e, the right wing, for the purpose of holding weekly meetings in, but lately the partition has had to come down, owing to there not being sufficient accommodation for the congregation of a Sunday evening. Mr. Burgess belongs to the Wesleyans, and is the Superintendent of the Wesleyan Mission in the Nizam's Dominions. His work among the heathen has been greatly blessed, but to that I am not alluding. In this work he is greatly helped by his wife and an efficient native staff. In his work among the soldiers he is chiefly assisted by his sister-in-law; his assistant, Rev. —Crewdson, also affords valuable help. Two officers aid to some extent by conducting weekly meetings.

It is a sight which makes the heart of a child of God rejoice to see this little Wesleyan Church full of soldiers at the voluntary service on Sunday evening, and to hear the hearty singing. The subject of the preacher's theme is the old, old story, which has not lost its power even in these days, as some wise people would wish us to believe. After the evening service a prayer-meeting is held, when, to use a Methodist expression, "the net is drawn." Anxious souls are invited to come boldly to the front like men, and thus show publicly their determination to cast in their lot with the Lord's people. Frequently, in fact, every Sunday with but few exceptions, men have come thus to the front, and then they are spoken to, and the way of salvation is clearly explained. Their names are taken down, and they are marked men and their spiritual interests are attended to. They, as a rule, join the Blue Ribbon Association, so as to keep them from the canteen, where they are subject to much temptation.

On Mondays, Tuesdays, and Wednesdays, meetings are held in various places, and these are well attended. On Thursdays there is the class-meeting, and on Saturday a Bible-class, conducted by a lady. There are between fifty and sixty names in the class-book, and the class-meeting constantly numbers sixty men. The experiences given by the men are most interesting, and they speak as they feel. May the Lord's work continue to prosper in our midst, and I feel sure it will. We solicit the earnest prayers of all the Lord's people.

A Christian Soldier.

FREE BREAKFASTS IN MELBOURNE.

In June, 1885, the Lord laid on the heart of one of his servants engaged in mission school work in Collingwood, the necessity of providing free breakfasts for poor children. Others were led to feel interested in the movement, which has now continued for over six months. At eight o'clock every Sunday morning boys and girls attend in growing numbers; some of them are very poorly clad, and bear in their faces the marks of sin and wretchedness.

Those in charge make inquiries of the children as to their homes, parents, &c. Many destitute ones, thanks to kind friends, have been supplied with clothing. Families have been visited, their needs looked into, and, where possible, supplied. It would occupy too much time and space to relate the various cases of special interest that have been brought under notice. At the close of the usual Gospel talk the anxious are pressed to remain to be spoken with. Numbers have done so, and it is believed many of these poor lambs of the flock have been made to know their Shepherd's voice, and are now following Him.

THE WORSE AND MORE MATERIAL and unbelieving the times are, the better and more intense ou Christianity should be. Stars are most needed in a dark night. Every Christian should be a torch-bearer in this world, and every torch should be blazing with light.—Words and Weapons.

RESCUE WORK IN GLASGOW.

Dear Sir,—I observe you have been kind enough to notice briefly my little pamphlet describing the two new branches of work of the Salvation Army in this city, viz., that of the "Home of Help and Love" for persons in distress, where they can go and find loving Christian council and a temporary shelter, and that of "The Refuge" for friendless girls, where the unfortunate and forsaken daughters and sisters of the people may find those who will give them the love and care of a real home. Will you allow me to say that these Homes have now been opened and in working order for two months. The formal opening took place about three weeks ago, when two meetings were held. There was a large gathering of friends and sympathisers. Mrs. Bramwell Booth and the lady workers gave interesting accounts of the work during the afternoon meeting. The girls, then in the Home, looked wonderfully changed for their short sojourn there. When they come to us they are mostly very ragged and dirty, and in some cases their poor faces and bodies are black and blue with the brutal illusage they receive from their unhappy associates.

The Institution is conducted on the home principle. All the branches of domestic duties are taught—including general housekeeping, cooking, washing, ironing, sewing, knitting, woolwork, &c. Of course the work is as yet just in its infancy. It will daily become more systematised and developed.

There is room in the house for about thirty girls, not including the workers, but there are only beds for fourteen at present. We shall buy more beds as soon as we have the £140 necessary to clear off the present debt, and the extra amount needed for the purchase of the sixteen new beds. We are at present quite full in the Home, and some girls are lodging and boarding out at our expense among our converts in the city. One gentleman friend has generously undertaken to supply us with coals, so we have no charges to meet on this account. The total average weekly cost of both branches of work is about six pounds.

The "Midnight Samaritan" and "Midnight Supper" work, and the "Inquiry Office," are also doing great good. We thank God for all the encouragement received in our work, and desire the prayers and sympathies of the Lord's people everywhere. Henry Edmonds.

A CENTRE OF SPIRITUAL ACTIVITY.

During the past year, the Sunderland Y.M C.A. has displayed a largely increased earnestness in the great work of winning souls. United prayer has resulted in united effort. A devoted Christian band have gone out into many villages, holding series of meetings of ten to fifteen days each, the Lord confirming the word, with signs following.

So encouraged were they that about three months ago they engaged one of the large theatres for Sunday services, and every week from 1500 to 2000 of the very class who avoid churches and chapels, have crowded into it, nine-tenths of them being men. We reach them by means of invitation tickets, 20,000 of which have been distributed every week at music-hall and theatre doors, late on Saturday nights, and also in the parks and streets during the hours of Divine worship, where there are multitudes of non-church-goers. A truly apostolic succession of plain and practical preachers have addressed the meetings, and large numbers of inquirers have been directed to Him who alone has power to forgive sin.

Mr. Henry Varley paid us a second visit at the beginning of April, and for eleven days gave afternoon Bible-readings, which increased in attendance from 250 at the first to 1000 at the close.

The evening meetings, held in the Victoria-hall, were times of exceptional power. On several occasions more than 3500 people were gathered to listen to the Gospel message. On one evening of the Mission eighty-five persons, nearly all adults, rose in the meeting to testify their desire to serve the Lord. I am convinced that hundreds have received fresh light and blessing.

EAST-END THEATRICALS AT TEA.

The annual social gathering of East-End theatricals took place on Good Friday evening at the Shoreditch Town-hall. About 400 sat down to tea, provided by the Special Religious Services Committee. The theatres represented included the Standard, Pavilion, Sadler's Wells, Grand, Britannia, Surrey, Elephant and Castle, and the South London Palace. The usual gifts were presented to each visitor, including a flower, with text from the Bible Flower Mission, and a small suitable volume from the Religious Tract Society. The proceedings were also varied by hymns, solos, and choruses from "The Christian Choir," and "Songs and Solos." Equally felicitous were the speakers, both in the selection and treatment of their several topics.

Mr. George Williams presided, and offered a cordial welcome to the audience, giving them a selection of "pleasant words" from the Old Book, and reminding them that Good Friday suggested to us the putting away of sin, the laying hold of Christ, and the yielding of ourselves to Him. Rev. E. Webster gave an address on "The Glorious Expansion of the Kingdom of Christ," and showed by narrations of remarkable conversions which had come under his notice how this extension was being promoted. Mr. Thomas Dashwood (Banker) followed with an ingenious address on advertisement announcements, "Must be cleared," "At a great sacrifice," &c. Rev. John Morgan preached a little sermon on Paul's words, "The will of God is your sanctification." Rev. H. J. Berguer found some pegs on which to hang a few excellent suggestions, in the names of certain well-known plays of Shakespeare, and told with great effect of the artist who was directed by the physician to go and hear a well-known actor as a cure for his depression and melancholia, and who replied, "Why, Doctor, I'm that very man." Mr. Rennie, Rev. C. Billing, and Mr. Erlich briefly spoke.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, PORTSMOUTH.

In a recent circular to her friends and helpers, Miss Robinson says:—The state of my health, and the growth of the work, made it desirable that some lady should share my responsibilities as honorary superintendent, and I am thankful that Emily, Lady Milbanke—who has frequently helped me here—now decides to join me altogether for this purpose.

Efficient helpers for Alexandria have also come forward. As Miss Van Sommer expects to come home in June, and Miss Ridout in April, I was anxiously seeking others to take their place. The way has been made plain for Rev. T. R Lawrence (Vicar of St. Stephen's, Bow), and his wife, to undertake the charge of the Alexandria Institute; Mr. Lawrence will, of course, receive a stipend. Mrs. Lawrence was, before her marriage, one of our best workers at the Portsmouth Institute, and her husband is, of all others, the one I would choose for the work he now consents to take up. I feel sure this appointment will commend itself to our subscribers; it elieves my mind of great anxiety.

My friend and co-trustee, Miss Van Sommer, has worked bravely at Alexandria, has met with the greatest kindness, and, by God's blessing, has achieved complete success; but it was not my intention to give her up entirely for our foreign work, feeling that married people—when I could find them—ought to be in charge of that Institute and of the younger workers sent out from Portsmouth. It is an important work, of which the benefit is felt, not only by our soldiers and sailors, but by the whole English community at Alexandria.

Our Sailors' Welcome at Portsea is in a satisfactory condition, over 46,000 nights' lodging having been paid for by sailors and marines during the past twelve months, and the business giving £400 profits towards reducing the debt on the building. Our Blue Ribbon Coffee Tavern and Dormitory has been made very comfortable for the reception of soldiers' families needing temporary accommodation, and for whom we could not always find room in the Institute. Our houses, our work, and our accounts are always open to inspection, and not a day passes without visitors being shown round.

The buildings are all freehold, and vested in trustees for the perpetual benefit of soldiers, sailors, their families, widows, and orphans; but a sum of £4500 is still required to free them from debt. Our subscriptions have fallen off very much of late through the death of several liberal donors, and the failing means of others, but I do trust that kind friends who can help will make up the amount, and thus enable us to maintain and extend the efficiency of this work.

Anniversaries.

Trinitarian Bible Society.

The Council Room of Exeter Hall was large enough to hold the friends of this Society who came together last Thursday for the annual meting under the presidency of Mr. H. C. Nisbet. What it lacked in size it made up in warmth. Several speakers hoped another year they would feel justified in engaging the Lower Hall; if it be "the best of societies," as a correspondent of one speaker says it is, the faith of the committee may even get as far as the Great Hall itself.

The fifty-ninth report, portions of which were read by Rev. W. Bullinger, the secretary, is a most interesting document, and enters into matters relating to the history of early versions of the Scriptures, &c, that one would scarcely expect to find at this stage. One group of the recent statistics deserves to be quoted and emphasised. Whereas it is estimated that there are 3424 languages and dialects in the world, it appears from the price list of the larger Society that Scriptures can be purchased in but 91 languages, the complete Bible being available in 37 of these, the complete New Testament in 34 others, and only stray books of Old or New to be had in the remaining 20. The work of Bible translation is therefore yet in its infancy, and, as this report well observes, there is room for hundreds of such societies, instead of the three or four that are at work in this country. The distinctive feature of the Trinitarian Society—that it circulates only "uncorrupted versions of the Word of God"—was strongly dwelt on in the report, and also in the speeches, and it would probably not serve any good purpose if we were to enter into details here. As to the actual work of the past year, it was stated that the Scriptures, either wholly or in part, had been circulated in twenty languages to the number of over 187,000. A large number of missions at home and abroad have been the recipients of its help in this good work. Grateful reference was made to the expected completion, in four years, by Dr. Ginsburg, of the new Hebrew Old Testament in the Masoretic text, and also to the publication of Salkinson's Hebrew Testament, to which we have frequently alluded of late. The whole Bible in the Breton tongue is nearly ready for the press, and through many channels the life-giving seed of the Word has been sent broadcast during the year, in the faith that the harvest will surely and duly appear. The speeches, as we have indicated, were largely tinged with allusions to the distinctive feature of the Society's mission.

Mr. Nisbet said he was reminded by his own memories of the wonderful growth that the Society had made in the face of many difficulties. The work of protest, he thought, was as needful now as when it was formed. The same corrupt versions are being circulated, although the area of their influence has been narrowed largely by the efforts of the Society. He deemed the reasons given for the continued supply of corrupt versions altogether inadequate, and he longed for the time when the shelves of the great Society in Queen Victoria-street would be entirely cleared of these objectionable copies of the Scriptures. Mr. Nisbet referred very thankfully to the many tokens of God's favour which had been vouchsafed to the growing operations of their own organisation.

Pastor F. White spoke of the vastness of the existing need for the distribution of the Scriptures, not only abroad, but at home, notwithstanding all that has been done. In the concluding part of his address, Mr. White emphasised the Divine inspiration of the Book, and its consequent infallibility, purity, exhaustlessness, indestructibility, and finality. We do not want, he said, and will not allow either substraction from or addition to the Word of God; and if others will do so, we will have no fellowship with such tampering.

Yet further words of advocacy of the work of the Society were given by Colonel Puget, Rev. W. Morris, Mr. W. Greene, Dr. Ginsburg, and others.

Christian Policemen at Exeter Hall.

Last Thursday Exeter Hall was taken possession of by the members and friends of the Christian Policemen's Association, on the occasion of the third anniversary of this young but most vigorous society. Early in the day there were two conferences on the various aspects of the work, and at five p.m. a public meeting was held, when various friends addressed the assembled members of the Force.

The evening gathering at eight o'clock—a large and enthusiastic one—was begun in a somewhat unorthodox fashion. At the stroke of the hour, no chairman being immediately forthcoming, Mr. Coote asked Lieut. Mandeville, who sat on the platform, to say a few words to the men. And a capital introduction to the later proceedings his few words proved to be. This lively son of the sea told in a rousing and thorough going way how on the coast of South America, "at half-past four in the afternoon, after the first bell in the dog-watch," the Lord saved his soul. He put the way of life before the policemen in simple manly phrase, and called on all who had not put Jesus Christ to the proof, to do so without delay. The ten minutes during which he held the platform were well spent, of a truth, and, as the Lieutenant remarked, it may have been that the little prelude was of God's own appointing, so that some soul might there and then start on the heavenly beat.

By and by the speakers appeared, and the meeting proper began with hearty singing and earnest prayer.

Mr. J. H. Tritton (Chairman) in a little introductory speech, recalled some memories of a tale entitled "One of Them" that he devoured in his careless and novel-reading days. It mentioned in one place a band of soldiers, out in India, waiting for the battle on the coming day, and cheered in that prospect by the words of their commander. Applying it to his hearers in a spiritual sense, Mr. Tritton besought them to be true soldiers of Christ, so that neither the hour of danger nor any word of scorn should tempt them to be ashamed of being "One of Them" who followed the Lord fully.

Mr. Pennefather, Receiver-General of the Metropolitan Police, said he thought no apology was needed from him as an official, in showing sympathy with such a good Association as this. Taking as a text the words of the wicked King Ahab, "Put this man in prison," he deduced some important lessons. One lesson drawn from Ahab's alliance with Jehosaphat was the danger of forming doubtful or evil friendships. He feared that many of the members of the Force were in the habit of putting God's Word and conscience in prison; against this, and against all that was hypocritical or false in any way, he faithfully warned them.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon, Jun., began by quoting an advertisement he had seen at a shoe factory on the way to the meeting—"Lasting work done here." He thought to himself, "Let's go in for that at Exeter Hall to-night." So in his address he directed his words of exhortation to getting every unsaved hearer to "remember this day" as the one when he began the "lasting work" to be found in Christian service. He suggested that they should fix their eye on something in their daily beat that would oft remind them of "the happy day that fixed their choice" on Jesus as their Saviour and Friend. With many an apt incident, graphically told, lighted up with gleams of grave humour, Mr. Spurgeon drove home his main point about "remembering the day" of their new birth. "When you go out and in among the prisoners on whom the law of the land has laid its hand, charge yourself first to see whether the saving hand of the Lord has been laid upon you."

After Miss Curzon had sung a Gospel invitation, in a clear and sweetly-sympathetic voice, the closing address was given by Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester. He said it was his privilege to spend an hour mostly every morning at the prison gates in his own town, and he was, therefore, in deep sympathy with policemen in their calling. He proceeded solemnly to exhort all who were unsaved, to decision, confession, and obedience. Altogether the occasion was far more of a salvation meeting than a simple anniversary; and that, we imagine, is a good index of the nature of the work of the Association.

From the interesting little report of the past year's work circulated at the meeting, we gather that thirty-nine new branches of the Association were formed, bringing up the total to eighty-five. The scope of the Society is extending in the counties, a very important and gratifying fact, seeing the influence that the policeman has in our villages and hamlets. Great progress has been made during the year in Ireland. On and Off Duty, the earnest little organ of the Society, now circulates to the number of 15,000 a month, and goes to all the four quarters of the globe. The temperance element is on the forward move; the Bible and Prayer Union has now 3000 members in the United Kingdom; the Bible-classes for policemen and their wives are found to be seasons of much soul-refreshing. Not only are the policemen getting saved, but they are led out into active service on behalf of others, by conducting Gospel services, rescuing the lost, and in other ways sowing the good seed.

South American Missionary Society.

The Bishop of London presided last week at the South American Missionary Society. He wished that the Society was better known, for though only in its infancy, it had done much good work both for the spiritual advantage of British subjects in South America and among heathen Indians. One had only to look at the map to see the strong claim the Society had on the Church, and the pathetic death of Captain Allen Gardner, in 1851, when he commended it to the English people with his dying breath, was a call to which fellow-countrymen should not turn a deaf ear.

Sir Thomas Chambers said that he hoped the society would every year become richer and more useful. They saw with pain the doctrines of Christianity assailed with contempt, but, as Canon Paget, in the noble sermon quoted in the report, had said, Let them refute them in fact as they had so often in logic, by showing what the Church could do. He was as gratified as surprised to hear that Darwin had subscribed to the Society, recognising, no doubt, how it improved the race. It would be well if all sceptics who became believers did likewise.—The report was adopted, and other speeches followed.

TOWER HAMLETS MISSION.

At the kind invitation of Mr. Charrington, I have been privileged to conduct a three weeks' mission in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road, and I am very desirous of bearing testimony to the great spiritual work that is being done there. The sight on Sabbath evenings is not easily described. There are seats in the hall for five thousand, yet many have to stand for want of room. On week nights the body of the hall is generally well filled. At the inquiry-meetings, many have professed night after night to have found peace. During my visit I have been enabled to speak in no uncertain sound on the subject of Purity of Life, and I have reason to believe that many young men have been much impressed.

To any who think the day of miracles is past, I would advise a visit to the Assembly Hall; there they will find a multitude of men and women who have lived in the deepest depths of sin, but who are now clothed and in their right mind, sitting at the feet of Jesus.—Faithfully yours,

James B. Wookey.

LIVERPOOL.—The third annual praise and thanksgiving service was held at the Bethshan Faith-healing Home, 161, Islington, on Good Friday, when there was a happy gathering of friends. The meeting was one which called forth grateful notes of praise, as the work of the past year was reviewed. Testimonies flowed in, recording the wonderful work of grace realised by many present, who had come to praise God for deliverance from long-standing and incurable diseases. These, together with short, pointed addresses, all testified to the glory of God and the keeping power of his grace.

Easter Gatherings.

Union Hall Mission.

THE recent holidays were occasions of great spiritual blessing among the friends and helpers in this Mission. The early part of both Good Friday and Easter Monday was devoted to praise, prayer, and conference. The meetings were well attended, and words of help and comfort were administered. Much prayer was offered for all God's work, and workers who would be testifying of Christ in various ways during the holiday season.

The afternoons were devoted to the work of the Gospel, a large open-air meeting being held near Hanover-gate, Regent's-park. We had the help of the Bromley Evangelistic Band, who rendered good service. Many hundreds heard the Word of Life, and some were met with whom we have reason to believe were awakened to see their need of a Saviour.

The evenings were fully occupied in Gospel work among the thousands who throng the Edgware-road on these occasions. Large meetings were held in the streets, and afterwards many came to the hall, where pointed Gospel addresses were delivered. We feel grateful to God for these opportunities of getting hold of these pleasure seekers, who may be weary of the things of the world, and who are often saying, doubtless, "Who will show us any good?" It is now many years since we began this kind of special effort, and we believe God has blessed them to the salvation of many. The annual report of the Mission is now ready, and will be forwarded to any who may desire to have it.

Evangelistic Mission.

THE two meetings held at Kilburn Hall on Easter Monday were large in attendance and hearty in tone. In the afternoon, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch thanked God, he had the privilege of being raised from sickness to have part in these gatherings, which were representative of unity amongst Christians from all points of London's compass. Much time in both meetings was given to fervent praise and prayer, on behalf of various Christian efforts.

Mr. Arthur Wheeler, of Brighton, said he was converted under this Mission about twenty years ago, in the Metropolitan Music Hall, on the very night he was engaged to play cards with a Godless companion. Pastor W. Frith said the greatest attainment was to have no will but the Supreme will. Mr. Iles, of Wimbledon, said the love of Christ is the motive-power for a life that will stand the strain of a dying hour.

After an interval for tea and open-air preaching of the Gospel, the evening meeting was opened by Mr. Hurditch's announcement of the receipt of many requests for prayer on behalf of relatives and others. Mr. Edward Hurditch, of Swindon, said Mark viii. gives three aspects of the Word—its power in the "I will" of Christ, which we may surely claim for a revival of his work; its promise of rest in company with eminent saints of old; and its warning as to many professed "children of the kingdom" being cast out, showing that God will not forget to punish the ungodly because He bears with them to-day. Mr. David Newell said the people are thirsting for the Word of God. What is needed is a revival of saints, and due monetary support of evangelistic effort. Mr. Hurditch testified that prayer had been answered for the previous speaker in a large number of conversions in the villages of Cambridgeshire, Dorset, and elsewhere.

Dr. McKilliam, of Blackheath, said he had at one time considered 1 Chron. a dry portion of Scripture, but, as an historical record of all the ancient people of God, it is a type of the Lamb's book of life. The singling out of Jabez indicates that there are differences among saints here, and will be above. These arise from lack of faith, and we may take warning therefrom. Many use sorrows and trials as reasons for not coming to Christ. Jabez went into the presence of the Lord because of his sorrow. Another warning is found in the fact that Reuben's family is so mixed with worldlings that their peculiar names indicate their unsaintly lives. They chose their portion outside the land, and did not go through death and judgment; nevertheless, even their names are graciously recorded. Mr. Robert Paton said our message to men must be drilled into our own souls. Workers must take care that they do not over-estimate their importance while under-estimating their influence for good or evil. Dr. Macnutt read Eph. v. 16, and remarked that efforts had been made to widen the way to heaven so as to admit persons who have the world and their lusts about them; but it is so narrow that only one can walk in it, and if we are to walk in it we must walk in Christ.

Further praise and prayer fitly closed a season of Christian fellowship from which all believers present must have derived much spiritual refreshing and profit.

The Church Army.

EASTER MONDAY was a marked day with the Church Army. They asked the open-air workers of several parishes, east and west, to meet them in Hyde Park, and after a service there to adjourn to Canon Leigh's schoolroom. Says a correspondent of The Rock: Our parish is one of the invited, and at Brunswick Chapel we find groups from other districts already waiting. After a short devotional meeting we go on to a schoolroom in which the men of the Army who were working through the morning are still at lunch. Soon the park is reached, the procession divides, and by a neat movement forms into two rings. After a few of the Army converts had told their experiences, a young Oxonian preaches the simple Gospel to the crowd with burning, loving words.

But it is time to be off, and, still keeping in two parties, we proceed by different routes towards St. Mary's Schools. As we near them Mr. Carlile and our own leader begin to invite the occupants of the beershops on the route to the meeting, with the result that though the room holds more than a thousand, it is crammed to crushing. Rev. E. W. Moore, Rev. C. E. Escreete, Canon Barker, Rev. F. S. Webster, Rev. W. Carlile, and several men of the Army give short, stirring speeches. Lastly, the Bishop of London speaks some fatherly words of encouragement and caution to the corps, dwelling on some of its good points—that it is evangelising the masses by means of working-men, and aims at taking the Gospel right to them instead of waiting till they come to church. We separate with hearts grateful to God for a most happy and, we believe, most useful day.

Sailors' Welcome Home.

ON Easter Monday, Miss Child and her helpers gave a tea for the sailors, and, in spite of the counter attractions of the gin palaces around, the tables were crowded twice over. A good many came straight from the ships where they were working on board, and it was good to know that a safe spot where they could rest and enjoy themselves was to be found in Ratcliff-highway, where sin of every kind abounds. At the close of the first meeting four young men asked to take the pledge, and had the blue ribbon put on; the earnest pleadings they had listened to had touched all their hearts, and desires were evidently awakened to seek that risen Lord of whom they had been hearing.

Near the close of the meeting a sailor came in half drunk and took a seat. He brought out a letter from his pocket which he asked one of the workers to read. It was found to contain the sad news of his mother's death. The sister who wrote said that throughout her illness the mother's great desire had been to see her wandering boy once more; but they did not know where to send for him as he had not written for years. Something had led him to write home a week before, and in answer had come the sad news that his mother died a month ago, and her last thoughts and prayers were for her absent boy. The poor fellow had evidently gone to the drink to drown his sorrow; he was patiently dealt with, and remained quietly listening. The hymns especially touched him, and earnest prayer was offered for him. It is hoped his mother's prayers will yet be answered.

The second meeting did not break up till eleven o'clock; the men seemed reluctant to go, and the workers were reluctant to let them leave the safe shelter of the Welcome Home. A happy band of Christian sailors were present, and several gave testimonies of the Lord's keeping power.

At the close of the tea for the invited guests, a number of destitute sailors who crowded round the doors were invited in, and while a crowded meeting was going on in the "Fo'c'sle" they were allowed to satisfy their hunger. Tickets were given for a supper to be held in a day or two, for even bright spring days do not bring food to these starving men, and many are still unable to obtain ships. Visitors are always welcomed by Miss Child at the Welcome Home, 173, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway, London, E. G. T.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND IN DRURY LANE.

"BUT religion makes you miserable; and you can't go to a theatre when you turn religious." These words were spoken by a lad of about thirteen years of age, who, with a few others, had been listening to the Gospel.

"But," said I, "it does not make me miserable. I know from experience that it is better to love the Saviour when a boy than to wait until you grow older; I accepted Jesus when I was but a boy, and that is not so very long ago."

"But we are poor, and have to work for our living," said a third lad.

"And who was it," I asked, "that Jesus said had the Gospel preached to them?"

"The poor," they replied simultaneously.

"Then you are just the ones whom Christ came to save," I said. And having gained their attention, I went on to tell them of the joy and peace that follow the acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ, relating one or two incidents that had recently come under my own notice. I was amazed at some of the remarks which fell from these youthful lips; they showed very clearly that the devil is busy blinding the eyes of our youth, and sowing the seeds of infidelity and scepticism in their tender hearts.

The foregoing conversation occurred one evening last week at the Whitefield Presbyterian Church, Wilson-street, Drury-lane, where Rev. E. P. Hammond conducted an eight days' mission. The work began in right earnest, and the interest increased as the meetings proceeded.

I reached the church, of which Rev. W. Burton Alexander is pastor, quite half an hour before the time announced for the meeting; but I was surprised to find the service already in full swing. Most of the children were listening eagerly to the story of the Cross. After earnest prayer, in which the children audibly joined, the teachers were requested to speak with them prior to the second meeting. They were at work almost instantly. Groups of children with heads bowed were seen all over the body of the building: some were asking the way of salvation; some were weeping on account of their sins; others were engaged in prayer, and in simple language praising God for his love to little children.

Mrs. Hammond secured the attention of the boys and girls by singing a solo from "Gems of Praise," the audience joining in the chorus. Then the preacher, with a variety of anecdote, earnestly lifted up Jesus Christ as the Saviour, and urged upon them the importance of accepting and serving Him in the days of their youth. After further prayer the teachers were again at work, dealing personally with the anxious ones. I fell in with four or five rough-looking lads, who appeared to be either apprentices or errand boys. Then the conversation took place which commences this little sketch. Although the soil was exceeding rough into which the seeds of the kingdom fell, I have no doubt of the harvest, for the seeds had been steeped in prayer, and the soil was left in the hands of Him who alone giveth life. F. W.

Rev. W. Burton Alexander writes:—Last night (April 30) closed a very peculiar and most interesting mission by Rev. E. P. Hammond in Whitefield Presbyterian Church. Many of us looked forward to the visit of God's servant with great expectancy and we have not been disappointed. Night after night the Spirit was felt amongst us with power. Young and old professed faith in Christ as their personal Saviour. All the elders of the Church and many members of the congregation and outside Christian friends worked nobly together, and in watering others they have been watered themselves. There was only one regret last night—that Mr. Hammond was not to continue for weeks, as the meetings were growing in spiritual power; still we thank God for the visit of his servant, and the fruit will remain.

In the earlier meetings the "rowdy" element was felt. But by firmness and tact and God's grace it was kept under, and before the close of the meetings some even of the roughs were subdued. The Gospel is still the power of God unto salvation.

HOMES FOR INEBRIATES' ASSOCIATION.—The report before us deals almost exclusively with the Dalrymple Home at Rickmansworth. During the year twenty-nine patients were admitted, of whom the greater part received decided benefit. Many applications were refused through lack of room and funds, to meet which difficulty the sum of £1000 is appealed for by the Committee. Since its commencement, the Home has been self-supporting, and the current year ended with a balance of over £200. The analysis of particular cases, showing the original and predisposing causes of inebriety, many of which are hereditary, adds interest to the report, which may be obtained on application to the superintendent, at the Cedars, Rickmansworth.

THE CAIRNS' MEMORIAL, BOURNEMOUTH.

The handsome structure erected for the use of the Bournemouth Y.M.C.A., as a memorial of the late Earl Cairns, was formally opened last Thursday, when large gatherings of friends assembled afternoon and evening. Adjoining the Memorial House, there has been erected the Shaftesbury Hall and Gymnasium in connection with the same institution. The two structures have cost about £10,000. A local paper in reporting the opening ceremony remarks: "That the titular patrons of both institutions should have passed away during the progress of the works, has given painful emphasis to the labours of those gentlemen who thus establish for Bournemouth that which cannot fail to prove a boon bearing perennial fruits."

The afternoon meeting was presided over by the Archbishop of York, and that in the evening by Lord Halsbury, president of the Bournemouth Y.M C.A. These, and other well-known gentlemen, gave addresses, in all of which very cordial and appreciative references were made to the high character and illustrious service of the two deceased Earls with whose names the buildings are associated. Mr. Baring Young, M.P., alluded to the admirable arrangements of the Memorial House. The whole building was clear of debt; but the basement was not complete, and it was desirable that it should be adapted for a boys' club. In addition they needed help for the library. He appealed to them to take an active and sympathetic interest in this great work, making the appeal in the name of the great and good man whose name was inscribed on the entrance to the building, and who took such an interest in the welfare of young men, and especially the young men of Bournemouth. Mr. Stevenson Blackwood referred to the undenominational, unsectarian, and catholic nature of the Institution, and to the aggressiveness of the work, dwelling upon the evil that resulted from a too rigid sectarianism, and to the forgetfulness of Christians that they belonged to the Church Militant. Among the other speakers were Lord Cranbrook, Admiral Sir Cooper Key, Mr. George Williams, Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke, and the Bishop of Sodor and Man.

Mr. Blackwood preached last Sunday afternoon in Shaftesbury-hall, and Captain Dawson will continue there the evangelistic service on Sunday afternoon, hitherto held in the Townhall.

THE REVIVAL IN CHICAGO.

At the various Pastors' Conferences held the Monday after the rink services closed, there were frequent references to the great meetings. The Baptist churches nearest to the rink reported good additions. The Methodist pastors gave the entire hour to a conference regarding the work. Meetings are being continued with excellent results at Plymouth Congregational Church.

A particularly improved state of affairs is said to be perceptible at the Stock Yards, where Mr. Jones has made many friends. Many people have expressed themselves as ready to join themselves with the churches of the city, and the pastors and their committees will doubtless be busily engaged examining candidates for some time to come. A new religiousness has been introduced into conversation. In cities and communities remote from Chicago there are reports of good accomplished through press reports and the general religious influence which has spread on all sides. Without doubt the atmosphere has been newly charged with spiritual forces, and it will take many days to measure the full fruitage of the late extraordinary services. In the fall of the year it is expected that the evangelists will return to Chicago and resume meetings on the West Side.—Christian Standard.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES.—On Easter Sunday, Mr. A. Turubull, the blind evangelist, of Edinburgh, concluded a fifteen days' mission at Christ Church, Yarm-road, Stockton-on-Tees, with very gratifying success.

The Book World.

Work-a-day Thoughts. By Alexander Cargill. Elliot Stock. These stray thoughts on many topics, are the offspring of a shrewd, reflective, and reverent mind, and are clothed in terse language: most pleasant reading for leisure moments.

Why I would Disestablish. Edited by Andrew Reid. 2s. 6d. Longmans. Here we have in convenient form the briefly expressed and more or less cogent views of many well-known public men on one of the burning political topics of the day.

Starving London, by A. S. Krausse (1s. Remington & Co.), contains the graphically written record of a recent three weeks' sojourn among the destitute of the great city. The sketches for the most part appeared originally in The Globe. The last chapter, on "The Thimble League," should not be overlooked.

Bible Tales for Infant Minds. Religious Tract Society. This handsome volume, with forty-eight splendid full-page illustrations, contains a selection of Scriptural narratives, re-written in the simplest of language to suit the dawning intellects of the very young. It would make a pretty and instructive birthday gift for children who have just learnt to read.

Eminent Naturalists. By Thomas Greenwood. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Eight short sketches of the lives of men famous as investigators into the realms of natural science; well condensed, and written in a popular style. Mr. Greenwood's object in compiling the book, he informs us, was to interest the young in this fascinating study.

The Diaconate of Women in the Anglican Church. By the late Dean Howson. Nisbet. 2s. In these pages woman's ministry in the Christian Church is strongly advocated. The Biblical aspects of that ministry are very wisely discussed, and with a freshness that lends extra point to the author's conclusions. A portrait and pleasant biographical sketch of the author are welcome additions to the book.

A Royal Service, and other Poems. By Jean Sophia Pigott. S. W. Partridge. It is a pleasure to meet with such verses as these: musical, free from the vain and unhealthy cravings, and unsatisfied longings, which disfigure so much "religious" poetry, and suggestive of noble and right views of God. The authoress is well known for her strong and beautiful thoughts, and the present collection will add to her repute.

Nearer to Jesus: Memorials of Robert Walter Fergus. By His Mother. Mackinlay, 421, Sauchiehall-street, Glasgow. A simple and touchingly written narrative of the life, cut short all too soon, of a beloved son. It will be read with comfort and profit by parents who are seeking to train their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Dr. Oswald Dykes, as the then pastor of the bereaved family, writes a brief preface.

Thoughts for Holy Week: with Meditations and Prayers for each day. By the late Bishop of Montreal. Hatchards. A series of pious meditations on the Saviour's final words and works. Such headings as The Beloved Disciple, The Prayed-for Disciple, Female Mourners, and Secret Friends are, in themselves, very suggestive. Sacred verses are appended to most of the meditations, and short prayers in connection with the preceding subjects.

The April Number of the British and Foreign Evangelical Review (3s. 6d. James Nisbet & Co.) appeals to all classes of readers. Theologians will meet with mental stimulus and food for reflection in the articles on "The Revised Text of the Greek Testament," by Principal Brown, and "Westminster Theology," by Professor Croskery; those seeking lighter fare will be pleased with the graphic account of Thessalonica, and the pungent criticism of Matthew Arnold's lectures and style.

The Church of England and its Endowments: A Popular Statement of Facts. By Christopher Page Deane. Elliot Stock. A very useful Handbook on the great question, "Reform or Disestablishment?" After giving a short but admirable sketch of the founding and development of the English Church from S. Aidan to the reformers of the sixteenth century, he adds clear, concise chapters on the Revenues, Government, and past Reorganisation of the Church. We recommend the book not only to defenders and approvers of Church and State connection, but to conscientious assailants; by so doing they will avoid many hasty conclusions.

A New Dame Trot, by C. A. Jones (J. S. Virtue & Co.), is a delightfully written story recording the sayings and doings of a little maiden who was left motherless. Mr. Sadler's illustrations are very choice.

The Mosaic Origin of the Pentateuchal Codes. By Geerhardus Vos. With an introduction by Professor William Henry Green. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. This able attack on the theories of the latest critical school was prepared as a thesis in competition for the Hebrew fellowship in Princeton seminary. It is scholarly in tone, and strong in its statement of the orthodox position. The discussion does not run along literary and linguistic lines, but grapples with problems arising out of the constitution and character of the laws of the Pentateuch, and of the codes in which they are found. It does this with marked success.

"Maranatha!" Is it True? 6d. S. W. Partridge. Second edition, revised and enlarged. It was our privilege to read this little book in its colonial dress, and we renew its acquaintance in the English edition with pleasure. In the form of interesting conversations, the subject of the premillennial Advent of Christ is treated in a striking, clear, and, we believe, Scriptural manner. To all who see the shadows lengthening—who watch the speedy coming of the Bridegroom—these pages will be an Elim of rest, and coolness, and certainty. To those who know but little of its momentous subject, the truths of this little book will come as a revelation.

Parousia: An Inquiry as to the interval between the Lord's coming for his Church and with his Church. By F. Newth. J. E. Hawkins. The object of the writer, who belongs to a particular class of the Premillennial School, is to show from Scripture that the period between the first resurrection and the establishment of Christ's Millennial Throne is longer than many suppose. He thinks it will be forty years. One point in his favour is that Mr. Grattan Guinness, an interpreter of quite a different school, calculates that the times of the Gentiles conclude about 1920, i e., forty years from the point he reckons from. The contrast between the literal and spiritual Israel (p. 21) is very clear and valuable.

The Expositor. 1s. Hodder & Stoughton. The current number opens with Captain Conder's very spirited defence of the English Explorations in Palestine, in reply to Prof. Socin. It is excellent in tone, and pretty hard to answer, we imagine. The article, "Testament or Covenant," by Principal T. C. Edwards, suggests a solution of great promise to the difficulties of Heb. ix. 16, 17. Dr. Marcus Dod's paper, "The Fourth Vision of Zechariah," disappoints us greatly. The exegesis is capital; so are later portions, where he deals with purely moral questions; but that he should grapple with the questions of the removal of guilt, and of the moral healing connected with guilt removal, through several pages of print, without so much as a reference to the sin-cleansing blood of Christ, surprises us. Why should so strong a writer omit the most important factor of the problem? It is a great relief to turn a few pages and read Dr. Maclaren's splendid exposition, which, dealing with the same problems, sets the Cross of Christ in the very forefront.

The A B C Church and Chapel Directory (2d. R. Banks), now in its twenty-fifth year of publication, seems to be more complete and more useful for reference than ever. The usual list of "May Meetings" is given.

The Earthly History of the Church of the Lord Jesus, as Foretold by Himself in Revelation ii. and iii. By Joseph Durden. 6d. Bateman, Paternoster-square. A little book cleverly written, but all from one point of view. The author is strong on Disestablishment.

The Deacon's Dance. By S. Trevor Francis. 6d. per dozen "Christian Commonwealth" Office. This is an earnest warning against worldly customs sanctioned by some professing Christians. The trimming, world-conforming, minister is also addressed in fervid language.

"Don't it Matter, Bill? I Say it Do" By D. Darlinghurst 2d. Beare & Son, 21, Market-place, Penzance. This report of a homely conversation (in the Cornish vernacular, we presume) about sin, and repentance, and forgiveness, clearly sets forth the ways of life and of death: excellently suited for distribution in country parts.

Brotherly Honour v. Selfish Passion. By Rev. J. Hirst Hollowell. "Daily Express" Office, Nottingham. This paper was read before the Notts Congregational Union, by whose desire it is printed. The appeal to chivalry and honour, with morality as their base, is forcibly and cleverly urged as a motive to purity. As an "address to men and citizens" it possesses considerable value, and should be widely circulated among our young men especially.

BRIGHTON Y.M.C.A.—The Educational Committee of this Association (55, Old Steine) offer 21s. and 10s. 6d. as prizes for best essays of about ten pages foolscap on "What should constitute a perfect Y.M.C.A.?" Also valuable prizes of 40s. and 21s. for best selected and rendered recitations from Milton, Cowper, or Poltock, by members of the Association. The essays must be sent in by May 10. The Elocutionary Competition will take place on June 21.

DESTITUTION AT PONTYMOILE, MON.

Dear Sir,—Pray accept my hearty thanks for your contribution, which is most welcome at this time, when the terrible sufferings of the starving children and their unemployed parents have very special and urgent claims upon us. It is also most acceptable now while we are feeling the depression of trade most acutely; for while we have increasing opportunities of reaching the ears and hearts of the people at our "three mission stations," our hands are tied for want of funds.

Thos. M. Wintle.

Pontymoile, Pontypool, Mon.

[Our earnest brother, Mr. Wintle, is doing a good and greatly needed work in the relief of the many poor around, in addition to his evangelistic efforts. We should be glad if our readers could sustain him in it with some substantial help.—Ed]

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

On Thursday, April 29, nearly one hundred of the theatrical "Boardmen" had a meat tea, in the Youth's Hall. This is the second anniversary of this department of work, a lady generously contributing £5 for the special purpose. After the meal, Rev. Burman Cassin drew striking lessons from the titles of the men, remarking that the substantial part of each was the "true man" between the boards, and that only a Christian could be a true man. Mr. Courthope Todd gave an impressive address on "Lot's Wife." A choir of boys from the Mission sang, and flowers, sent by country children, were distributed.

The Theatrical Mission has just opened a "Medical Room" in the institute for the treatment of slight ailments; at the Free Registry four girls were last month provided with Christian homes, and thus severed effectually by service from their former connection with the stage.

The ex-employés had a social re-union last week, and amongst them the Temperance work is in a very flourishing condition. The re-unions of actresses and theatrical children will be continued through this month on Fridays and Tuesdays, and any visitors, especially friends from the country, are heartily welcome. Many additional "letter writers" to members are needed, and all communications should be addressed to Courthope Todd, Theatrical Mission Institute, Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.

ABERDEEN.—Mr. J. H. Smith, of the Banffshire Gospel Mission, has concluded a most successful mission under the auspices of the Aberdeen Y.M.C.A. Blessing has accompanied the word on every occasion. The evangelist is a young man, singularly quiet and humble in disposition, fearless and strong in declaring the whole counsel of God. The workers were insensibly drawn round him, and worked with great pleasure to themselves and profit to many. Last week a deputation of students from Edinburgh University visited Aberdeen.

BRISTOL NURSERY FOR HOMELESS INFANTS.—The Committee regret to have to close the rooms devoted to mothers with young infants until the income of the Institution is increased. More than a hundred babies have been admitted since its opening, and a large number refused for want of funds. Brief sketches in the new report, of many of the little ones' histories, several of whom have been taken to Canada, show how great a need is being met by this nursery. Special arrangements were entered into last year with a view to the education of such as are capable. Miss Marriott, St. Michael's Hill, Bristol, is secretary and treasurer.

BIBLE-CLASS UNION.—"Never in the history of our Union has our progress been more marked, our Union more closely cemented, our efforts more vigorous and aggressive, and the power of God's grace more fully realised than during the past year." Seven additional classes have joined; twenty-seven business houses are now comprised in the Union; in some of these a daily prayer-meeting is held, and in a few instances Dorcas meetings and out-door missions have been started. This report teems with gratitude, and the secretary, Mr. Phillips, 11, Vere-street, W., looks forward to the increasing growth and prosperity of the Union, the headquarters of which are Stafford Rooms, W.

HEYBRIDGE, MALDON, ESSEX.—During a fortnight in March, this village was roused and penetrated by a series of services held in a drill hall, known as Head Quarters, by Mr. J. Farrington, of the Evangelisation Society (21, Surrey-street, Strand), and much blessing is following. The services on Sundays were fully attended, and on week nights numbers increased. Best of all is the evidence of a quiet, strong work, chiefly among men. Several careless ones arrested and brought to decision, anxious ones settled in the faith, and Christians quickened in their desire to live "even as" their Saviour lived, "to seek and to save," is deep cause for praise. We thank God for the Society which meets the need of undenominational Gospel meetings. Many are the non-church-goers who are thus caught in the Gospel net.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A great movement is begun in the State of Virginia, in favour of Prohibition.

The Hon. Miss Portman has purchased and closed the "Portman Arms," Blandford.

"Young Men's Prohibition Clubs" are said to be rapidly increasing in the States.

A very successful Church of England Temperance Society Mission was lately held at Oldham.

The "Morning Star Legion" is a new American organisation to promote Temperance and purity.

In the drinking halls, in China, rest, and a variety of refreshments, may be had for a sum equal to a penny.

The Lancet thinks intoxication should not as a rule be deemed an excuse for crime; we should say it ought never to be.

Two popular Temperance workers, Miss M. A. Paull, and Mr. John Ripley, the Oriental traveller, are shortly to be united in marriage.

The annual report of the Scottish Temperance League is a comprehensive and able document. It gives evidence of intense earnestness.

Mr. Caine, M.P., at a recent Local Option meeting, at Tottenham, said the present House of Commons meant to reduce the evils of intemperance.

A leading wine merchant, interviewed by a representative of The Pall Mall Gazette, gives a doleful account of the present state of the wine trade.

Mr Arthur Cohen, M.P., says drink is the great tyrant which the British workman must throw off if he would compete successfully with his foreign rivals.

In the early days of the Australian Colonies the publican was indeed "a shark." Mr. G. A. Sala writes, that in this respect the class has not greatly improved.

Mr. T. Whittaker, J.P., Scarborough, attributes the decline in the drink revenue largely to Temperance work, assisted by coffee palaces, vegetarian restaurants, &c.

Rev. C. H. Mead has had a successful lecture tour amongst the Freedmen of the Southern States, as the missionary of the United States National Temperance Society.

A Special Commission has emphatically condemned the system, or any modification of any system, by which women shall be employed as barmaids in Victoria, Australia.

Mr. W. J. Metcalfe, Q.C., Judge of the Bristol County Court, has written, strongly condemning grocer's licences. His experience of their working is most unfavourable.

The Prohibition Amendment to the State Constitution of Rhode Island (United States) was adopted, April 7, by an immense majority. The Women's Christian Temperance Union fought splendidly.

Referring to the exclusion of London from Sir J. Pease's Sunday Closing Bill, it is pertinently asked why London should be so treated. It is said no place in the kingdom needs Sunday closing more.

The English Good Templars' Grand Lodge Session, at Newport, last week, resolved to petition against the appointment of holders of drink licences as postmasters, and the use of licensed premises as post-offices.

Mr. Miller, who is in Sweden on behalf of the London Sunday-school Union, has had a personal interview with the King. His Majesty expressed deep interest in the Temperance movement, both in England and Sweden.

Commander Dawson, R.N., writes in warm commendation of the late Mr. Alexr. Balfour's temperance and religious work on behalf of seamen. "Mr. Balfour knew that without religion mere pledge-taking could do little for wandering sailors."

The first action brought under the Pennsylvania law of 1885, prohibiting liquor-dealers to sell to habitual drunkards whose friends remonstrate against it, was a wife against a saloon-keeper in Allegheny City, who was fined 500 dollars, the full amount granted by the law.

At a recent banquet given by the Lord Mayor to various learned bodies at the Mansion House, a distinguished scientific advocate of Temperance was a guest. His brethren wondered what he would do when the "loving cup" came round. Without tasting, he "passed it on."

Four new branches have been formed at Liverpool in connection with the British Women's Temperance Association. Rev. C. Garrett said the organisation was one of the most hopeful of the time. The Recorder said drunkenness was decreasing in Liverpool, especially amongst women.

The Good Templars of Sweden propose to organise a Law and Order Branch, to print and circulate as widely as possible the gist of the licensing laws, to appoint a committee to watch over and report on transgressions of the licensing laws, as far as possible to secure competent chemical analysis of intoxicants for sale, and to institute proceedings against dealers in adulterated wares.

Mr. Schumacher, the Ohio oatmeal king, recently suffered by a fire to the extent of the entire loss of his immense flour mills at Akron. A few days after the fire two men from Cincinnati called on him for the purpose of buying a vast quantity of damaged grain. As a cheque, amounting to thousands of dollars, was about to be handed to Mr. Schumacher, one of the men carelessly remarked that the damaged grain "would make a very large amount of whisky." "'What! Do you want this grain to make whisky of?' inquired Schumacher, stepping back a few feet. 'Yes; we are distillers in Cincinnati.' 'Then, gentlemen, you cannot buy any grain of me. I have no grain to sell to be made into whisky. Good-day.'"

Of the present board of aldermen in New York no fewer than seven are liquor dealers, and nearly all of them are the companions of liquor dealers and regular frequenters of gambling saloons. "Rum and rulers, ale and aldermen, loot and liquor," says the New York Observer, "are alliterations which can scarcely be avoided in speaking of our municipal government."

The Clark Liquor Law has struck consternation to the hearts of the saloon-keepers in many of the principal cities of the State of Iowa, where liquor selling has been going on slyly. Many liquor sellers have heretofore defied the law, but it is believed they will now give up and stop. The breweries have been making a drink called "prohibition," a light beer, and a fight will be made to test the law on that.

MR. THOMAS EDWARDS, the Banff naturalist, who attained wide fame by the story of his life written by Mr. Samuel Smiles, died on April 27, in the seventy-second year of his age.

RAYLEIGH.—Evangelistic services have been conducted here by Mrs. K. Yeoland for three weeks; there have been very large gatherings every night, and it is believed that a good work has been done. On the closing evening Mrs. Yeoland met some of the converts and spoke to them upon the "three kinds of hearers."

CHILDREN'S CONVALESCENT HOME, BRIGHTON.—Those desirous of placing children needing special care, from hospitals or otherwise, at the seaside, will be interested in learning that arrangements may be made for their reception at the Home for Children, established at 7, College-place, as a branch of the London and Brighton Invalid Home, Kemp Town. An experienced Christian matron is in charge, and the Home is under the supervision of the resident lady visitors of the Parent Home. Inquiries may be addressed to Miss E. S. Elliott (Hon. Sec.), 66, Mildmay-park, London, N., or to the Matron, Mrs. Jenkins, 7, College-place Brighton.

LONDON SOLDIERS' HOME (170, Buckingham Palace-road, S.W.)—During the year a closer union was formed with the supporters of the Vauxhall Mission, a Scripture reader was engaged to mix and converse with the soldiers, another was employed to invite men to the meetings, and sleeping accommodation was added as a new feature of the work. The regular Gospel services and Bible-classes appear to have been greatly blessed, no less than thirty of the soldiers having taken their places as Christian men. A Bible-reading Union has been joined by a considerable number. Communications may be addressed to the Secretary, Mr. C. P. W. Kindersley. Further extension of the operations are contemplated when increased funds are provided.

PRISONERS IN SWITZERLAND.—In Canton Neuchatel, a good handicraft is taught to every prisoner, and all who are well behaved are after a period placed with a master of the trade which they have severally learned. The prisoner, when "provisionally liberated," has to present himself every week to a patron, who receives the reports of his master and of the police. The patron sends an abstract of these reports to the governor of the prison, and in this way, if his conduct remains good, the man's liberty is gradually restored and he regains his position in society—with the additional advantages of experience of discipline and knowledge of a trade. Well may M. de Laveleye, in describing this system, say that a Swiss canton is in some things a century in advance of the rest of the world.

UNITED KINGDOM BENEFICENT ASSOCIATION.—In the last year's report of this Institution, which grants annuities to persons of the upper and middle classes who are reduced in worldly circumstances we read: Notwithstanding a period of great and general depression, the income for the year 1885 amounts to £20,055 8s. 6d., which is a matter for sincere congratulation. The Committee acknowledge their indebtedness to Miss Bullar, who has successfully conducted an interesting serial entitled "Con Amore" (Caswell, Birmingham, 1s. per annum). Her efforts have resulted in the acquisition of many valuable friends for the Association. During the past year fifty-three annuities have been granted. The number of annuitants to be elected is regulated by the available funds. The office of the Society is 4, Berners-street, W.

DUBLIN SOLDIERS' HOME.—The report to hand says that all the dormitories and sleeping accommodation were quite filled up last year by soldiers and their wives, and members of the Royal Irish Constabulary, numbering altogether upwards of 4000 persons. The Gospel meetings and classes were better and more regularly attended than ever, and the spiritual work generally has been largely owned and blesed of God. Extracts from letters show how greatly the Institute is valued by the soldiers, one of whom wrote: "I would give ten pounds for an order to return to the dear friends and Home in Dublin." Ninety soldiers signed the temperance roll, making the total number nearly a thousand. Captain R. W. Thompson, Clonskeagh Castle, co. Dublin, is the hon. secretary, by whom help will be thankfully received and acknowledged.

WORKING GIRLS' HOUSE AND DAY NURSERY.—The first year of this institution in Drury-lane has been a successful one, and the results fully justify its continuance and support. The arrangements have comprised evening classes for sewing and singing, temperance work, classes for teaching plain cooking and domestic economy, and Sunday meetings. Invalid dinners were supplied to the sick poor, the infant nursery ministered to 2516 little ones, and a large number of girls were sent into the country for a holiday. A branch for befriending young servants was opened in August, through which many have been assisted to situations. The House is 73, Drury-lane, and the lady superintendent is Miss King, who resides on the premises. In this first report several cases are recorded of poor girls who found a temporary shelter in this much-needed Home.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

MESSRS. JONES AND SMALL are to be invited to visit Boston in the autumn.

REV. A. B. EARLE.—As the result of union meetings under the conduct of this evangelist, at Littleton, N.H., the churches have been much revived, and many inquirers are reported.

LORD RADSTOCK has held drawing-room meetings in Rome. Canon Wilberforce, whose visit was looked forward to with pleasure by many, had, by the advice of his doctor, to abandon his intention of coming.

THERE is a quickening of missionary interest in the American theological seminaries. At Yale a mission band has been formed, seventeen of the students having already joined it and pledged themselves to work in the foreign field.

THE AUSTRALIAN METHODISTS are making vigorous arrangements for a hearty celebration of the Jubilee of their establishment in that island continent. The services open in Melbourne about the middle of May and will continue for a week or more. The hope and prayer is that the Jubilee may continue on in an unprecedented revival.

THE SABBATH IN ITALY.—The Italian Chamber has passed a law making one day's rest per week, by children working in factories, obligatory. This concession is due in great measure to the continued efforts of Pastor Sciarrelli, the agent of the Wesleyan Mission at Naples. He succeeded in obtaining the support of the Hygienic Society, and several working-men's societies. —L'Evangéliste.

BEN. HOGAN, writing to the New York Weekly Witness, on March 25, says:—I leave for the Pacific Coast to-day, after six months' work in Nebraska. I have been the instrument, through the grace of God, of saving many souls since I came here. I stop in Laramie the first week, in Utah the next week; Nevada for some time; California about a month; Victoria and different points in that section whatever time is profitable.

BERLIN.—In a large room of one of the Royal palaces, the Magdalen Society, of which the Empress of Germany is the President, held its annual meeting April 19. The report spoke of the rescue and help afforded to many, and of the general prosperity of the Society. At the close of the meeting the Empress expressed her thankfulness for the good work done, and her wish that its usefulness might be greatly extended.

CONSTANTINE, ALGERIA.—A former member of the Y.M.C.A. at Geneva, Mr. Jean Kohly, who is now a British and Foreign Bible Society's colporteur, has begun a Y.M.C.A. and a Sunday-school at Constantine, both of which are bearing excellent fruit. At the beginning of this year, with the approval of the pastors of the town, he began to conduct regular religious services for the benefit of the young Protestant soldiers in garrison there.—L'Evangéliste.

HEART'S CONTENT, NEWFOUNDLAND. — Miss Wilkins, Alstone Lodge, Cheltenham, sends to us extracts of a letter received from Mr. Smith, missionary at Heart's Content, announcing the accidental loss by fire of his house and all its contents. He, with his wife, child, and servant, barely escaped with their lives. All his books, clothes, furniture, and other valuables were utterly consumed. Miss Wilkins will thankfully receive and forward any sums that sympathising friends may contribute.

TURKISH RULE.—Rev. J. Graham, of Broughty Ferry, one of the ministerial party now on a tour in the East, writes to The Christian Leader:—Palestine, where I am now come to, is in a wretched state from the want of a just government. We visited Miss Whateley's schools, the Egyptian government schools, the Coptic schools, and the great Mohammedan university, with its 10,000 students. One of the most urgent wants of the East is female education. Until the women are educated there can be no progress.

FATHER GAVAZZI, says the correspondent of The Record, has finished his course of lectures on the Papal Encyclical. In the last he particularly alluded to the temporal power. After demonstrating by fact the abuse that was made of that power, he ended by reminding the people of the sacrifices Italians made to obtain unity, and the sufferings the Papacy had brought on the country by having called in foreign aid no less than forty-two times. God has allowed the temporal power to fall; never, he felt sure, to rise again.

PETERBOROUGH, ONTARIO.—Our town has been receiving from God a rich outpouring of blessing, through the labours of Mr. Ferdinand Schiverea, an evangelist from Brooklyn. Union meetings were held, all but one of the churches uniting. The work was quiet, but to all appearances thorough, and the Word of God was much honoured. Five of the churches will receive between 500 and 600 new members, and the number of conversions, as far as man could judge, is large. The Y.M.C.A. has participated to a large extent in the blessing. GEORGE E. WILLIAMS,
General Secretary of Y.M.C.A.

A CHICAGO JOURNALIST CONVERTED.—Mr. G. W. W. Carroll, business manager of the Hyde Park Herald, at a meeting of the Methodist ministers at the Sherman House, on April 5, testified that he had been saved through Rev. Sam Jones, and the acknowledgment drew the warmest expression of joy from the brethren. Mr. Carroll is a young man, apparently about thirty years of age. He confessed to having been a backslider, and when Mr. Jones came to the city he did not want to see him or attend his meetings. A friend persuaded him to go. The second meeting he attended led to his conversion. "The next day I bought a Bible, and now I have an altar in our house. My wife is also a convert." Mr. Carroll gave portions of his testimony in a broken voice, as if overcome with emotion.

THE BIBLE IN JAPAN.

AT a meeting last week of the Committee of the National Bible Society of Scotland, held in Glasgow, Mr. Thomson, the agent for Japan, reported on a visit he has just paid to the northern districts of that country. "The people of the North," says Mr. Thomson, "have for ages been distinguished for their superior education, and very many of the ancient 'Samurai' (nobles' retainers) could read Chinese. Not having the Scriptures in Japanese, Mr. Lilley (the Society's former agent) sent Chinese Scriptures, and a large number of these and Chinese tracts and books were sold long before a preacher of the Gospel ever put foot in these parts. The consequence was that an interest was excited in Christianity at a time when the Yaso-kiyo was hated in many other parts of the country.

"When at last a Missionary Society sent one of its men to labour in the North, he found that a number of people knew something of Christianity, and were interested in it. After some years of labour, the report of two missionaries working there was that much of their success was due to the influence of the men who first went about selling the Scriptures, and explaining them as best they could."

REV. W. BOOTH has decided that the Salvation Army shall withdraw from general trade operations, and confine themselves, as formerly, to papers, books, and uniforms.

EMIGRATION.—Rev. A. Styleman Herring, 45, Colebrooke-row, London, N., Chairman of the Clerkenwell Emigration Society, writes that he will be happy to answer any inquiries, or forward "Hints to Emigrants" to any who desire, and who will forward a stamped and addressed envelope.

REV. J. P. CHOWN, late pastor of Bloomsbury Chapel, and an ex-President of the Baptist Union, who has been in failing health for some time, has just undergone a painful operation at the hands of Mr. Sydney Jones. It is hoped that perfect quiet will place Mr. Chown out of danger.

SHELTERING HOMES, LIVERPOOL.—A band of little girls are sailing in the ss. Parisian, from the Mersey, on May 6. Will the friends who love this rescue work ask our God to watch over them on the mighty deep, and bear them safely to their destination? A third band is gathering in the Homes. Will friends remember its needs?

THE FOLLOWING RECIPE, says an American contemporary, seems to be the one that some people use in their efforts to secure Christian union: Assume that your own denomination is the Church, and that all others are sectarians and schismatics. Then insist that everybody ought to join your company, and deplore the divisions that are perpetuated because most people refuse to join it.

A STRONG TESTIMONY.—In a recent sermon in London, Rev. Charles Garrett said: We have got a great shadow on our hearts at Liverpool. We have got to sustain the greatest loss that Liverpool could have sustained. This time last week there was a magnificent man, full of hope and anticipation as to the work he would do for God and humanity—Alexander Balfour; he will be buried to-morrow. Ah, if ten thousand had died in Liverpool, it would not have been such a blow as Mr. Balfour's death! All Liverpool is weeping.

REV. H. G. THWAITES writes from St. John's Vicarage, Newport, that for some time past he has been suffering from his throat. He had hoped to have regained sufficient strength for the Conference on May 12, 13, and 14, or to have found someone to conduct the meetings in his stead. Having failed to get a substitute, he is strongly urged to give up the Conference this year. He is sorry thus to deprive others of this privilege, but rejoices that the Southsea Conference takes place the next week, to which he hopes many will go. Information may be obtained from Rev. F. Baldey, St. Simon's, Southsea.

SAWBRIDGEWORTH, HERTS.—On Good Friday a tea was given to the travellers who usually hold their fair in this place on April 23 and 24. Mr. W. E. Baily, of the Open-air Mission, gave the invitation, and addressed those who came. Miss Wallis spoke of the National Travellers' Temperance Association Union, showing the importance and extent of the movement. On the following Sunday the same party of travellers were present at the mission service. All present partook of a social tea, and the travellers seemed very grateful for the kind interest shown in them by the friends in this place and neighbourhood.

MR. RUSKIN ON THE BIBLE.—Writing recently to The Pall Mall Gazette, Mr. Ruskin says, with respect to the Bible:—"It is the grandest group of writings existent in the rational world, put into the grandest language of the rational world, in the first strength of the Christian faith, by an entirely wise and kind saint, St. Jerome: translated afterwards with beauty and felicity into every language of the Christian world; and the guide, since so translated, of all the arts and acts of that world which have been noble, fortunate, and happy. And by consultation of it honestly—on any serious business, you may always learn—a long while before your Parliament finds out—what you should do in such business, and be directed, perhaps, besides to work more serious than you had thought of."

Mission and other Appeals.

FRIENDS OF THE SICK AND SUFFERING POOR are asked to send to Rev C. P. Baxter, chaplain of the Central London Sick Asylum, Cleveland-street, W., parcels of books, weekly or daily papers, for circulation amongst the patients. Please pay carriage.

SOLDIERS IN DUBLIN.—Dear Sir,—Your kind interest in the Dublin Soldiers' Home has given us a handsome response to our appeal for funds to complete it. We want about £600 still. Will Christian Friends give us further help—Yours very sincerely, (Colonel) W. HATT NOBLE

A CONVALESCENT HOME AT GUERNSEY.—Will readers of THE CHRISTIAN, who are interested in this little island, or who have derived benefit from a stay here, contribute a stone in the building of a Convalescent Home about to be erected in one of the country parishes of the island. Any donation, however small, will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Miss Thurstan, Mount Row, Guernsey, who will also gladly furnish further particulars if required.

FRIENDLESS GIRLS IN WIMBLEDON.—This Home, opened in January, 1885, has for its object the rescue of children from evil surroundings, who are trained for domestic service. We have now vacancies for several children between the ages of six and thirteen, on payment of 6s. a week. Until our funds increase we do not feel justified in taking any more free cases. Gifts of linen, clothing, and boots would be most acceptable.—C. S. WILTS, hon. sec., 13, Homefield-road.

KING'S CROSS Y.M.C.A. (91, Euston-road, N.W.).—Mr. C. J. Pitman, hon. secretary, writes: We are very anxious to form a good library for reference and otherwise, in connection with this branch of the Association. Should any of your readers be willing and able to assist us in this matter by gifts of books or money to be devoted to the purchase of such books as are suitable to the aims and objects of the above, we shall be deeply grateful. Annual subscriptions and donations are also very much needed.

CITY MISSIONARIES AND BIBLE-WOMEN.—A comfortable Home has been open for the last few years at St. Boswells, on the Tweed, where the missionaries and Bible-women of Edinburgh may enjoy a season of rest and refreshment during the summer months. Lodging is provided, rent free, leaving the expenses of board and travelling to be defrayed. Contributions thankfully received by Mrs. Henry Dundas, Craig Royston, Davidson's Mains, Edinburgh. Subscriptions are earnestly solicited. Last year several had to be refused from want of funds.

THE NEW PREMISES (14, Finsbury-square, E.C.) of the City Branch of the Y.W.C.A. will (D.V.) be opened by the Lord Mayor on Friday, May 14.

THE AFRICAN LAKES.—Messrs. Kincaid & Co., Greenock, are constructing a light draught stern-wheel steamer of about 100 ft. length for the African Lakes Company. The steamer is for the use of missionaries for visiting the natives in the lake districts of Africa.

SOLDIERS IN ITALY.—Thursday, April 22, was the thirteenth anniversary of the foundation of the Military Church in Rome. Owing to the military arrangements of the day, the attendance was not as good as on previous years, but not for this will Signor Capellini be discouraged in the great and good work he has at heart, and his friends will be glad to hear that, in spite of many and great difficulties, his work among the soldiers quartered in Rome is progressing satisfactorily.

MARSEILLES.—New and excellent premises have just been secured on a four years' lease, on the Quay, for the work amongst sailors of all nationalities, under the direction of Mr. C. E. Faithfull. He is at present in England, with the view of enlisting the practical sympathy of the friends of sailors, and raising the sum of £600. A considerable part of this is required immediately for rent and necessary alterations of and removal to the new premises. Communications may be addressed to our care.

EDINBURGH STUDENTS AT SHEFFIELD.—A series of mission services for young men, have been held in the old Surrey Music Hall, Sheffield, conducted by a deputation from the Edinburgh University Students' Holiday Mission. The very earnest manner in which the students addressed the congregations proved what a real and living Saviour each had found. Frequent reference was made to the great work done at the Edinburgh University through Messrs. Stanley Smith and Studd, before their departure for China, and which has been followed up by Professor Drummond's noble efforts. The results of the mission, numerically, were not great; but so far as those present could judge, those souls which were won for the Master were such as would have been less likely to have been won by the usual methods.—Methodist Times.

Notes on Daily Readings

SUNDAY, MAY 9.—JOSHUA XIX.

1.—And the second lot came forth to Simeon.—The inheritance which fell to the lot of Simeon was, as we read ver. 1, "Within the inheritance of the children of Judah," and this is further explained ver. 9, "Out of the portion of the children of Judah was the inheritance of the children of Simeon: for the part of the children of Judah was too much for them: therefore the children of Simeon had their inheritance within the inheritance of them." Simeon and Levi were together in their act of cruelty (Gen. xxxiv.), which brought down upon it their father's curse on his deathbed: "Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel: I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel." The scattering was fulfilled in Levi, scattered by their functions throughout the tribes of Israel. Simeon was divided not only from his companion Levi, but from all Israel, by being thrust to the extreme south-western corner of the whole land, and the disadvantage of this must have been felt keenly when the ten tribes revolted under Jeroboam, for Simeon was then, although one of the ten tribes, divided by Judah and Benjamin from the rest of the kingdom of Israel.

11.—Their border went up toward the sea.—"Jacob and Moses had both (Gen. xlix. 13; Deut. xxxiii. 19) predicted that Zebulon should dwell upon the sea-shore, and suck of the abundance of the seas. But so far as we can tell from the boundaries of that tribe as given in this Book, their territory did not quite touch the Mediterranean; though it may have been afterwards extended to the coast."—Keil. But there is great uncertainty about identifying most of the names in this chapter.

MONDAY, MAY 10.—JOSHUA XX.

6.—Until the death of the high priest.—"Very different answers have been given to the question, why the slayer was under restraint till the death of the high priest. The opinion of Maimonides, which Bahr in the main has adopted, was that 'the death of the high priest, the head of the Theocracy and representative of the whole people, was regarded as of such importance, that every other death was forgotten in consequence, and was no longer to be avenged.' But there is no connection between this explanation and the significant clause in Num. xxxv. 25, 'who was anointed with the holy oil.'" Keil, from whom this is quoted, regards the death of the earthly high priest as "a type of the death of the heavenly one," and considers this "typical reference as the real foundation of the institution." But to this view a serious objection presents itself, namely, that Jesus was not High Priest when He died, for it was not till the resurrection that He entered on his priestly office (comp. Heb. v. 5 with Acts xiii. 33). There is, however, another view, which has already been suggested in the notes on Num. xxxv., which treats the type as suggestive by contrast. To the unintentional manslayer the city of refuge was a place of exile, as well as a place of safety. When permitted to return, by the death of the high priest, he gladly returned "to the land of his possession." Not so the soul that has fled for refuge to Jesus. To be "in Christ" is no place of exile. No Christian desires to return to "the land of his possession," but rather to abide in Him for evermore. To such it is glad tidings of great joy to know that they must abide "until the death of the High Priest." For as He never dies, but "continueth ever," the expression speaks to them of a never-ending portion.

7.—They appointed Kedesh, &c.—The meaning of names of the cities of refuge are suggestive, and are worth recording. According to Gesenius they they are: Kedesh (sanctuary), Shechem (shoulder, significant of strength), Hebron (alliance), Bezer (precious ore), Ramoth (lofty things), Golan (exile).

TUESDAY, MAY 11.—JOSHUA XXI.

"This chapter states the total number of the cities assigned to every branch of the Levites, the priests being first especially provided for (4—8); then gives the names of all the Levitical cities (9—42); and it concludes (43—45) with a solemn declaration that all God's promises to Israel were now fully accomplished."—Sp. Com.

19.—All the cities of the children of Aaron, the priests, were thirteen cities.—It is a favourite objection of the Rationalists that Aaron could not have had at this time descendants enough to fill thirteen cities. But to this it is well answered that it would have been "enormous short-sightedness in the distribution commission to set apart towns for the priests merely to meet their existing wants, without any regard to the subsequent increase that would take place in their numbers" (Keil). It is also pointed out that these cities were never intended to be inhabited by priests and their families alone. Moreover, that at this very time it is by calculation very possible that Aaron may have had no less than 1000 male descendants.

44.—The Lord delivered all their enemies into their hand.—"We must note on the one hand the clear and constant faithfulness of God in keeping his promises, and on the other the effeminacy and sloth of the people, by which the blessings of God slipped, as it were, out of their hands. For whatever war the people engaged in, victory was ready for them, and there was nothing but their own wilful inactivity to impede or prevent the extermination of all their enemies. Hence, although they did not defeat them all, so as to open the way for complete possession, yet the truthfulness of God was apparent and prominent, because there would have been no difficulty in securing the rest if they had chosen to accept the victories which were offered them. Nothing but their own cowardice prevented their enjoying the blessings of God in all their fulness."—Calvin.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 12.—JOSHUA XXII.

1.—Then Joshua called the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasseh.—"As the summons of Joshua to the warriors of the trans-Jordanic tribes figures amongst the preparations for the conquest of Canaan (i. 12—18), so the dismissal of them when their task was done is appropriately inserted amongst the concluding records of the Book."—Sp. Com.

10.—An altar by Jordan, a great altar to see to.—It is by no means easy to decide the point (happily not one of much importance) on which side of Jordan this altar was built. The words of ver. 10, "the borders of Jordan, that are in the land of Canaan," and also those of ver. 11, especially as given in R.V. thus, "in the forefront of the land of Canaan, in the region about Jordan, on the side that pertaineth to the children of Israel," seem to favour the western side; but Josephus evidently took it as built on the eastern side. His words are, "When the tribe of Reuben, &c. . . were passed over the river, they built an altar on the banks of the Jordan as a sign of their relation to those that should inhabit on the other side" (Whiston's Josephus, Ant. v. i. 26); and he is followed by others of later date, down to Bishop Wordsworth. Whichever side it stood, it does not seem to have stood long, as we never hear of it again.

19.—Rebel not against the Lord . . . in building you an altar beside the altar of the Lord our God.—A more important question than that of the site of the altar is that of the sin of the altar, or what would have been the sin of those that built it, had they intended it as a sacrificial altar. In such case it would have been a direct act of rebellion against Jehovah—"a wicked violation of the commandment of God with regard to the unity of the sacrificial altar (Lev. xvii. 8, 9; Deut. xii. 4), which they ought to punish according to the law in Deut. xiii. 13."—Keil. The sin, however, under suspicion of which the two and a half tribes lay, did not consist in building an altar to another god, but in having any other altar for sacrifice than that one which Jehovah had appointed.

27.—That we might do the service of the Lord before Him.—That is, in his presence, at the tabernacle in Shiloh.

34.—Called the altar Ed.—The word "Ed," or "witness" is not in the original, and the title placed on the altar was probably "a witness between us that the Lord is God."

THURSDAY, MAY 13.—JOSHUA XXIII.

"This and the next chapter contain the last addresses of Joshua to the people, as the Book of Deuteronomy does the more lengthened parting exhortation of Moses. This chapter records Joshua's discourse to the elders and rulers; chap. xxiv., that to all the tribes gathered together at Shechem."—Sp. Com.

3.—The Lord your God is He that hath fought for you.—A timely reminder to Israel of the real source of all their past victories, that they might know wherein lay their true strength.

5.—And the Lord your God, He shall expel them from before you.—This was the part which the Lord was ready to perform. Their part is described in the next verse, "Be ye therefore very courageous to keep and to do all that is written in the book of the law of Moses; . . . that ye come not among these nations, these that remain among you; neither make mention of the name of their gods," &c. It was their failure in this their part of the matter that hindered the Lord from "expelling" these nations "from before them."

8.—As ye have done unto this day.—Their conduct up to this time, though by no means perfect, is graciously acknowledged as having been right in the main. A sad deterioration came over the nation on the death of Joshua (Judges ii. 7).

13.—The Lord your God will no more drive out.—The dependence of the Lord's action for them on their action for Him is here most clearly stated. Something like this appears in the Lord's dealings with his people under Gospel grace. "Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you" (James iv. 8).

16.—When ye have transgressed the covenant of the Lord.—This is more than a threat; it is, like the similar utterances of Moses (Deut. xxviii.), prophetic.

FRIDAY, MAY 14.—JOSHUA XXIV.

2.—They served other gods.—It is said (Speaker's Commentary) that this does not include Abraham, whom Jewish tradition asserts not to have been an idolater, though his fathers were. But as it cannot refer to Terah alone, being plural, and as there are three names mentioned, those of Terah, Nachor, and Abraham, it is most natural to apply it to all three. Jewish tradition is of no authority in a point of this kind, whilst its bias is obvious. "The question whether Abraham was an idolater before his call, which has been answered in different ways, cannot be determined with certainty. We may conjecture, however, that he was not deeply sunk in idolatry, though he had not remained entirely free from it in his father's house; and, therefore, that his call is not to be regarded as a reward for his righteousness before God, but as an act of free, unmerited grace."—Keil.

19.—And Joshua said unto the people, Ye cannot serve the Lord.—In order to place most vividly before the eyes of the people to what it was that they had bound themselves by this declaration (ver. 18), that they might not inconsiderately vow what they would not afterwards observe, Joshua adds, 'Ye cannot serve Jehovah:' that is, in the state of mind in which ye are at present; or by your own resolution only, without the assistance of Divine grace."—Ibid. To assure Israel of their own inability to serve Jehovah was the first step towards directing them to seek his grace, by which alone they could do it.

26.—Under an oak, that was by the sanctuary of the Lord.—"I.e., the spot where Abraham and Jacob had sacrificed and worshipped, and which might well be regarded by their posterity as a holy place or sanctuary."—Sp. Com.

SATURDAY, MAY 15.—JUDGES I.

If the subject of the Book of Joshua be the victories of Israel under the leadership of the Lord Himself; if his faithfulness to his people is rightly expressed in the words of Joshua (xxiii. 14), "Not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake concerning you; all are come to pass unto you, and not one thing hath failed thereof," in other words, no failure on the part of Israel's God; then may the subject of the Book of Judges, on the other hand, be called Israel's failure.

1.—Israel asked the Lord.—This is as it should be, especially after the death of so eminent a servant of the Lord as Joshua. Israel is thrown upon the Lord Himself, and at first all goes on well. The Lord answers Israel, "Judah shall go up: behold, I have delivered the land into his hand." And this He did, for "the Lord delivered the Canaanites, &c., into their hand." Then, in ver. 8, "the children of Judah had fought against Jerusalem, and had taken it." With Judah to the front all victorious, and Jerusalem taken, what more could be expected? But, alas! (19), they "could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, because they had chariots of iron," which is but another way of expressing, "because of their unbelief," for what were the chariots of iron against the Lord Himself? Again, although Judah had taken Jerusalem (ver. 21), "the children of Benjamin did not drive out the Jebusites that inhabited Jerusalem; but the Jebusites dwell with the inhabitants of Jerusalem unto this day." From this time forth it is but a succession of failures, as verses 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33 too truly record.

CONSUMPTION.—CASE in NEW ZEALAND.

The following letter was received by me at the end of last November, from Mr. W. H. Brandford, North Invercargill, Southland, New Zealand. He had been recommended to me by Mr. A. Fraser, of Edenvale, in the same township, who orders a large case of medicine at a time for his own use, and that of others:—

"Mr. Fraser lent me one of your books on Consumption. I had been suffering from that disease for nearly two years. It was brought on by cold and bronchitis. In April, 1885, I had hemorrhage for fourteen days, which brought me into an utterly prostrate condition, and the doctors pronounced me incurable. 'One lung almost gone, and the other badly affected.' But I was guided by the hand of Providence in a very mysterious way to give your medicine a trial. I have found wonderful improvement; the lung has ceased wasting; I have increased in weight; all symptoms of disease have disappeared."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge. Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

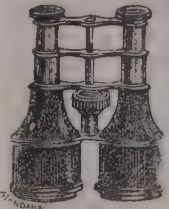
J. THEOBALD & CO.'S GREAT SALE.

MOST people relish a bargain. The rich as well as the poor are better pleased if they get extra good value for money. It is right that it should be so. No man, however much money he may have, ought to give 10 guineas for an article when he can get it for five. But it is not always that bargains can be picked up, and especially advertised bargains. More often than not a thing advertised as specially cheap is not so; an ordinary man as a rule cannot be always offering extraordinary bargains. We offer now most genuine bargains, and why? For many years we have sold Field Glasses at prices which have always been low and given satisfaction. This year, owing to our entering very largely into other branches of business, we find we have not time or room for our Optical Department, and have therefore determined to at once clear out all our Glasses. To effect an immediate clearance, we offer our stock at prices which would simply mean ruination if we wanted to live by them. We lose money by every one we sell, and once our stock is exhausted no more can be had. All persons, therefore, wishing to avail themselves of such bargains, as can only be had at rare intervals, and under similar circumstances, should send at once.

OUR RENOWNED KENSINGTON DOUBLE FIELD GLASS, giving view of 30 miles, made to close into very small compass, owing to the double drawers, and with lenses specially suitable for both long and short distances fitted with sunshades complete, 12 best lenses; each glass engraved with our name, and guaranteed, never sold under £3 3s.; will be sent, with strap and case complete, carriage free, 45s.



THE VICTORY DOUBLE DRAWER FIELD GLASS, similar make, but with six lenses, immense quantities of which have been sold by us at 50s. Clearance price, 42s., carriage free. Every glass engraved and guaranteed.

Over 2,000 of these Glasses were sold at full prices last summer. We have now only just over 300 left.

MR. GAWIN KIRKHAM.

THE subject of our present portrait and sketch has been for many years one of London's most active and most acceptable Christian workers. He is now in the prime of life, having been born in 1832, in the village of Gressingham, near Lancaster—the second of ten children. His somewhat singular Christian name may be found on King Arthur's Round Table in its Welsh form, and also in the writings of Sir Walter Scott. His father farmed 160 acres; but as the farm could not maintain so large a family, several of its members went out to service. Gawin was sent to make himself generally useful in the family of the incumbent of the parish, Rev. William Stratton, one of whose sons has since succeeded him, while the other is Rector of Ditton, near Maidstone. From the age of thirteen to twenty young Kirkham remained at the parsonage. He gratefully owns that it was under instruction for confirmation by Mr. Stratton that he was enabled to turn to God with earnest purpose of heart. This was at the age of sixteen, but he did not find peace in believing till four years later. Three years more were spent in service at Milnthorpe, in Westmoreland, where he had his first experience in visiting the sick and in teaching in the Sunday-school. It was here also, on September 6, 1855, that he first witnessed an open-air service—a form of evangelisation with which his life-work has been so closely identified.

In January, 1856, he came to London, and offered himself to the Church of England Scripture Readers' Society, and in the following April he was appointed as Reader in the parish of St. Paul's, Bermondsey. The incumbent was Rev. William Duncan Long, with whom he remained four years—three in St. Paul's, and one in the mother church of St. Mary, Bermondsey. Mr. Long was himself an open-air preacher, and each summer held out-door services in the principal parts of the parish. He also set a good example to all parochial clergymen by visiting every house in the parish.

In the spring of 1860 Mr. Kirkham was appointed Secretary of the Open-air Mission, in succession to Mr. John Wilde Taylor. This responsible post he has filled ever since, with the exception of an interval of four and a half years (1872—77), when he served Rev. William Pennefather as Secretary of the Mildmay Park Conference Hall. During these twenty-five years of active work he has visited Ireland, Scotland, and Wales to promote open-air preaching, besides visits to many parts of England. He has some pleasant memories to record of a thirteen days' mission in Jersey. In 1867 he paid a visit to Amsterdam, to attend a Conference of the Evangelical Alliance. This led to two other visits in subsequent years, and to stirring up an interest in open-air preaching. Altogether he spent ten weeks in Holland, preaching to the Dutch by interpretation. And the Lord blessed his word to the salvation of souls. The work was difficult to start. Mr. Kirkham was at first told by the public prosecutor that he would certainly be sent to prison if he attempted it. Afterwards, however, the burgomaster of the Hague was so impressed by the change wrought in a bad street there, that he declared that "One good street-preacher is worth ten policemen." Now, open-air preaching is allowed by law from one end of Holland to the other. Mr. Kirkham has also visited France, Germany, Sweden, Denmark, and Switzerland. Open-air preaching is hardly known in any of these countries as yet. God grant that the whole of Europe may soon be open to the free proclamation of the Gospel under the blue canopy of heaven!

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry)

In many respects the most interesting of Mr. Kirkham's foreign travels was a three months' visit to Canada and the United States in the autumn of 1883. Some interesting notes of that tour appeared in these columns after his return. Though encouraged by much that he saw, Mr. Kirkham was disappointed to find that American Christians were not so enterprising in open-air preaching as in many other things. In some cities it was prohibited, and in others it was necessary to procure a license from the mayor.

His visits to Holland led to the introduction into England by Mr. Kirkham of a curious allegorical picture, "The Broad and the Narrow Way." This is a kind of Continental Pilgrim's Progress, and is full of moral and religious teaching. An English edition*, with full explanation has been produced, and already more than 15,000 copies are in circulation.* From an enlarged copy of the same—nine feet by twelve—Mr. Kirkham has lectured 672 times in sixteen years, and through this novel medium has presented the Gospel to tens of thousands of people.

One of the present day topics in which Mr. Kirkham has taken a lively and active interest is the sanctification of the Sabbath. He says: "From the teaching of my beloved mother I imbibed a deep reverence for the Lord's Day, and took every suitable opportunity to advocate the cessation of the Sunday post and of Sunday travelling. In these things the committee of the Open-air Mission are also in happy unison, as no preacher is sent out where Sunday travelling is involved, and no letters are posted from the office involving Sunday delivery. The release of the 20,000 postmen of our land demands the best energies of all Christian people."

Among the minor moralities of life he holds strong views with respect to the use of strong drink and tobacco; he has been a life-abstainer from the latter, and for more than thirty years an abstainer from the former. His great life-work, however, has been open-air preaching, and chiefly in its interests he travels more than 10,000 miles a year. He is very anxious to see this apostolic mode of proclaiming the Gospel revived throughout the length and breadth of the land. The Open-air Mission has nearly 1000 members, all of whom are pledged to practise and promote open-air preaching when opportunity occurs. The country needs this mode of evangelising as much as ever, and the great encouragement from the Master's command and presence, and the ingathering of precious souls, should induce a larger number to "go out" and compel men to "come in."

Mr. Kirkham has a facile and forceful pen, as the following sketch of some Swiss experiences will show.

A CANDID PRAYER.

The following prayer was recently offered by Mr. Milburn, the blind chaplain of the House of Representatives at Washington, U.S. It was unanimously ordered to be printed in the record of the house.

"We beseech Thee, Almighty God, help the people of this country to learn that money gained otherwise than as Thou commandest, by the sweat of the face, as the fair and honest wage of honourable work of brain or hand, is gained by theft, no matter how we name the stealing; that money is never converted into wealth unless it ceases to be the pander of our lusts and lifts us above the level of the animal, lifting us to the graces of life, elevating our hearts to manly aspirations, making us kindly with our kind, patient to God's laws, and reverent to ourselves. Rid the land, we beseech Thee, of all gamesters, whether they gamble with dice or cards, or chips, or with wheat, or stocks, or corn, or cotton. Deliver us from the influence and power of robbers, who, enticing their victims to boards of trade, and stock exchanges, and bucket shops, name their practices of plunder 'shearing the lambs.' Enlighten our intelligence with thy truth, sweeten and deepen our humanity with thy love, quicken our piety with thy Spirit, and may Jesus Christ become more and more the Master and Ruler of our lives and characters and thoughts. We pray through his hallowed name. Amen."

LESSONS LEARNED IN SWITZERLAND.

By GAWIN KIRKHAM.

Last September, accompanied by two friends, I paid my first visit to Switzerland, the journey occupying three weeks.

PLEASANT SURPRISES.

This wonderland, this paradise for tourists, was full of pleasant surprises. One of my friends, who had been there six times before, greatly enjoyed our pleasure and wonder as the glories of the country unfolded themselves to our astonished gaze. Light green valleys, dark green woods, frowning rocks, graceful cataracts, and snow-capped peaks, came before us in endless succession. Such is the journey of life. Our heavenly Father provides infinite variety for his children, and delights in their enjoyment of his gifts. "Oh how great is thy goodness, which Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee" (Psa. xxxi. 19).

TRIALS AND DISAPPOINTMENTS.

But travellers soon learn that the reality is not according to expectation. It was a pleasant surprise to pass from the savage, rocky pass of the Devil's Bridge and tunnel of Urnerloch into the lovely green meadows of the Urseren valley; but it was a rude awakening to the suddenness of climatic changes to meet a snow-storm on the Furca Pass (8100 feet) before the middle of September, and to find ourselves on the same day nearly knee-deep in snow on the Grimsel Pass. To reach high places where we had expected magnificent views, and to "view the mist, and miss the view," was also disappointing. To find hidden intervening ravines when the object we sought seemed so near was also wearying. So it is in passing through life. The unexpected happens. "We have need of patience" (Heb. x. 36), "but let patience have her perfect work" (James i. 4).

THE NEED OF A GUIDE.

It was a rare thing to find travellers without a guide-book, and frequently they were also accompanied by a guide. We were fortunate in this respect, one of our friends being as good as a guide from his familiarity with the country. But on one occasion, when on our way from Chamounix to the valley of Sixt, we were overtaken by a snow-storm on the Col d'Anterne (7428 feet). Here we found ourselves enveloped in mist, soaked by the rain, and benumbed by the cold; the path almost obliterated by the snow, some miles from the nearest house, and the locality entirely unknown to any of us. How welcome at such a moment would a guide have been. So there are moments in life's journey when we feel entirely cast upon God. The way is hid, and we can but stand still and wait on Him who has said, "I will guide thee with mine eye" (Psa. xxxii. 8). Then, as in our case, the guide-book is consulted, a fervent prayer offered, the mist lifts, the path re-appears, and we journey on till the end is reached in safety.

"THE TREASURES OF THE SNOW."

When "the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind," and put to him a series of sublime questions, one of them was this, "Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow?" (Job xxxviii. 22). No one can traverse these Alpine regions without pondering this question. At first it seems a mere waste of territory to have so large a proportion covered with perpetual snow and ice, however much the beholder may wonder and admire. But he soon perceives the wisdom and benevolence of God in thus treasuring up a never-failing source of fertility for the intervening valleys. I do not think we saw a single stream in our travels that was not born of the glacier. Thus, in addition to protecting plants and keeping the earth warm, these "treasures of the snow" serve the purpose of perpetual springs. So "He sendeth the springs into the valleys, which run among the hills" (Psa. civ. 10), leading the reflecting tourist to exclaim, "O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all: the earth is full of thy riches" (Psa. civ. 24).

THE AFTER-GLOW.

One of the most solemn and delightful privileges of the traveller is to watch the after-glow upon the mountains when the sun has disappeared. This was accorded to us on several occasions, but was never more impressive than in the valley of Chamounix. To see the hoary head of Mont Blanc, and even the pointed aguiles of the locality, too steep to allow the snow to settle on them, all aglow with rosy tints, made us feel as though by some transformation scene we were inhabitants of another world, or as though heaven had come down to earth, and the tabernacle of God had been pitched among men.

HOW TO FIND A RAINBOW.

The guide-books name the time when rainbows may be seen on some of the many waterfalls which abound in Switzerland. One day, when at Lauterbrunnen, I went to the famous Staulbach Fall (980 feet), and sat down by the flagstaff, and waited and watched. Others did the same, and we all went away disappointed. Next day, one of my friends said he would show us how to find the rainbow. So I went again, and saw a most lovely one, and stood almost in the centre of it. Then I found that not only were sunshine and spray necessary to produce a rainbow, but also that those who would see it must stand between it and the sun, i.e., it could be seen only at a given point. Then I perceived that those who would see the glory of God could see it only in the face of Jesus Christ, and that the reason why so many fail in this respect is because they do not take the right standpoint.

THE PURSUIT OF PLEASURE.

While seeking for a rainbow in the Handeck Falls another lesson was learned. A beautiful butterfly was sporting in the sunshine; and either through carelessness, or the fascination of the pearly drops which shot from the fall in profusion, went too near, was caught in the falling shower, and hurled to destruction in the awful gulf 200 feet below. Who does not see in this an every-day occurrence? Young people, in the thoughtlessness which the pursuit of pleasure engenders, go to places in which they "see no harm," and, alas! are soon hurled into the gulf of disgrace here, and of everlasting despair hereafter.

THE WEEKLY REST DAY.

One form of this "pursuit of pleasure" is Sunday travelling. During the three Sundays we were in the country, we "rested the Sabbath Day, according to the commandment" (Luke xxiii. 56).

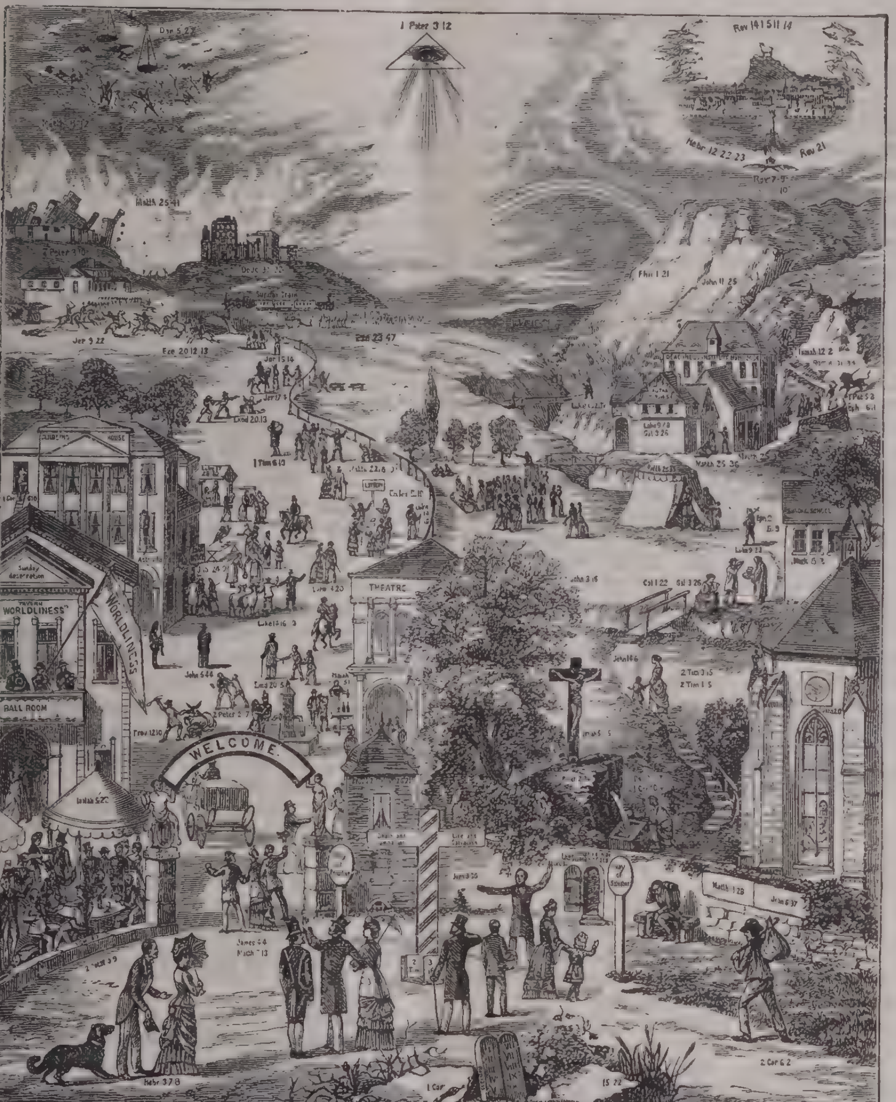
* The engraving on the opposite page is a reduced facsimile of the picture.

One of these was spent at the Wildstrubel hotel, on the wonderful pass of the Gemmi (7553 feet). Public worship was out of the question, nor could family worship be indulged, as our hostess and her servants spoke German only. So we sought a rocky knoll, overlooking the valley of the Dala, where we sang some hymns, read the account of the transfiguration, and the description of the New Jerusalem, and prayed. The surroundings aided devotion. The tinklings of the sheep-bells on the mountain side made sweet music. The fleecy clouds of purest white floating by reminded us of the transfiguration, when our Lord's raiment became "exceeding white as snow" (Mark ix. 3), while occasional glimpses of Monte Rosa, and other far-off mountain peaks, carried our thoughts to the everlasting hills, and the New Jerusalem.



THE BROAD AND THE NARROW WAYS.

We felt that earth receded, and heaven came nearer, and though we could not go "with the multitude to the house of God" (Psalm xlii. 4), yet, like the beloved disciple in Patmos, we were "in the Spirit on the Lord's Day" (Rev. i. 10).

Soon after, two English tourists, having ascended the Pass, came and stood by our side. They had heard our singing half an hour before they reached us, and one of them declared that when they started that morning they had forgotten it was Sunday! Such is the indifference of some of our countrymen on the Continent to the right use of this blessed day of rest.

I cannot omit another incident which makes this particular Sunday linger in my memory. Our hostess and her maid occasionally went to the edge of the rocks overlooking the valley of Dala, 3000 feet below, and the Gemmi Pass, to watch for travellers ascending the steep path. On these occasions they took with them a telescope to aid their natural vision. In imagination I pictured the angels thus standing on the battlements of heaven, looking out for pilgrims as they ascend from this lower world, and ready to welcome them to their eternal abode. And as our hostess and her maid stood again on the same spot early the following morning to wave a friendly farewell as we descended into the mists of the valley, I grieved at our inability to speak their tongue, and could only hope that the few tracts we had left might be made a blessing to their souls.

THE DOMINANCE OF ROMANISM.

How sad it is to see some of the fairest spots in Switzerland given over to the priests of Rome. One day when travelling between Vernayaz and Chamounix we saw the peasants in their Sunday clothes wending their way to church from valley and hillside. It was a lovely day for agricultural work, yet these men, women, and children forsook field, châlet, and school at the bidding of a corrupt church to celebrate St. Maurice's day. But they readily took some illuminated Scripture leaflets, of which I gave about 700 during the tour. Devotion is one thing, but the object of devotion should be placed first. God is a Spirit, and requires spiritual worship (John iv. 24).

THE ALPINE HORN.

Between Grindelwald and Lauterbrunnen we were attracted by the sound of the Alpine horn. This is a long wooden instrument, which when used in the vicinity of certain rocks produces a peculiar melodious echo; and travellers love to hear the sound dying away in the distance. The lesson deduced from this performance was the effect of the Gospel trumpet upon hard hearts, which when used by the Holy Spirit produces melody, from that which by nature is hard and stony.

THE MEETING OF THE WATERS.

Although the romance of our journey ceased when we left behind the flowery valleys and the snowy peaks, yet on arriving at Geneva, amid the pouring rain, we made our way to the point where the confluence of the Arve and the Rhone can be best seen. Till it enters the Lake of Geneva, the latter, like all streams of glacial origin, is a muddy river, but when it emerges from that lake at Geneva it is of a lovely blue colour, and clear as crystal. Rejoicing in its new-found liberty, it hurries onward, but is joined immediately below the town by the muddy Arve, a turbulent stream as strong as itself. Judging from appearances, I should say that before long the Arve would conquer the Rhone, but as far as the eye could follow it, the latter maintained its purity by the side of its unwelcome neighbour. Cheever delighted to dwell upon this as an illustration of the difference between Romanism and Protestantism, as those who have read his "Wanderings of a Pilgrim" so well remember. We saw in it also these two things: "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers" (2 Cor. vi. 14), and "Evil communications corrupt good manners" (1 Cor. xv. 33). Then we hastened home, refreshed and strengthened for the duties of life by the wonderful things we had seen and heard.

REST FOR YOUNG CITY WORKWOMEN.

The great need of providing rest and change of air for the many hundreds of overtired workwomen, toiling in our large and crowded London workrooms, has been so often described in your paper, that my only apology for soliciting further help, is the abundant need of country homes, to provide the rest that in many cases is so urgently required. If procured in time it often saves life, or restores health to those who would otherwise drag on a weary existence for years as confirmed invalids.

It was to meet this need, in some small measure, that my sisters and I opened our Cottage Home on the borders of Epping Forest, in the autumn of 1882. Since that time we have had over 400 inmates, and nearly ever week brings us happy grateful letters telling of restored health, and, best of all, in many cases, of spiritual blessing received during the quiet days spent at the Home. No charge whatever is made to the young women, so we are wholly indebted to the kindness and liberality of our friends for their maintenance. Our funds are now exhausted, we have many applicants, and, with the summer months before us, it would be most painful to refuse any for want of funds. Besides money help, I may mention the following ways of helping the work. Gifts of food, eggs, meat, grocery, &c., old furniture, carpets, sheets, &c., cast-off clothing. Communications of any kind, to be sent to (Miss) Kate Reynolds.

Epping New Road, Buckhurst-hill, Essex.

LOSS OF LIFE AT SEA.—The great loss of life by shipwrecks on the coasts of these islands, and the neglect to provide preventive measures, has long been a disgrace to us as a Christian nation, and has at last roused the women of England. Mrs. Wood, of Firs Cottage, East Sheen, Surrey, recently attended a very influential county meeting of the inhabitants of Sussex, held in Brighton Town Hall, and proposed a resolution: "That the Women of England form throughout the kingdom an auxiliary organisation to assist in the work of saving human life inaugurated by the National Refuge Harbours Society, and that such work of mercy is particularly becoming to the women of this country." Many noble ladies have expressed their willingness to associate themselves with the work, and no doubt many thousands of ladies will do likewise, and Mrs. Wood will be most happy to receive all communications addressed to her. She is herself the inventor of a particularly ingenious, safe, and uncrushable life boat, and has devoted a great part of her life for the benefit of sailors and fishermen. Mrs. Wood has called a public meeting on the subject at Exeter Hall on 17th inst.

A REAL RESCUE WORK.

Dear Sir,—I was much interested in a recent account given of the "Midnight Meeting Movement." I have long been of the opinion that the most successful mission to the fallen can only be carried out by thousands of Christian women, each taking one or more of these poor girls into their homes and "mothering" them. Perhaps my experience with three may induce some to make the experiment.

A year past last February, I took a girl straight from the street into our house. She had been drawn into a meeting in connection with some work of mine, and brought to feel her need of a Saviour. She accepted Jesus, and is one of the steadiest Christians I know. She worked in our house along with our three servants at housework and washing, and with myself at sewing, and slept in the house of a Christian woman about half a mile off, she being trusted to come and go alone. She has been for fourteen months with a Christian neighbour, who would on no account part with her. While with us she was gentle and obedient, and never hinted at her past life.

Until about three months since, I had no opportunity of helping others, when a girl, aged eighteen, was brought to me by a Salvationist, who knew that I wished to try and teach these girls art-needlework, as being more interesting and less trying to the eyes than plain sewing. Although this girl is left-handed, she sews beautifully, and is able to earn eight shillings a week. She learned very quickly, and is interested in the work. She lodges with a Salvationist about two miles off. She professes also to have found the Saviour, and has become a member of the Salvation Army. She is a sweet, gentle-looking girl; has been from her home four years, but not all the time living in sin.

Number three was said to be one of the worst girls in town, and was such a disgrace to her mother that she thought of going away on account of her behaviour. A lady friend, who had heard of my experiment, asked me to take her, and she has now been nearly seven weeks here. If anything, her work is better than that of the first. Her behaviour was not quite satisfactory at the beginning, but now there is no room for complaint. She also is gentle, obedient, and industrious. These girls do not occupy the same room, or come and go together. They have each their fixed hour of coming here and returning to their lodgings, and this has been found to work well. Number three gives the morning of April 16 as the date of her conversion.

I should be glad to get places for these girls, in the course of the next few months, so that I might help others, who wish to give up their lives of sin. In some things I may have advantages over others. Ours is a spacious house; our servants are Christians, and my mother gives a most willing consent. As to means, they are drawn from a not very large allowance for dress, but the joy of doing this work for the Master, which I am sure has his help and sympathy, far outweighs any pecuniary disadvantage. Some kind friends have given me orders for work, and I should be grateful for more. The work consists of toilet covers, splashers, antimaccassars, and bed covers. Both of these girls have some knowledge of housework, and can sew white-seam fairly well.

Every morning I have Bible-reading and prayer with the girls, which they seem to enjoy. I am quite aware that three months is no great test, in such cases as theirs. I have worked for many years amongst factory girls, but have not found them so easily managed as these three once fallen ones. My confidence in their case lies in the fact of their seemingly genuine conversion.

I am convinced that if we ladies could overcome our conventional shrinking from these poor ones, we should win them fast enough. I shall be glad to receive orders for work, or to give information regarding these girls, and exceedingly glad if this short account, which is not overstated, should induce anyone to "go and do likewise." For many reasons I only give my initials at present, but my address can be had from the Editor. A. M.

MEMORISING GOD'S WORD.

Mere reading of the Bible does not fix it sufficiently on the memory to enable one to meditate fully upon it. Those people of whom one reads in the New Testament who were in the habit of quoting Scripture did so from what they knew by heart. The Scriptures "were written for our learning." "From a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation."

I have tried many ways of reading the Bible, but my present method commends itself to me above all, and if I had only adopted it earlier, I should now have a more thorough grasp of the Bible, and consequently greater benefit from it. My plan is this: I read one book through—say Matthew—and make a note as I go along of the more striking passages, which I afterwards commit to memory. These passages help one to bear in mind other portions of the book not actually learnt by heart. In this way I have already committed to memory considerable portions of all the books of the New Testament, also of the following books of the Old Testament: Genesis, 2 Chronicles, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Jonah, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi. All of these portions I am in the habit of repeating to myself at least once in the week, having divided off a certain portion of the Old and New Testaments for each day of the week, except Sunday. I repeat the Old Testament portions in the morning, generally before going out, and the New Testament portions in the evening, either during my evening walk, or before going to bed; but there is no day during which, at some time or other, I do not repeat to myself from memory the portions for the day.

At the end you will find a table showing how I have divided off the books for each day's meditation. The book I am now reading is Exodus: I read the first twenty chapters last Sunday, and noted the following passages to be committed to memory:—

Exod. iii. 1—6.—The burning bush.
,, xiv. 13, 14, 19—22, 30, 31.—The passage.
,, xv. 1, 21, 26.—Moses' song.
,, xii. 16, and xvi. 22—80.—The Sabbath.
,, xviii. 7—12.—Jethro.
,, xix. 3—6.—Message to Israel.
,, xx. 1—17.—Ten commandments.

Yesterday, during my walks, I committed to memory the greater part of the verses on "the passage." As one cannot always carry a Bible about, I usually write out the verses to be learnt on a small piece of paper, and commit them to memory while out walking. To learn a few verses in this way every day, adding them to others, systematically repeated over so as to impress them indelibly upon the heart, is, in my opinion, the best way to make one's self conversant with the Bible. I have not yet come to Deuteronomy in learning passages by heart, but surely those grand addresses by Moses are worthy of being committed to memory, and not merely read over and forgotten.

LETTERS FROM ABROAD.—10.

MADRID.—II.

It was a great pleasure to us to visit the various schools under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Fenn and their English and Spanish helpers. The children were all bright and happy, and one day they entertained us by singing us some of their hymns and Christmas pieces, accompanying their voices with tambourines, castanets, triangle, and one or two other simple instruments: quite in a fashion characteristic of the sunny South. When they sang their hymns in which the precious truths of the Gospel were expressed, one could but feel how surpassingly important it is to fill the minds of the children with the testimony of Jesus, in order that the coming generation may be endowed with the spirit of prophecy, living out and telling out the liberty wherewith Christ hath made them free.

Several of their present teachers were educated in their schools, and some old scholars and teachers in other schools. There is also a gracious work of the Spirit going on in the hearts of not a few of the children at this time. The largest of the three Sunday-schools is attended by from one hundred to one hundred and twenty children.

Miss Furness, a valuable worker employed by the "Association for the Diffusion of the Gospel in Spain," but at the time of our visit living and co-operating with Mr. and Mrs. Fenn, told us that they had access to six hundred houses which might be visited if there were workers. And in answer to our question as to what became of the children as they grew up, she sorrowfully replied that to a large extent they were like those at home, lost for want of subsequent looking after, this being impossible for want of workers. Yet not altogether so, for the truth which they have learned, instead of the Romish impostures which would otherwise have been instilled into them, must influence their future life, and cannot fail, we will believe, under God's blessing, to issue, in many cases at least, in their becoming new creatures in Christ Jesus.

Excellent work is also done in the schools under the care of Rev. J. Jameson, Pastor Fliedner, and Señor Cabrera. In the first a few children of both sexes gave proof of the efficient character of their teaching by submitting to a smart vivâ-voce examination in history, geography, arithmetic, and other elementary subjects, with the use of the blackboard, maps, &c., in which they displayed considerable ability and speed. Mr. Jameson gave us much information as to places of historic interest, and introduced us to the Athenæum, of which he is an active member.

It is natural to love little children of any race or colour, and specially is it a necessity of the new nature to love them, knowing that the Holy Child Jesus lived and died and rose again for them. Like the heavens and the firmament you may have no speech nor language, your voice may not be heard, but as the earth gives back in fruits and flowers the sunshine and the rain which come from heaven, so do the boys and girls give back in smiles and words and deeds the love and care bestowed upon them. The little child understands your kiss, though there is no word spoken, and the big boys and girls and the elder people comprehend the love you have toward them, though it can only be expressed by the glance of the eyes or by the grip of the hand.

But the language may easily be acquired, and how many Christian men and women vegetate in England who might fill up their life with joyful service in loving the people, and teaching children, and winning souls? The Congo is nearer than China; North Africa is nearer than the Congo; Spain is nearer than North Africa. When God began to evangelise the world He sent his Apostles, "beginning at Jerusalem." Then Judæa, and Samaria, and the uttermost parts of the land were successively visited, and then the world was turned upside down. We are assured that God's plan is still the right one, and that the nations nearest home should be the first consideration. "These ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone."

The premises occupied by Mr. Fliedner's work are used to the best advantage. A spacious chapel stands at the end of the entrance passage, capable of holding three or four hundred persons. Upstairs are the schoolrooms and dormitories of the Orphanage, or boarding school, which, with the day-schools, contains 350 children, boys and girls occupying different parts of the house. Those in the junior classes pay one or more pesetas a month; a few of the seniors, preparing for the University, pay ten. From the first Mr. Fliedner determined to have no free admission to his schools, and accordingly commenced with the fee of one peseta. This did not apparently succeed at all, as may be inferred from the fact that at the end of three months there were but eight pupils! But the work with those eight pupils had not been in vain. It was evident that they were being well taught, and by degrees other parents began to send their children, until the school reached its present proportions. The prosperity of old pupils is also very encouraging to hear about, some being at the University, others occupying positions of influence in the Lord's work in different parts of Spain.

In another part of the same building is a cottage hospital, with eight beds, for the sick of the Protestant congregations. The greatest tyranny is exercised in the Romish hospitals over Protestant patients, the nurses sometimes refusing to supply clean sheets to any who have not "confessed." Thus any provision of this kind for the infirmities of the weak is a very great boon to the body, and generally productive of blessing to the soul.

Pastor Fliedner has also under his supervision the schools of the Irish Presbyterian Church, in which there are over 100 children, and the rooms are crowded. Many landlords object to having schools at all, and the objection to Protestant schools is tenfold greater. These schools were visited in August last, by Rev. Wm. Park, of Belfast, who says:—"The schoolhouse is in Calle Meson de Paredes, in the district of Peñuelas, in the midst of a large and growing population of the poorer class. Our male teacher is a Spaniard, trained in Switzerland, and is one of the best teachers in Spain. He has 50 boys on the roll, and an average of 40 in attendance. In the girls' school, there were 45 present; in the infant school eighteen. The teaching in all the three schools is, I believe, above the average, and the supervision is capital. Mr. Fliedner takes a great interest in them; and his head master, a trained German teacher, looks carefully after every detail. Each Saturday evening our teachers meet Mr. Fliedner's teachers at his own house, and go over the lesson for the Sabbath schools together. At these meetings one teaches the lesson, the others criticise him, and Mr. Fliedner concludes with a short address."

We have been pained to hear, and read about, the Spanish people spoken of in a depreciatory tone. We think that the habit of speaking thus of classes of people or of nations is as unreasonable and unphilosophic as it is unscriptural and unchristian. For any one class or nation would have developed substantially the same moral character as any other, if placed in the same circumstances. But with the Quemadero (the burning-place) before our eyes, with its historic memories perpetuated by their enemies themselves, it is bare justice to speak honourably of a nation which produced thousands of sons and daughters who submitted to be burnt alive for the sake of Christ.

But not only in the past has the Spaniard shown heroism which would do credit to any nation. While we were in Madrid the following touching story was told in one of the daily papers:—

AN HEROIC ACT OF CHARITY.

A young married lady, the wife of Dupuy de Lome, on returning home, saw at the door of her house a poor woman with a young child in her arms. The hunger depicted on the poor woman's features and the rags that covered her indicated extreme misery. She was giving the breast to the babe, but the child was crying bitterly on account of its fruitless efforts to obtain nourishment. The poor beggar was completely disconsolate, her eyes were dull from want, and she was well-nigh fainting, and with an almost inaudible voice she besought the lady to take pity on her and her child. The beautiful and tender lady remembered that she was a mother, and took in her arms the poor babe and told the mother to follow her into the house. She fed the poor woman, and then had the babe bathed and dressed in clothes belonging to her own child; but the child was dying for want of nourishment, and Dona Emilia de Dupuy took it in her arms and nursed it from her own breast. The child was saved, but without doubt the fever of misery and starvation was running through its veins. The same night the lady became seriously ill, and she was declared to have a gangrenous throat. Her medical attendants were powerless to arrest the disease, and in saving the child she lost her own life.

We were much interested to hear from Rev. Reeves Palmer, who represents the British and Foreign Bible Society in this city, that the way is being made increasingly open for the distribution of Bibles, Testaments, and portions in various parts of Spain. The colporteurs, practically, have one phase of missionary work in their own hands, for in districts where no Protestant community exists they are able to explain the Scriptures which they circulate; and in more than one instance it has been ascertained that the private reading of the Word by the purchaser and his friends has resulted in the formation of a Christian Church in their town or village. Surely eternity will reveal blessed results of such work, in the fulfilment of the promise that God's Word shall not return unto Him void.

We cannot pass from Christian work in Madrid without mentioning that of Mrs. Reeves Palmer on behalf of friendless young Englishwomen and foreign governesses. In April, 1884, a Home was opened to supply a need hitherto unprovided for. Numbers of English and other foreigners came to Spain as governesses or in similar capacity, attracted by the prospect of higher salaries than can be obtained at home, and often quite unacquainted with the disadvantages and perils of continental cities. The law of Spain affords little or no protection against injustice in the termination of engagements, and those who have come out in the hope of permanent advantage have no redress if dismissed at a moment's notice and thus suddenly become destitute and homeless.

A young lady had been left by her employers at a hotel in Madrid alone and without any resources, her letters being unanswered. She was received into a friend's house, and her interests were cared for until she returned to England. This led to the opening of a Home in Madrid, where any, in similar circumstances, might find temporary shelter, and which should be a refuge and rallying-point for all.

Warmest interest was shown by members of the diplomatic and consular bodies in Spain. Sir Robert Morier, British Minister at Madrid, was one of the earliest to promise his assistance. The Ministers of Germany and the United States are also amongst the supporters, and six of the Consuls resident in Spain have given their kindly aid. The house, 16, Paseo del Cisne, affording accommodation for five inmates at a time, is situated in an open healthy locality in the outskirts of Madrid, and has proved in every way suitable for its purpose.

Some anxiety was felt at first as to finding a suitable matron. The expenses of furnishing, &c., had rendered it difficult to offer a commensurate salary. But God provided for this in a way which could only be regarded as a token of his approval and blessing. Miss George, a lady with a long experience of the conditions of governess life, who had spent some years on the Continent, and spoke several languages, offered her services for Christ's sake, and, without remuneration until the Home could afford it.

During the first year twenty-six were admitted to the Home. Some have been cases of urgent necessity, the majority paying a weekly sum, larger or smaller, for their maintenance.

The affairs of the Home have now been transferred from the personal direction of Mrs. Palmer to that of a duly appointed committee. We very much hope that it will prosper as well under this arrangement, and prove as useful as has hitherto been the case.

ALGERIA.

Rev. J. Lowitz writes us that the Jewish population in all Algeria is 33,000; in and around the city of Algiers only, 7000, according to the last census. This is in correction of the sentence in No. 6 of these Letters, in which the larger number were said to be in and around Algiers. We are also reminded that Mrs. Monod is doing a good work, as Biblewoman, under the superintendence of Mrs. Lowitz.

CHRIST AND BUDDHA.

By PROF. MONIER-WILLIAMS.

From Address at the Bible Society's Meeting.

If it is our duty, as God's trustees in India, to bestow upon the natives the Bible translated into their own languages, it is also our duty to acquaint ourselves with their own sacred scriptures, that we may be in a position to contrast the false with the true, and to urge the acceptance of the true Sacred Book of the East. A great deal of importance has recently been attached to the sacred books of the East now being translated and published by the University of Oxford, where I am a Professor; and if you look in The Times of last Monday you will see nearly a whole column devoted to these sacred books of the East. I must say that it redounds very much to the credit of the University to which I belong that it should have undertaken to print and publish these sacred books, and so enable everyone to estimate them at their right value. For myself I may claim that in the discharge of my duties for forty years I have devoted as much time as any man living to the study of these books. And I venture to tell this meeting what I have found to be the one key-note—the one diapason, so to speak, of all these so-called sacred books, whether it be the Veda of the Brahmins, the Puranas of the Sawas and Vaishnavas, the Koran of the Mohamedans, the Zend Avesta of the Parsees, the Tripitaka of the Buddhists, the King of the Chinese or the Purana—the one diapason, the one refrain, that you will find through them all, is salvation by works. They all say that salvation must be purchased, must be bought with a price, and that the sole price, the sole purchase-money, must be our own works and deservings.

Here, then, we make our chief contrast. Our own Holy Bible, our own sacred book of the East, is, from beginning to end, a protest against this doctrine. Good works are indeed enjoined upon us in that sacred book of the East far more strongly than in any other sacred book of the East; but they are only the outcome of a grateful heart—they are only a thankoffering, the fruits of our faith. They are never the ransom-money of the true disciples of Christ. "Put off the pride of self-righteousness," says our Holy Bible; "it is a filthy garment, unfit to cover the nakedness of your soul at that awful moment when death brings you face to face with the holy God." "Put on the garment of self-righteousness," says every other sacred book of the East. "Cling closely to it. Hold it closely to your heart of hearts. Multiply your prayers, your pious acts, your pilgrimages, your ceremonies, your external rites on all hands, for nothing else but your own meritorious acts, accumulated like capital at a bank, can save you from eternal ruin." We can understand then the hold which these so-called sacred books of the East continue to exert on the natives of India, for the pride of self-righteousness is very dear to the human heart. It is like a tight-fitting inner garment, the first to be put on, the last to be put off. Nay, this may also account for the fact that in the present day these so-called sacred books of the East are gaining many admirers who fall into raptures over the moral precepts which here and there glitter in them, like a few stars sparkling through the rifts of a cloudy sky on a pitch-dark night.

What did the leading journal, The Times, say the other day in an article on the Buddhist antiquities in the British Museum? It spoke of the teaching of Buddha as second only to the teaching of Christ. Let us then take Buddhism which is so popularly described as next to Christianity. Let us for a moment with all reverence place Buddhism and Christianity in the crucible together. It is often said that Buddha's discourses abound in moral precepts, almost identical with those of Christ. Be it so, but in fairness let us take a portion of Buddha's first sermon which contains the cream of his doctrine. I should like to read it from the translation which has just come out at Oxford. The Buddha who is said to be second only to Christ made use of these words:—"Birth is suffering. Decay is suffering. Illness is suffering. Death is suffering. The presence of objects we hate is suffering. Separation from objects we love is suffering. Not to obtain what we desire is suffering. Clinging to existence is suffering. Complete cessation of craving for existence is cessation of suffering; and the eightfold path which leads to cessation of suffering is right belief, right aspiration, right speech, right conduct, right means of livelihood, right endeavour, right memory, right meditation. This is the noble truth about suffering." And now, with all reverence, I turn on the other hand to the first gracious words which proceeded from the mouth of the Founder of Christianity as given by St. Luke. "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the poor; He hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovery of sight to the blind; to set at liberty them that are bruised; to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." In contrasting these first utterances of two Eastern teachers, one of whom we Christians believe to be Divine, I ask what is there of hope for poor suffering humanity in the first utterance of Buddha? Is it not more like a death-knell than a voice proclaiming good tidings of great joy to poor suffering sinners?

I may hear some learned Orientalist—perhaps there are some present—ask—"How could Buddha speak of the Spirit of the Lord when he denied all spirits, human or Divine? He denied any Supreme Being higher than the perfect man, and assuredly you will admit that Buddha preached his gospel to the poor!" Well, bear with me for a little longer, while I point out a few other contrasts, showing how vast is the gulf which separates the gospel of Buddha from the Gospel of Jesus Christ. I feel that I am compelled to speak out on this occasion even as I spoke out recently at Oxford in contrasting the Veda of the Brahmins with our own Holy Bible, for a kind of doctrine called Neo-Buddhism is spreading, I am sorry to say, in many places both in Europe and America, and also in India, where we hoped that Buddhism had been long extinct. This new doctrine magnifies Buddhism as if forsooth! it were a rational sort of creed for an intelligent man to hold in the nineteenth century. Yes, monstrous as it may seem, the Gospel of our Saviour—the Gospel of peace—is in some quarters giving place to the Gospel of misery—the Gospel of Buddha—and the former seems to be becoming a little out of fashion here and there. The Buddhist Gospel of misery is, I fear, in some places, certainly in India, where we hoped it was extinct, coming into vogue.

But mark two or three more contrasts which I should like to place before you. In the Gospel of the Buddha we are told that the whole world lieth in suffering, as you have just heard. In the Gospel of Christ the whole world lieth in wickedness. "Glory in your sufferings; rejoice in them; make them steps towards heaven," says the Gospel of Christ. "Away with all suffering; stamp it out, for it is the plague of humanity," says the gospel of Buddha. "The whole world is enslaved by sin," says the Christian Gospel; "The whole world is enslaved by illusion," says the gospel of Buddha. "Sanctify your affections," says the one; "suppress them utterly," says the other. "Cherish your body, and present it as a living sacrifice to God," says the Christian Gospel; "get rid of your body as the greatest of all curses," says the Buddhist. "We are God's workmanship," says the Christian Gospel; "and God works in us and by us, and through us." "We are our own workmanship," says the gospel of Budda, "and no one works in us but ourselves."

Lastly, the Christian Gospel teaches us to prize the gift of personal life as the most sacred, the most precious, of all God's gifts. "Life is real, life is earnest," it seems to say, in the words of the great American poet; and it bids us thirst not for death, not for extinction, but for the living God; whereas the Buddhist doctrine stigmatises all thirst for life as an ignorant blunder, and sets forth, as the highest of all aims, utter extinction of personal existence. I have said enough to put you on your guard when you hear people speak too highly of the sacred books of the East other than our own Bible. Let us not shut our eyes to what is excellent and true and of good report in these sacred books; but let us teach Hindoos, Buddhists, Mohamedans, that there is only one sacred book of the East, that can be their mainstay, their support in that awful hour, when they pass all alone into the unseen world. There is only one Gospel that can give peace to the fainting soul then. It is the Book that this great Society is engaged in sending to the uttermost parts of the earth.

BIBLE STUDIES.—14.

NAMES GIVEN TO BELIEVERS, IN THE SONG OF SOLOMON.

I.—BY CHRIST.

(1) My fair one (ii. 10, 13). "Fairest among women" (i. 8). "Thou art all fair" (iv. 7). "Perfect through my comeliness . . . saith the Lord God" (Ezek. xvi. 14). "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us" (Ps. xc. 17). "The Lord taketh pleasure in his people: He will beautify the meek with salvation" (Ps. cxlix. 4).

(2) My love (i. 15). "He loved me, and gave Himself for me" (Gal. ii. 20). "As the Father hath loved Me, so have I loved you" (John xv. 9). "To know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge" (Eph. iii. 19).

(3) My dove (ii. 14, v. 2). "Simple concerning evil" (Rom. xvi. 19). "The fruit of the Spirit is . . . gentleness . . . meekness" (Gal. v. 22, 23).

(4) My undefiled (v. 2, vi. 9). "There is no spot in thee" (iv. 7). "Not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing . . . holy, and without blemish" (Eph. v. 27). "Let your garments be always white" (Eccles. ix. 8). "White in the blood of the Lamb" (Rev. vii. 14). "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John i. 7).

(5) My sister (iv. 9, 10, v. 1, 2). "Children of God by faith in Christ Jesus" (Gal. iii. 26). "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my . . . sister" (Matt. xii. 50).

(6) My spouse (bride, R.V.). "Thy Maker is thine Husband" (Isa. liv. 5). "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the Church, and gave Himself for it" (Eph. v. 25). "Believers were . . . added to the Lord" (Acts v. 14); (add = to give as a wife. Each believer forms part of the bride of Christ). "I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude . . . saying . . . The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready" (Rev. xix. 6, 7, xxi. 9).

II.—BY ONLOOKERS.

(1) Shulamite (daughter of peace). "Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God" (Matt. v. 9). "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace" (Isa. lii. 7).

(2) Prince's daughter. "The king's daughter is all glorious within" (Ps. xlv. 13). "I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty" (2 Cor. vi. 18). "He that overcometh shall inherit all things" (Rev. xxi. 7).

Streatham. Janet Clark.

MR. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM is following up the recent evangelistic work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Virginia. A Norfolk paper speaks in very warm terms of his services, especially referring to the value of the Bible readings.

BOYS' AND GIRLS' RELIGIOUS SOCIETY, CAPE-TOWN.—Commencing a year ago with twenty-three children, the number has increased to one hundred and twenty, who are regularly gathered on Sundays for religious teaching. This first report rejoices in the extension of the work to other parts of the town so that four distinct meetings are sustained, with a total attendance of upwards of seven hundred children. Many have given evidence of a changed heart. New branches, it is hoped, will shortly be opened in other neighbourhoods. The design of this Society is defined as being "The religious, educational, and social elevation of boys and girls," who are gathered from the streets. Mr. R. Campbell is the superintendent.

A MISSIONARY APPEAL.

By Rev. JOHN LOWE, EDINBURGH.*

To take advantage of the openings for the employment of this agency, which, in the providence of God, are everywhere presented, many more medical missionaries are required, and to the Christian youth of our country our appeal must therefore be made. . . .

Our appeal is not addressed to young men who have a high estimate of their own ability, and who make light of the difficulties and responsibilities of the work. Such men, however richly endowed with gifts and graces, make but poor representatives of the Master anywhere, but especially so in the mission field. One of the truest and most reliable evidences of a call from God to engage in this service is a humble sense of one's own insufficiency, which can only be met with the Divinely inspired conviction, "Our sufficiency is of God."

From every land is wafted the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us," while with that cry is heard the pitiful wail of languishing humanity. Men are needed to go forth to those neglected and suffering millions, with healing in the one hand and the Gospel in the other—men skilled as physicians and wise to win souls—men filled with love to Christ, and with the Spirit of the living God—men upon whom the spirit of the great Apostle rests, constraining them to esteem the work as a "grace given," not as a duty imposed—as a privilege enjoyed, not as a sacrifice made. Such young men the Church needs, and to such, God, in his providence, now appeals. "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? saith the Lord." Oh, that from our universities, our medical schools, our halls of learning; from the workshop, the counter, and the desk: many young men, impelled by the constraining influence of the love of Christ, may respond, "Here am I, Lord, send me."

To those who are about to enter the profession, and to young graduates on the outlook for a suitable sphere in which to commence practice, the Divine call comes, and we ask such to consider the claims of this department of service. We address ourselves to those who, by God's grace, reckon themselves "debtors to the Gospel," and, looking to the "fields white unto the harvest," all we would ask of such is to inquire conscientiously and prayerfully, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do? Am I fitted, and if fitted, am I willing, to devote my life to this service?" Let such questions be pondered calmly and prayerfully, and we may rest assured that, to such as are called of God to go forth into the field, the way will be made plain before them, and they will receive the special equipment needed for the special work assigned to them; while those who are unable to go will receive the comforting assurance that, if there be "the willing mind" it is accepted according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not.

It may touch a chord in the heart of some young Christian physician, for whom God has yet higher and nobler service in store than he has ever contemplated; and it may serve as an inspiration to others, and as an appeal to their loyalty and devotion to Christ, if we here relate the experience of Dr. Asahel Grant, to whose remarkable success as a medical missionary reference has been made in a previous chapter. In his "Appeal addressed to Pious Physicians," written soon after his arrival in Persia, Dr. Grant thus alludes to the time when he decided to leave all for Christ, and to go forth as a medical missionary: "A young physician, who had an extensive and increasing practice in one of our flourishing cities had thought much of engaging in the work, but as often as he considered the matter he dismissed it, under the plea that, much as labourers might be needed, yet there were so many obstacles in his way, that he, at all events, could not go. Others were better qualified, and had far less to detain them at home—they might go; but they did not—the call was urgent, and what was to be done? He prayed over the subject, and resolved on a more thorough examination of personal duty. He took up his former excuses one by one. He asked, Can I do more at home or abroad for the conversion of the world? In this view, where am I most needed? Here, I may relieve much suffering, and perhaps prolong some valuable lives; but should I go, others could do that just as well, and I should not be missed. Abroad, I may relieve a hundred-fold more of misery, perhaps save the lives of missionaries of inestimable value to the cause, and that, too, when no one else will do it. Here, I have many opportunities of working for Christ, but what are they in comparison with those abroad, where I may be the only spiritual guide to thousands who would never be reached by another. Here, if I prosper, I can give liberally, and labour for the heathen by proxy; but money alone will not do the work, and labourers, especially physicians, are not to be found. Here, as an officer in an influential church, and in connection with various benevolent societies, I may do much—and many think I ought not to change a certainty for an uncertainty; but do I not know, that those churches that do the most for the heathen, and send forth the most labourers, are the most blessed of God? Can I not, then, do most for Christ at home, by going in person to those who sit in darkness?

"But there are other ties, entwined with the tenderest feelings of nature; and how shall they be severed? How shall I leave my parents in their declining years? How say farewell to my sister and brothers? More than all, how can I leave two darling children alone in this selfish world? In these questions, so far as mere feeling is concerned, though the heart thrill with agony, it should not turn the Christian from duty. My parents are not dependent on me, my going may be the greatest blessing to my brothers and sister, and what can I do for my children that would not be done for them if I am gone? The great thing to be done for a child is to fit him for usefulness here, and for the enjoyment of God in heaven. For this, agencies can be provided, and superadded will be a parent's example, turning their attention to the great work he prays they may be qualified to pursue. If God calls me to leave them for his sake, He will take care of them. It may be the duty of others to go, but would I let my neighbour die of hunger, because his rich brother ought to feed him rather than I? No more can I let millions perish, because others do not give them the bread of life. I cannot, I dare not, go to judgment, till I have done the utmost God enables me to do, to diffuse his glory throughout the earth."

The foreign field needs men like Dr. Asahel Grant, who will calmly count the cost, and whose Christianity inspires them with the determination to honour Christ, by seeking to make the world better, men who solemnly consecrate themselves and all they have to God, and who dare not go from his altar, and stand convicted before their own consciences of having loved the world more than God and the souls of their perishing fellow-men—men who can say, as he said: "My heart almost faints within me, when I think of the magnitude of the work, and of my own unfitness for it; but then, when I remember that He gave Himself for me, and has promised to uphold me, then, at his call, and sustained by the blessed assurance, 'I am with you alway,' I stand ready to go, in the face of danger and of death, to any part of the world under the dominion of the prince of darkness; my only wish in regard to a location being to go where I am most needed."

In this service no great earthly rewards are promised, no alluring prospects of professional distinction, no tempting retiring allowances; but most inviting fields are offered for the exercise of the highest professional accomplishments, the prospect of a life of exceptional usefulness, and, when life's labour is ended, the "Well done, good and faithful servant." There is, besides, the honour and privilege of being called to be a "fellow-worker" with God, an ambassador for Christ, commissioned to be the means, the witness, and the historian of the highest and noblest developments of civilisation! With St. Paul, the medical missionary may well say, "I magnify mine office," for he, of all others, follows most closely in the footsteps of Him of whom it is recorded, "He went about among all the cities and villages, teaching and preaching in their synagogues, and healing all manner of sickness and disease among the people." . . .

What inviting spheres of influence and usefulness are waiting to be occupied by young talented medical men, competent to instruct others in their profession, and inspired with the true missionary spirit! There is scarcely any limit to the hopes that may be cherished, if, with the Divine blessing, advantage be taken of the openings in the foreign field for the exercise of the evangelistic and benevolent operations of the medical missionary. Surely a work so full of promise, and so practical, so suited to the requirements of the mission field, so apostolic, so Christ-like, claims the consecration of the noblest powers which our universities and medical schools can furnish! And to the young man who may read these pages, especially if he be a medical student or graduate, we would say, Think of this work, dwell upon its glorious issues, look at its claims in the light of what you owe to Christ, and if you hear the voice of God calling you to engage in it, manfully take up your cross, and go forth to it, and you will never cease to thank Christ Jesus our Lord for counting you worthy to take part in this ministry.

PENDLETON, MANCHESTER.—The annual meeting of the members and friends of the Workpeople's Hall, John-street, Pendleton, was lately held. There was a large attendance. Mr. John Sugden, hon. secretary of the Institution, stated that more than average progress had been made during the past twelve months; the leading feature with which operations were first commenced twenty-three years ago—the distribution and circulation of religious and temperance literature—still ranked foremost. The Women's Society had been specially active and useful; the attendance at the ragged school and evening classes had increased. The Gospel temperance branch established at the hall had done fairly well, and the other branches of work had prospered. Lord F. Hamilton said he believed that mission services were the only means by which they could reach a certain section of the population. People who would not attend a church or chapel were often attracted by the good music and hearty singing of a mission service, and were thus brought under an influence for good. 750 scholars and parents attended last Sunday night, and 610 men and women on Monday, to hear Mr. B. Armitage, M.P., Rev. J. B. Anderson, &c. Copies of the Report may be had from Mr. John Sugden, 46, Market-street, Manchester.

BOURNEMOUTH Y.W.C.A. AND Y.M.C.A.

We are delighted to hear from Miss Wingfield Digby that she has received £450 toward the £2000 needed to provide very suitable premises now available for the Y. W.C. A. at Bournemouth. Now that the Cairns Memorial House has supplied the Y.M.C A. with a splendid house built and paid for, we trust that the young women, who want it, to say the least, quite as much as the young men, will very soon be similarly accommodated. Miss Digby says: "We have now nearly three hundred young women between our three branches in Bournemouth: No. 1, for the young people in business; No. 2, for young ladies, and those who can only come to morning meetings; No. 3, a little branch just started in Springbourne for the young girls in their homes there. Our only class-room in the present Institute is often so crowded that the air becomes insufferable. The Y.W.C.A. work has been so blessed of God in Bournemouth, surely his people will provide space and walls to house those whom He has gathered—not names on paper, but living souls. How can we go on asking more to come with nowhere to put them. Very recenty, during the meetings held by Mr. Soltau, six in one shop were led to come, by one Christian friend, were blessed of the Lord by the message given, and converted to Him; and many more from other shops and private houses confessed to coming to the knowledge of their deep sinfulness, and yet to see and know their Saviour's saving grace. Now, all these sheep need shepherding, and how are we to do it, while there is no room to take them in? There were sixty present on Wednesday evening at our ordinary weekly Bible-class. I was too ill, from the bad air at the crowded meetings the two days before, to be able to go. But the Lord provided a teacher in the Y.W.C.A. referee for Lancashire, Miss Hulton, and I am told it was a glorious meeting."

In continuation of the meetings in celebration of the opening of the Shaftesbury Hall and Cairns Memorial House, an evangelistic service was held in the former building on Monday week, when an address was given by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. It is estimated that about 1000 persons were present. Mr. Pearse said that whilst the object of the meetings held in the previous week was to do honour to the memory of two noblemen who had now passed away, the purpose of their gathering that evening was rather to think of the object of those rooms; an object which he was sure would be dear to those whose names they regarded with such thankfulness and love,—to lead men nearer to Jesus. The words which had come to his mind as he thought of these departed heroes, linked with the thought of what they desired for themselves, were to be found in Acts i. 8: "Witnesses unto Me." Whatever else they were—and they were successful in much—that was their life-work, to be witnesses for Christ. He wanted them all to ask themselves what was their work. The best answer to all philosophical objections and all intellectual doubts as to Christianity was afforded by their living holy lives. There was one book—from 5ft. to 6ft of humanity, living a Christlike life—that was the only work on the Evidences of Christianity which was never called in question. It was not their books, or their sermons, or anything of that kind, kept Christianity alive, but the holy lives of Christian people. It was said sometimes that we had lost hold of the lowest classes of society, but he denied it; all that was wanted was to show these people what Christ's love was, and that we loved them too. This was what was wanted in the present day—Christlike lives. Without that they could do nothing, but with that they were sure of victory. Here was this poor England of ours; here was the curse of drink—the public-house open upon the Lord's Day, and every day of the week; here was the hideous curse of the social evil; and here was the curse of gambling. He would be a bold man who would say that in fifty years horse-racing and gambling would be unknown. Yet he should not be afraid to prophesy that, if only they could multiply the number of Christlike men and women. All that was wanted was that men and women should give themselves up to Christ, resolved to live holy lives. Besides this, there was nothing else worth living for.

A meeting in connection with the Bournemouth Gospel Temperance Union was held on Monday week, when a most encouraging address was given by Lady Hope. Her ladyship referred to the good work being done throughout the country, by means of coffee taverns, and she congratulated the Bournemouth friends on the number of coffee taverns which had been opened in the district since her last visit. A good work was being done on some of the railways, for the Directors had provided at some of the stations a bar where tea, coffee, &c., could be obtained at moderate charges, and this effort had met with the most gratifying success. In Switzerland, during a visit which she had recently paid there, she found that similar places to our coffee taverns have been started. The hall was well filled, and at the close of the address several pledges were taken.

MR. SPURGEON'S COLLEGE.

The twenty-second annual Conference of the Pastors' College Association was held last week. The proceedings commenced with a prayer-meeting at the Victoria Chapel, Wandsworth, when Rev. George Rogers, late Tutor, gave an address to the ministers present, enjoining them to hold fast to the faith once delivered to the saints. Rev. J. A. Spurgeon conducted the evening meeting, and spoke on "Fruitfulness in the Christian Life," instancing the work accomplished in that church by its pastor, Mr. Henderson, as an illustration of his theme. Subsequent addresses were delivered by various country pastors.

A hearty greeting was accorded to Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, of the Congregational Church, Clapham, who urged the preaching of a living Christ as the only means of uplifting a lost and degraded humanity.

The first session of the Conference proper was held on Tuesday morning at the College, when several hundreds of pastors and students assembled. Great disappointment was felt when a letter was read, announcing the inability, through weakness, of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, to appear among them. Fervent prayer was evoked on his behalf, which, the following day, was turned into grateful praise, when he appeared in their midst. The Vice-President (Rev. J. A. Spurgeon) discoursed upon "The Faithful Saying," setting forth the Gospel of Christ in relation to its essence, its message, and its illustration.

Rev. Charles Williams, Chairman of the Baptist Union, defined the qualifications essential to be possessed by those who would successfully preach this Gospel. They must frequently be in formal contact with the Saviour; they must receive their message from Him as He did from the Father. There must be no self-seeking in their ministry; their great aim must be the winning of souls, and, finally, they must make God real to themselves by daily communion. The usual soirée was held at Stockwell Orphanage in the evening.

It was an affecting sight to see the beloved President, looking ill and worn, leaning upon his staff, having his left arm in a sling, reminding one of a wounded warrior, as he slowly wended his way up to the platform of the College Hall, on Wednesday morning. Still suffering intensely from the malady which this time had come upon him suddenly, he could only attribute it to their earnest and loving prayers that he was able to get there at all. We regret our inability to give Mr. Spurgeon's address in extenso. Referring to modern thought, Mr. Spurgeon said that at first it roared like a lion, then became more like a fox, and at last was not more formidable than a respectable cat. As for himself, he had no fear for the future, for he could see the tide turning. The best way to help and bless our fellow-men is to be holy and gracious ourselves, and to have much faith, and grace, and love, and consecration.

Mr. A. H. Baynes, Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, followed with an address on "Missions to the Heathen," of which the claims of foreign missions were urged and enforced with a passionate enthusiasm which we have never heard excelled. To-day, he said, was the great missionary opportunity of the century. The fulness of times had surely come, and its growing facilities were simply marvellous. The Scriptures were translated in almost every tongue, doors were open in every clime, means in abundance existed if properly applied. In many of the most sacred of Hindoo shrines the missionary could now stand and preach the Gospel. Mr. Drake, missionary from China, formerly in the College, and Mr. R. Maplesden, from India, both bore witness to the wonderful change God had wrought among these people.

The usual meeting in the evening for subscribers and friends was presided over by Mr. G. Palmer, J.P., of Reading. He rejoiced in knowing that the Gospel in all its integrity was preached by the men who went forth from the Pastor's College. Mr. James Spurgeon read from the annual report, which told of 700 students who had gone from the Institution, of whom the greater part were now labouring in almost all parts of the world, twenty having settled during the past year. On the platform was Canon Fleming, who warmly expressed the respect and esteem he entertained for Mr. Spurgeon. Mr. Blake, M.P., said he had read every sermon of the pastor's from the beginning. Mr. Henry Varley delivered a powerful address, affirming that the vain appeal for more workers, coming from the perishing heathen, was a great discredit to Christian England. Several of the brethren were then called to the platform, and told what God had wrought through them. At the supper which followed the sum of two thousand guineas was subscribed.

On Thursday morning Mr. Spurgeon was again present, though in great pain, and said he could bear testimony that every season of trial and suffering had been to him an unspeakable blessing. Most profitable papers were read by Pastor J. Bradford, of Northampton, on "Handling the Truth;" by Pastor C. Joseph, of Birmingham, on "The influence of feeling upon faith;" and by Pastor G. Smith, on "The ministers's self-ministry." In the evening the spacious tabernacle was nearly filled for the College meeting. Mr. Spurgeon said he was thankful the College had never been better sustained than during the past year of depression, and called on the assembly to rise and sing, "All hail the power of Jesu's name." God's business would never go to wreck, even though all the world might. Several of the brethren gave brief accounts of their work.

The final meeting was on Friday morning Choice papers bearing on ministerial life, with its duties and responsibilities, were read by Pastors Stockley and H. Trotman. An earnest word was spoken by Rev. John Spurgeon. The Memorial Supper was observed. Mr. James Spurgeon addressed the brethren from the words, "He shall glorify Me." The poor, always with us, were remembered; after which the great company joined hands, and sung the parting hymn—

> "Pray that Jerusalem may have > Peace and prosperity."

Thus ended the Conference for this year; a more happy and profitable one has certainly never been held.

KINGSTOWN co. DUBLIN Y.M.C.A.

This comparatively new Association has entered into a house of its own, at 84, Upper George-street, where it will have full scope for a reading-room for the members and associates; and also be enabled to carry on evangelistic and other meetings for young men. The Society is founded on a strictly undenominational basis, aiming to bring within its influence all young men.

Young men wishing to join can obtain all information at the rooms of the Society, which will be open all day.

SOUTHEND, ESSEX.—The dedication of the "Holiday Home," 1, Oxford-terrace, in connection with the Y.W.C.A., took place on the 28th ult. It is intended for young women in business needing rest and fresh air. There was a large attendance at the meetingof friends in the afternoon. In the evening a tea was given to the members of the Y.W.C A. and their friends, and everyone had the privilege of going over the house. After tea all adjourned to the Y.W.C.A. Rooms where a very interesting meeting was held. Mrs. Campbell White, of Glasgow, spoke to the girls in a few telling words, giving some wise and loving counsel. Miss Routh and Miss K. Reynolds also addressed the meeting. Many stayed for a short season of prayer, and thus closed a most interesting day, one to be long remembered by the members and friends of the Y.W.C.A.

A CHILD MINISTER.

BY REV. M. GUY PEARSE.

Here is a story of a child minister that will show you how very much children can do for Jesus. Little Annie Gale had given her heart to Jesus, and now all day long she wanted to be doing his will and pleasing Him. But one morning her heart was very much grieved. A gentleman called at her father's house, and he laughed at the notion of little Annie being converted. "She was always so good that she did not need it to make her any better," he said. "If old Dan Hunter began to love Jesus now, I should think that there was something in it." Poor little Annie was very grieved, and, going away to her room, she knelt down.

Now there was no mistake about it that old Dan was the very crossest and most disagreeable man in the village. He worked away in his wheelwright yard, grumbling and growling all day long. No poor woman ever came into his yard to get shavings for her fire, and no boy ever crept in there for a basket of chips. Nobody who could help it ever came to see old Dan. This morning he was at work bending at his saw, when a very pleasant little voice said, "Good morning, Dan."

The voice was so pleasant that Dan looked around and forgot to scowl. "Please, Dan," said little Annie, "I want to speak to you, and I'm sure you won't mind, will you?"

Now it was so long since anybody had cared to speak to Dan at all that he couldn't understand what this little maiden could have to say, so he laid down his saw and rolled his apron around his waist, and sat down on the trunk of a tree. Really, for old Dan, he was looking quite pleased.

"Well, whatever do you want to say to me, little one?" He spoke gruffly—he always did, but it was a good deal for old Dan to speak at all, for he generally only grunted.

Little Annie sat down by his side, and, looking up into his rugged, wrinkled face, she said, "Well, Dan, you know Jesus does love me, and I do love Him. But the gentleman at home says that I am so little, and that I am so good, that he does not believe that I know anything about it. But he says that if you would begin to love Jesus, then he would believe in it. Now, Dan, you will, won't you? Because Jesus does love you, you know," and little Annie took hold of Dan's great rough hand. "He loves you very, very much, Dan. You know He died upon the Cross for all of us."

Poor old Dan! Nobody had ever talked to him like that for years and years—never since his mother had gone to heaven. And down those wrinkled cheeks the tears began to come, very big and very fast. "Don't cry, Dan; because God loves us, though we have sinned, and He sent Jesus into the world to save us." Dan's heart was broken. He could only say, "God be merciful to me, the worst of sinners." As little Annie talked with him, he came to see all—how that Jesus died for him, and was able to give him a clean heart and a right spirit. Little Annie left him praising God, his heavenly Father, for such wonderful love, and went away to tell the gentleman at her home.

"Now, sir," said she. "you must believe that Jesus loves me, because old Dan Hunter has really begun to love Him, and he has got converted."

"Nonsense," laughed the gentleman. "Why, Annie, whoever told you that?"

"Well, you'll see." And he did, and so did everybody else in the place. They saw that old nipped, frowning face turned into joy and gladness. They saw the ill-tempered old Dan become so kind that everybody had a friend in him; and when you passed the yard you might be sure to hear a happy old man, as he worked with hammer and saw, cheerily singing about the wondrous love of Jesus.

So little Annie ministered unto the Lord.

NOTES FROM JERUSALEM.

The influx of Jews from Roumania and Russia still continues. The reasons for this uninterrupted accession are always the same. When their life in the countries of their dispersion is made intolerable, either by the laws of the land specially designed against them, or by the popular prejudices from which they suffer, they think of Palestine as of a country in which they have a right to make homes for themselves.

The difficulties they have to contend with when arriving in Palestine are such as would deter the stoutest heart from settling there, and yet, with a full knowledge of these difficulties beforehand, they come. The Christian onlooker cannot help feeling that this singular immigration, so contrary to all the rules by which emigrants are everywhere guided, is part of God's present dealings with the Jews. The tide of Jewish emigration to Palestine during the last four years warrants the statement that the return of the Jews to their own land is happening before our eyes.

The tourists' season, this year, has brought an uncommonly large number of English-speaking people to Jerusalem. Very striking is the contrast between this and the former generations in reference to visiting Palestine. Not very long since a personal knowledge of Palestine was a rare accomplishment, but now every season brings an increasing number of English and American Christians to the Holy Land.

A very useful little pamphlet has been issued in Jerusalem, from which we may hope much spiritual good to result. Its title is "The site of Calvary," and its author is Dr. Merrill, American Consul in Jerusalem. He speaks with the authority of one who has a command of his whole subject in all its bearings, and he comes to the conclusion that the sepulchre which is called the Holy Sepulchre, and which is the object of reverence, in the eyes of the greater part of Christendom cannot possibly be the spot in which the body of Jesus was laid. What a rebuff this is to all who would pin their faith on ancient traditions. If any of your readers wish to read the argument they may obtain the pamphlet gratis by applying on a post card to Dr. Merrill in Jerusalem.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

Dear Sir,—The time is drawing near when we hope to resume tent-work in the villages. Our past experiences in this work have been most encouraging and most fruitful. Thousands are reached with the Gospel who never hear it unless thus taken to their doors. The long-continued storms of last year, and the late use of one of our tents have so completely unfitted it for further use that it is necessary to have a new one; the other tent requires some extensive repairs to render it fit for the summer's work.

We hope to visit many dark places of our land with the Scriptures, and personal visiting from house to house, as well as by the tent services. Small books, Bibles, Testaments, &c., besides money help for the work, we shall gladly receive, and thankfully acknowledge.—Yours faithfully in the Gospel,

George Brealey.

MISS L. SMITH AND MISS D. BAX have lately been evangelising in Hampshire and on the Isle of Wight with many encouraging results. With Gospel work these ladies are combining rescue work among their sinning sisters, and not a few have been restored to the paths of purity and peace.

THE GORDON MEMORIAL MISSION.

At a meeting held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, on Friday evening last, some information of a deeply interesting character concerning this Mission was made known.

In the absence, through the death of his child, of the Hon A. F. Kinnaird, who was to have presided, the chair was occupied by Mr. Robert Paton, who warmly urged that Christians should be more in sympathy with foreign mission work.

Rev. Burton Alexander, in giving a history of the inception of the Mission, went back to the time when the Government of the day offered to sell the land of that part of Africa, generally known as Zululand, for something like £1 a hundred acres. To one or two friends the thought occurred, What a grand opportunity for some Christian men to possess the land, and establish Christian Missions therein. He was deputed to wait upon James Gordon, brother of the present Earl of Aberdeen, and lay the matter before him. The matter was laid before Lady Aberdeen, who said she would be most happy for her son James to be a missionary, and to devote some of his wealth to that work; and himself and one or two others agreed to go out. When, however, the purchase was about to be made, the Government withdrew the offer—a terrible disappointment. James Gordon then went to Cambridge, and some time after, when on a visit to him, the subject came up again. Late into the night it was talked over, the question between them being, What were they doing for Christ? Three weeks after, the grandest young man he had ever known passed into eternity, and then Lady Aberdeen determined that what her son ought to have done should be carried out. Thus it came about that the Gordon Memorial Mission was established.

Rev. Dr. Dalzell then told how, some sixteen years ago, he was sent out commissioned to find a place in South Africa where no missionary had ever been before, on British soil, and as far North as possible. Within a month of landing at Natal, he found such a place, but Satan had it in complete possession, and kept them out of it for three years, though meanwhile they laboured amongst their own countrymen, many of whom had to thank God for Satan's opposition. For twelve years, however, they had been labouring amongst this people, which occupies a territory 2000 miles in length, with an average width of 600 miles. He described the character of the Zulus as upright, and honest, and honourable, except when corrupted by our own countrymen, when they were dishonest and dishonourable, and hardened tenfold against the Gospel of Christ. But they were a hard-hearted people, without pity, and absolutely regardless of pain. Many of the awful enormities of Chaka's reign, still looked back to as the golden age of their country, were given in illustration. He spoke also of the system of polygamy, and of the belief in witchcraft, as almost insuperable barriers to the acceptance of Christianity by the older natives. A Norwegian missionary, a true man of God, who had laboured amongst the people for thirty years, had told him that he had only baptized one Zulu, and had not one on his roll as a member. They, therefore, sought to get hold of the younger people, and of the children. The mission was established 15 miles south of Isandula, and there were now established a boys' and girls' school, the one containing 21 and the other 15 pupils. Dr. Dalzell described, in glowing language, the contrast between the miserable mud huts in which the great mass of the people lived, and the houses which were real homes, where lived those who had passed through these schools, and now were maintaining themselves and their families by honest industry, for this they were taught to do. Send out missionaries and Christianise the people, and then every missionary station will be a market for home productions. He concluded an earnest appeal on behalf of eighty millions of Zulus, who for two thousand years had been a paramount people, speaking the same language, in which, however, the idea of God was absolutely unknown, by asking their prayers and sympathy on behalf of this work.

Rev. Dr. Maxwell also spoke.

MOUNT HERMON GIRLS' ORPHAN HOMES (47, 49 & 55, Cambridge road, Kilburn, N.W.).—In connection with these Homes it is proposed to hold a sale of work in Brondesbury Hall, Iverston-road, West Hampstead, on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 18 and 19. There are at present 114 children in the Homes. This is a large family to be cared for daily. Help in goods or money is earnestly requested.

GLEANINGS from the MISSION FIELD.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

Rev. J. Meadows has translated, for the readers of China's Millions, the examination conducted by a native pastor, of some candidates for baptism in out-stations of Shao-king. No European missionary was present to suggest either question or answer, which in this report are written out in order just as they occured. The clear perception of truth, childlike faith, and strong love for Christ evinced by the converts are truly most encouraging!

WESLEYAN FOREIGN MISSIONS.

At the Manchester annual Missionary Meeting, held on Easter Monday, encouraging news was given from all parts of the mission field. Rev. E. S. Burnett, of Ceylon, spoke of the many doors being opened in that island. Only last year he had visited, by invitation, a village of about two hundred families. There he found a building which the native inhabitants had erected for a girls' school, and for which the chief man, as spokesman for the village, besought the missionary to send a Christian woman as teacher. A lady in the meeting was so interested in Mr. Burnett's account, that she offered to give £10 a year, for five years, to defray the cost of this school.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Inquiry as to the support extended by the "titled and wealthy" to the Church of England's Foreign Missions, has resulted in startling revelations. A statistical paper on the subject appears in The Intelligencer for May. Out of some 7000 titled persons, 362 only are annual subscribers to the Church Missionary Society, and the total amount of their subscriptions is, "£1065, out of—who shall say—how many millions or tens of millions of annual income?"

> One thousand pounds a year! What a trifle it is! It does not represent the servants' wages in an ordinary nobleman's household; not the keep of four or five horses; not the cost of the decorations or of the flowers at many an entertainment; not the value of many an ornament in his drawing-room, or of many a picture in his salon; not even the cash value of the gratification of what is often but a passing whim; and this sum the representative of the zeal of the nobility of England on behalf of the Church Missionary Society!

The collecting boxes, mostly kept by the poorer classes of missionary supporters, and, "as a rule," filled by the personal self-sacrifice of the holders, yield eighteen times as much; and the Sunday scholars (comprising the very poorest class of children) contribute "annually five times more to the Church Missionary Society than the richest nobility in the world!" Unfortunately there is no reason to believe that the total amount of the sums given anonymously, at offertories, or in other private ways, is at all proportionally larger. The writer adds the painful fact, that the names of our Princes and Princesses, who are forward to help "in almost every movement devoted to the national and imperial welfare," are absent from the Church Missionary Society's annual subscription list.

Rev. F. E. Wigram, hon. sec. of the Church Missionary Society, has received a letter signed by thirty graduates and under-graduates of Cambridge University ("pledged at present, more or less, to home work"), offering themselves for vacancies in the mission field, as such may occur during the next few years. Six of the signatories have bracketed their names together as those who are "definitely expecting to go out." This interesting prospective offer has been laid before the Church Missionary Society committee.

We are informed that amongst the exhibits of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition will be found a cleverly worked clay model of an Indian bazaar (sent from Krishnagar), in one corner of which the artist, presumably a native, has chosen to represent, as a characteristic feature, "a European missionary and his catechist preaching to an attentive throng of listeners."

In The Church Missionary Gleaner there appears a letter from the Bishop of Lahore, which relates recent cases of high-class Punjabi youths offering themselves for baptism in the face of persecution!

BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Missionary Herald tells of a new and most hopeful departure in Zenana Mission work at Delhi. The missionaries have devised a fresh plan of bringing gladness and variety to the sadly monotonous lives of the strictly-guarded high-caste women.

> We thought it would be good to bring them together, and invite a few English ladies to meet them. The first time only seventeen came, and then in fear and trembling, but finding that every provision was made for their comfort and seclusion from the eyes of men, the next time more than forty came together, and on the last occasion one hundred and one. It will be necessary next time to have a larger building for the gathering.

The social, not to say religious, advantages arising from these darbárs cannot fail to be perceived.

Rev. J. G. Potter, of Agra, states that one of the native preachers, when surrounded by thirty or forty weeping relatives, who all implored him to renounce the religion which now separated them, firmly replied, "United we can be, but only by your becoming Christians." The items under the heading, "The Lord Loveth a Cheerful Giver," are, in this month's Herald, of more than usually affecting interest.

ENGLISH PRESBYTERIAN MISSIONS.

The Messenger for May records progress. An instance is given of wonderful blessing resulting from the circulation of Christian literature. In 1881 three churches were founded on the East Coast of Formosa, which, owing to the excitement incident upon the hostle attitude of France, no missionary was able to visit for four years. During this time only native preachers occasionally inspected the newly organised communities. Last November Rev. W. Thow paid them a pastoral visit, and was cheered to find two of the churches prospering, whilst in the third many were earnestly praying for revival. At Chioh-pai the people had held well together, and built for for themselves a place of worship; in Tak-kai, where Mr. Thow was most joyfully received, he says: "On Lord's-day, December 6, I had the privilege of baptizing, in the name Christ, 22 persons—viz., twelve men and ten women."

The glad tidings of salvation have now reached the kingdom of Corea, whose close proximity to and alliance with the Chinese Empire, "the singularly attractive character of its people, and its long seclusion from all intercourse with the outer world, have drawn many eyes to it, and engaged many hearts in longing for its welfare." Missionaries are now at work in Corea.

WOMEN'S WORK.

India's Women, the monthly magazine of the Church of England Zenana Church Missionary Society, contains reports from the ladies at work in the Punjab. During the past year great opposition has been experienced in Amritsar from the followers of the Arya Somaj, who, finding the hold Christianity is gaining in the homes, through the influence of the women and girls, tried to bribe or threaten away the pupils from the female schools. For a time their work seemed successful; the schools were deserted, and the workers had their faith sorely tested. Now, however, the tide has turned. Miss Wanton reports the baptism, in November last, of Zebo, a girl who heard the truth in the Mohammedan Normal Class, and for a long time suffered ill-treatment at home, because of her faith in Christ. Since her baptism Zebo has been an inmate of the Converts' Home, and, as she possesses the gift of teaching, it is hoped will soon be qualified to take a school, and thus support herself.

The missions in South India are also being attended with success. Miss Coleman (Trieur) writes of two high-caste youths who were baptized on January 25:—"Both had to give up all title to their property on becoming Christians, but this they do not regret, saying they have found what is far better." One having great physical strength, power in utterance, and earnestness of spirit, is qualified to undertake evangelistic work, and goes into the homes of the upper classes preaching Christ fearlessly. The other is at present engaged in educational work.

JEWS IN SOUTH RUSSIA.

In a letter dated Kischineff, March 29, published in this month's Jewish Intelligence, Mr. Joseph Rabinovitch writes:—The work which God has entrusted to me here, in Russia, is progressing exceedingly, so that every Sunday our house of prayer, where the sons of the New Covenant regularly assemble, is filled with Israelitish men and women, who are thirsting for the Gospel; and we are quite sure that very soon, with the help of God, we shall receive from the Government permission to baptize those people in the house called Bethlehem, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

The mission ship Dayspring was announced to leave Sydney for the New Hebrides Islands on Thursday, April 1. Rev. J. G. Paton sails in the Dayspring.

Mr. Robert Arthington, of Leeds, offers the American Mission Board a fund of £5000, the income to be expended, on certain conditions, in prosecuting a mission on the east coast of Africa among the Masai and Kurafi tribes.

GOSSNER MISSIONS IN INDIA.

By Rev. ADOLPH SAPHIR, D.D.

I venture to direct the attention of English Christians to an anniversary of a deeply interesting character, which is to take place in Germany in June. It is the fiftieth anniversary of a work of faith and love, which was commenced by that eminent and well-known minister of Christ, Joannes Gossner, and which has been most wonderfully blessed in the conversion of many heathen, and the establishment of numerous native churches and schools.

The name of Gossner is a household word among German-speaking Christians all over the world. In his youth a friend of Martin Boos, and for many years a faithful, enthusiastic preacher of the Gospel of Grace in the Church of Rome, Gossner was blessed to thousands by his word, his writings, and his Christ-like character. Amidst great trials and persecutions he laboured in Germany, and in St. Petersburgh, and, after many trials and wanderings, found a home in Berlin as minister of the Bohemian Church. Among the various labours of faith and love which he undertook was the establishment of an institution for the training of godly young men, to go out as missionaries to the heathen. The work was begun in the same spirit of faith and prayer which characterised the labours of Francke in the last century.

This Mission, founded in 1836, has been blessed in a wonderful way. About 40,000 idolaters from among the Kolhs and Hindoos have been brought to the knowledge of Christ; churches have been organised, and are, to some extent, self-supporting; a large number of native ministers and catechists are associated with the German missionaries. The work is great, and, though constant difficulties and trials test faith and patience, there is much reason for thanksgiving and encouragement.

The Training Institution in Berlin, begun in a small and humble way during Gossner's lifetime, has now its own building, where young men are instructed and trained for the missionary calling, and of which the president is Rev. Professor Plath, whose fervent piety, theological erudition, and ministerial experience eminently qualify him for the post. Professor Plath has personally visited the stations, and his contributions to mission literature are most valuable, especially his treatise on "Evangelistik," a concise and comprehensive survey of the history and method of missions.

An appeal has been sent forth by the Venerable Dr. Büchsel, and by Professor Weiss, calling on German Christians to celebrate the jubilee of the Mission by prayer and thanksgiving, and by offerings of Christian liberality. The expenses of the Mission are, of course, increasing; the necessary journeys of invalided labourers, pensions for the aged and the widows, are occasionally a heavy burden, and at this present moment there is a deficit of £2000. Any of your Christian readers who may feel inclined to help in this great work are requested to send their donations to my address, 19, Lansdowne-terrace, Notting-hill, W.

Letters to the Editor.

THE CRISIS IN IRELAND.

Dear Sir,—The prospects for Ireland look very dark and threatening at the present time, if England gives us up to the government of those who have showed themselves so unfit for the trust. My object in writing is to make an earnest appeal to Christians everywhere to help us by their prayers. More innocent blood has been shed, and cruel oppressions committed, in the South, than is generally known even in the North. But even here, in the North, the tyranny of the boycotting system is beginning. The people of England and Scotland can hardly realise the state of this country.

We who know the Gospel of God's grace are not guiltless either; we have done something to spread it, but we should have done more. Let us confess our sins, and beg others to unite with us in beseeching God in his great mercy to save us from unreasonable and wicked men, from civil war, and other threatened evils. Pray for us, and for our Roman Catholic fellow country people, that they may hear the truth, and receive it, and be made free.

A Native of Ireland.

Sir,—Permit me to question the propriety of throwing the responsibility of the state of Ireland chiefly on the Romish creed. We have been, perhaps, equally to blame in attempting to suppress the Irish language, in refusing the Scriptures in their own tongue, in compelling them to support an alien Church, and in refusing to Romanists facilities for primary education, and also political privileges, until 1830. We took mainly the opposite course with the Welsh and the French Canadians, with good results. Dispassionate Romanists should now perceive that the suppression of Protestantism, in Spain for example, implied the suppression of civil liberty, and the decline of the nation as a colonising and civilising power. The comparative decadence of France may be traced to the same cause.

I would humbly submit that we should give Irish Romanists their full political rights. There were very great fears, for example, as to the consequences of granting self-governing power to our colonies, and of the withdrawal of troops therefrom, but the results have been highly satisfactory. Those who are desirous of further knowledge as to the views of Irish Romanists may read an able article by Sir Charles Duffy in the May number of The Contemporary Review.—Yours truly,

Cheltenham, May 3. Chas. Wilson.

Sir,—I have just returned from a visit to Belfast, Newry, and the districts adjacent. It may interest your readers to know what my impressions were of the views which were freely and strongly expressed in every place concerning the Home Rule measure which Mr. Gladstone has introduced into Parliament.

That the measure is directly opposed to the instincts of the politicians of Ulster is unmistakable. That this hostility is not confined to any particular class of politicians, but that it is shared by every part of the Protestant population, is also evident. The ground of this strong and determined opposition is found in the priceless love of liberty and freedom which has been so resolutely struggled for, and which they are prepared fearlessly to maintain. It was the experience of the past that gave birth, progress, and determined possession to the constitutional and loyal Protestant principles which hold sway in the Northern province. Here is a large and important minority whose traditions, loyalty, and commercial prosperity have marked it off as practically separate from other parts of Ireland. It is not too much to say that these social, commercial, and spiritual advantages belong to, and are the outcome of, the civil and religious liberty which have ever been the entail and glory of the Protestant Reformation; a Reformation which will, in my judgment, need to be fought over again ere many years have elapsed.

The Protestants of Ulster hold that Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule measure would mean the dominancy of the Roman Catholic hierarchy, and the practical handing over of the civil and religious liberty which exists to Roman Catholic intolerance. Rightly or wrongly, such is the conviction, and it will have to be dealt with. And who can wonder at this? Account for it as you may, it is a fact that in Ireland, Protestantism, intelligence, commercial progress, contentment, and loyalty have in the main gone hand in hand. It is equally true that where Romanism and priestcraft have been predominant, the opposite conditions have been and are to the front. The Protestants of the North of Ireland know this; and whilst account must be taken of the diversity of race which to some extent exists, they have strong grounds for maintaining that this legislation would ultimately involve a Papal yoke intolerable to be borne. The freedom and liberty which they enjoy has been purchased at far too high a price to be thus trifled with or jeopardised.

They cannot forget such words as the following, which only a few years since fell from the lips of Cardinal Manning, the principal representative of the Pope in England. Defending the doctrine of the Papal infallibility, that gentleman put the following language into the mouth of the Pope:—

"You tell me I ought to submit to the civil power, that I am the subject of the King of Italy, and from him I am to receive instructions as to the way I should exercise the civil right. I say I am liberated from all civil subjection, that my Lord made me the subject of no one on earth, king or otherwise; that in his right I am sovereign. I acknowledge no civil superior, I am the subject of no prince, and I claim to be more than this, I claim to be the supreme judge and director of the conscience of men; of the peasant that tills the field, and the prince that sits on the throne; of the household that lives in the shade of privacy, and the legislature that makes laws for kingdoms. I am the sole last supreme judge of what is right and wrong."

In the face of such amazing and arrogant ecclesiastical assumption it cannot be matter for surprise that the loyal Protestantism of Ulster determinedly opposes Home Rule. They are convinced that the Nationalists simply regard the measure as an instalment in view of total separation from the Empire. They have no confidence either in the Nationalist party or in the priest party, who just now are mainly "on the fence."

I was struck with the difficulties which beset the mere majority view of this great and important question. Such is the power of Mr. Parnell and his friends in those parts of Ireland where the Land League is in active force, that there is very little individual liberty. It is a choice between becoming a Nationalist or being boycotted. Freedom or personal liberty is practically out of the question. Of what value, therefore, as a test, is the vote of the coerced majority?

Another question, which stirs the Protestant population of Ulster to its centre, is "the irony of the fact" that in a country whose recognition of the Divine Being is so deep and strong, a gentleman should be selected for the Chief Secretaryship whose pronounced scepticism led him to write the Divine Name with a small g. They naturally ask, "How can Mr. John Morley either know or represent our need?"

Speaking at two large and representative meetings in Belfast, not in any sense identified with politics, allusions to the throne and the United Kingdom were incidentally made. Loud and prolonged applause greeted the slightest reference to the maintenance of the empire in its integrity. Certainly I have returned from the North of Ireland with a deep impression that Mr. Gladstone has not taken into account the desire of loyal, intelligent, and Protestant Ulster.

I am aware that it is becoming fashionable to decry any allusions to what is termed "the religious aspects of the Irish question." Speaking with one who regards himself not only as a Christian but as an advanced politician, reference was made to what was termed "the bigotry of Orangeism," and that "the Government wisely refuses to know either Romanism or Protestantism in this great act of justice to the Irish people." In my judgment, all this is very pretty political theory. Should it come as a final appeal in the history of England, of Ireland, or indeed of any European nation, the rooting of the religious instinct would probably be found more firmly embedded than all mere mundane measures put together.

The time may come when a more pronounced scepticism will relegate the Eternal Personality to an infinite distance from the sphere of man's weal or being. That time, happily, has not yet arrived. The healthful struggle which exists between truth and error, worship and superstition, right and wrong, good and evil, cannot be entirely shut out from human legislation. The attempt to eliminate the fundamental principles of the Word of God in such a way as that human legislation should affirm, "We take no part in this strife," is alike unphilosophic, contemptible, and unintelligent. The Irish question is not to be settled either by ignoring or counting as bigots the heroic men and women who have made the North of Ireland not only the home of civil and religious liberty, but a great centre of social, intellectual, and commercial enterprise which is second to none in the United Kingdom.

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE.

Dear Sir,—With reference to the letter in the last week's issue of The Christian respecting the coming Conference, might I ask whether any arrangement can be made to allow of the visit to this year's Conference of secretaries and workers in Christian work who have but very limited means? I happen to know that several Y.M.C.A. secretaries, for instance, would rejoice to be present, but the journey to town, with other incidental expenses, puts it entirely out of their power.

I, for one, have longed for years to attend the meetings, but have been obliged to satisfy myself with reading the reports of the various gatherings, whilst those to whom money is no barrier are enjoying sweet fellowship with fellow-Christians and workers. J. A. S.

CHILD MARRIAGE IN INDIA.

Sir,—I beg leave for a little space to draw the attention of all lovers of righteousness and purity to a case the importance of which can hardly be over-estimated. Your readers are doubtless aware of the ruinous system of child marriage which for ages has degraded the bodies and souls of the natives of India. It may also be known that, of late, the more enlightened, educated, and semi-Christianised section of the native community, has awaked to the realisation of the crying evil of that system, and, headed by such men as Mr. Malabari, efforts have been strenuously made, and appeals forwarded to Government, to assist in combating this hoary custom. So far, however, from receiving any assistance in shaking off the chains of this intolerable bondage, your readers will be grieved and astonished to learn that a legal decision has lately been given by our Chief Justices at Bombay which will go far to paralyse and thwart the efforts of those enlightened Hindus.

A claim for "conjugal rights" was brought against a virtuous young Parsee lady who, betrothed in infancy (without knowledge or consent on her part of course), was called upon to consummate her marriage with the very unworthy man to whom she had been promised. Being old enough to form some judgment she shrunk with repugnance from the man and refused to acquiesce. Application was made to Mr. Justice Pinkey for an order to compel the girl to marry the man whom she loathed. Mr. Justice Pinkey at once dismissed the application, remarking as follows:—"It seems to me that it would be a barbarous, a cruel, a revolting thing to do, to compel a young lady, under these circumstances, to go to a man she dislikes."

This case, however, was carried, on appeal, to the High Court, where the Chief Justices rebuked Mr. Justice Pinkey for his sentimentality, and ordered him to reverse his decision! It is hoped that this case will, ultimately, be brought before the Privy Council, when let all be alive to their solemn responsibility as witnesses for justice, purity, and honour, realising how the bodily, moral, mental, and even spiritual welfare of millions of India's sons and daughters will hang upon the decision of the Privy Council in this test case. Will any lightly dismiss this matter on the plea that they are not their Hindoo brother's keeper?

With reference to a previous communication in The Christian regarding "Azazel," it may be interesting to note the following rite observed by a certain tribe on the Neilgherry Hills. When a man is considered to be at the point of death, a goat is brought to the side of the dying man, who places his hand upon its head, and his sins are duly recounted. The goat is subsequently driven away into the woods.—Yours faithfully, J. M.

Naduvatum, India.

EAST LONDON NURSING SOCIETY.—A new district was added last year, making three now regularly and systematically visited. The number of cases was 3616, the details of several of which are briefly given in the new report. Valuable testimony to the efficiency of the nurses is borne by several ladies who are acquainted with them. Drawing-room meetings are asked for; also gifts of clothing, old linen, and suitable reading, which may be sent to the matron, 49, Philpot-street, Commercial-road, E. The object of the Society is the "nursing of the sick poor, in their own homes, by means of trained nurses."

LITTLE EMIGRANTS.—Our twenty-fifth band of rescued children from the Sheltering Homes sailed May 6, in the s.s. Parisian. They are all interesting little girls, and we have been trying to teach and train them, so that when placed into Christian homes in Canada they may become a blessing to others. They each carry a Bible from the Bishop, a copy of Songs and Solos, a Pilgrim's Progress from the Sheltering Home, and many useful little presents from friends. Good homes in Canada are awaiting them. We have a third party for this year getting ready, and will be very glad if friends will still remember the needs of these little ones. Louisa Birt.

Notes and Comments.

EXT WEEK we hope to give a portrait and etch of the lifework of the late Mr. Henry azely, Oxford evangelist.

We note in the Melbourne papers that our nerable and veteran missionary friend, ev. J. G. Paton, has been lodging a protest ith the Australian Premier against any nnexation of the New Hebrides group by e French Government. The Premier unertook, as far as he could, to further the iews of the English missionaries.

Appeals are coming in from workers in ondon among the poor for a share in our Day in the Country" Fund. As yet, howver, that fund is non-existent. May we emind our readers of the long and weary inter we have passed through, and express he hope that they will enable us to help ome thousands of the "drooping lilies" of ur city to breathe God's fresh air, and look n his glorious handiwork in nature for a few appy hours.

The Temperance Congress at Croydon ast week was not so well attended, we nderstand, as the conveners expected; but his may be accounted for by the plethora of eligious gathering now being held in the Metropolis. The various phases of this ocial question were dealt with by competent peakers and writers, free discussion following. We trust the meetings will give a ecided stimulus to the onward advance of emperance reform.

We would direct the special attention of ur London readers to the meeting at Mildmay Conference Hall, on Monday evening ext (see "Forthcoming Meetings"), for nited prayer with respect to Ireland, and matters relating to the present "Home Rule" movement. The problem is confessedly a very complicated and difficult one, and it becomes all who are assured of God's promised guidance in troublous times to unite in seeking that guidance at the present juncture in our national affairs.

Some time ago the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals interfered very successfully with the brutal tormentors of doves, and put a stop to the practice of preparing the birds for the shooting matches by plucking the tail feathers, or running a pin through a tender portion of the body. The ladies and gentlemen who love pigeon "tournaments," however, are not to be defrauded of their amusement. Truth asserts that, in order to make the birds fly erratically, and make a struggle to escape after being shot, they are allowed to drink only salt-water for twenty-four hours before the match. This drives them mad, and, of course, they fly wildly enough when let out of the trap. It is said that if they get a chance of drinking fresh water, they drink so much that death results.

"Hardening rocketters," as the brutal practice is termed, may be outside the law, but if it be, the sooner the law is amended, the better; if an act were passed under which the salt-water treatment could be applied to the "sportsmen" who are guilty of such abominable cruelty, perhaps few right-minded people would be sorry.

Recent accounts from Honolulu state that the visit of Mr. William Noble is being productive of great good to the cause of Gospel temperance in that community.

Miss von Finkelstein writes to us that she has spent a delightful Easter in her native city of Jerusalem. She has also visited Bethlehem, the region of the Jordan, the Dead Sea, and, at the date of writing, was proceeding northwards to Damascus. Friends in this country may hope to share in the pleasures of her sojourn among "those holy fields" when she returns in the autumn to resume her lectures.

The intolerance of self-styled "Freethinkers" has become proverbial, and in the exercise of what they term "Bible-smashing" the secularist lecturers frequently give evidence of a desire to permit nobody but themselves to think. On Good Friday the Freethinkers of one of the suburbs of Paris held a public banquet, with the twofold object of showing their disbelief in the Divinity of Christ and their contempt for the solemn fast observed by many of their neighbours. Père Hyacinthe boldly addressed them in a manly letter, in which he protested that if they were true libres penseurs they would not insult the convictions of those who held other views. Claiming to be a Freethinker, "but at the same time a firm believer," the independent exercise of free thought having brought him "to a firmness of belief impossible to be shaken," the Père said that he had been persecuted by the clericals as none of those who would attend the banquet had been. Yet he had not answered intolerance by intolerance. He had never done his persecutors the unmerited honour of confounding them with the "prolétaire" of Nazareth, "whom," he added, "I adore as the Son of God, and whose death, which I celebrate today, has been the redemption not only of souls, but of peoples."

In a recent sermon the eloquent preacher stated that "the French confound too much Christianity with Ultramontanism, which is only a counterfeit, and that is why they reject and hate it." These words are both truthful and courageous, for in France, as in Spain and Italy, the Romish Church is responsible for the wave of scepticism which is overwhelming so large a proportion of the people in its muddy waters.

It is proposed to set apart from the funds of the Episcopal Church in Ireland the large sum of £25,000 towards the endowment of the See of Clogher—a suppressed See. Very grave doubt has been expressed as to the wisdom of such a course at the present time, when there is so much anxiety with regard to the incomes of the Irish clergy, even assuming that there is any need for further Episcopal supervision. A sum of £29,800 will in any case be allotted to the See of Armagh. It is to be hoped that in dealing with sums of such magnitude, those who have the management of the large revenues of the Church may not be tempted to overlook the equally important question of the incomes of the working ministers.

M. Emile de Laveleye contributes a paper to The Contemporary Review on "The Economic Crisis and its Causes," the chief of which he finds in "the ever-growing scarcity of gold, and the monetary contraction thence resulting." "At the Paris Monetary Conference in 1878, Mr. Goschen said that 'every fresh demonetisation of silver would produce a more disastrous crisis than any of those recorded in history.' This prediction is being realised to the letter." We are all deeply affected by the present depression and distress, and every explanation of its causes demands our study; we therefore direct attention to this able paper. But behind all these immediate causes lies the one first cause; and it is because the nations are not right with God that He permits these second causes to work out their disastrous issues.

We recently expressed an opinion that in supporting illegal movements in Ireland the Church of Rome had committed herself to a very hazardous policy, likely to be disastrous to her own interests in that country. It is satisfactory to find that the view is shared by some of the leaders of thought in the sister island; an Irish contemporary has the following:—

> In spiritual things we owe allegiance to God only That is the very essence of Protestantism. Anyone can understand how liberty in its fullest sense must ultimately be evolved out of this principle. But anyone can see, on the other hand, that if men are to be held responsible for their opinions on all moral and religious subjects to an organised caste of their fellow-men, whose interest it is to hold them in a position of subserviency, the very inception of true liberty is impossible. Ireland need not think to start on a career of freedom with a chain round her neck, which she herself knows to be galling, and other nations have found to be intolerable.

The italics are ours, and perhaps are not necessary, for the passage is sufficiently remarkable. Unfortunately, most of the other nations which have in modern times started on a career of freedom have, as Père Hyacinthe said, mistaken Ultramontanism for Christianity, and perhaps Ireland will not be an exception; she too may have to grope her way from Rome through the darkness of scepticism into the clear light of truth and liberty.

An earnest worker in the East-end of London recently entered into the joy of his Lord. By no means widely known out of his parish as a preacher, with few theories or speculations to force upon the public, he simply went about doing good, in imitation of his Divine Master. If an epitaph be needed for the grave of such a man, surely the following tribute will suffice for that of Rev. H. G. Henderson, of Shoreditch:—

> He lived, and worked, and died among the poor. The consequence was that they went to his church, the outside of which rather resembles a warehouse than an ecclesiastical edifice. He lived in a room with a cooking stove, a store of books, a table, and a desk, at which he held daily levées of the poor. Here he continued till the pencil dropped from his hand, and he was carried to the adjoining room, where he died on a camp bedstead.

When we say that Mr. Henderson had been tutor in the families of the late Lord Herbert of Lea, and of Mr. Gladstone, it will be surmised that the sphere of labour in which he died was his own choice, and that he could have had ecclesiastical preferment had he chosen to leave his beloved poor. In these days of refined selfishness it is cheering to come upon so noble an example of self-sacrifice for Christ's sake. Such men are indeed the salt of the earth, without whose presence here and there society would become utterly corrupt and self-seeking. That the poor know how to reverence such practical Christianity when they see it is shown by the fact that they attended Mr. Henderson's funeral in crowds.

The Christian.

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.

Two hundred and three men and women have been baptized since 1883. They have come from forty villages, and there are more to follow. Pray for the unsaved multitude going to perdition.

Six oxen-carts full of Scripture have been disposed of during the above time.

Two training-schools train teachers, and in twelve village schools the young are instructed.

Daily twenty native brethren, two and two, go to the villages speaking for Jesus. They visit about forty villages per week. Pray for them and their hearers.

The Medical branch has relieved ten thousand sufferers, and saved much life.

Luke v. 6, 7: "They inclosed a great multitude of fishes: and their net brake. And they beckoned unto their partners, which were in the other ship, that they should come and help them."

Contributions are much needed, and will be gratefully received by Miss M. C. Gurney, Hon. Sec., 12, Camden Hill-road, Gipsy Hill London, S.E.; or by the Secretary, A. Haegert, Bethel, viâ Jamtara, E.I.R., Bengal.

DROOPING LILIES.

A Plea for our Country Holiday Home: Third Year, 1886.

We have happily succeeded in acquiring larger and most eligible premises for our third year's work. The large old-fashioned country house and grounds, of which we give a faithful sketch in centre, stands on the summit of Brigadier Hill, about two miles from Enfield. The grounds are about half an acre, and are little other than a rose garden surrounded by fields and woods. The cuckoo and nightingale are heard in the adjoining meadows.

Favoured with a remaining balance, we began our new season's work with the first break of fine weather in April, but have now to appeal to the friends of little children for help to continue our happy work. The premises accommodate about 24 children at a time.

The Special Feature of our work is that we take the children for a fortnight

absolutely free of any charge whatever. Poverty is therefore no barrier. Nor, indeed, is destitution. We often find both garments and shoes, that a little "drooping lily" may share this most beneficial change.

Such a course is perhaps more necessary than ever this year, from the severe depression of late, and very general distress among the working classes.

Our Six Mission Halls are placed in some of the most destitute parts of the East of London.

We continue to combine strict regard for the moral and spiritual profit of our young charges.

The sum of 5s. removes a child for a week, from the foul court to the smiling hills from penury to plenty.

20s. gives two children a whole fortnight.

£5, ten children a like advantage.

The freehold of the above premises might be purchased for about £1,000.

Your kind assistance would be thankfully received by the Editor, at 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; or by yours most respectfully,

WILLIAM CHORLEY,

2, Marquess Grove, Canonbury, N.

GEORGE YARD RAGGED SCHOOLS, &c., Whitechapel, E.

GEORGE HOLLAND thankfully acknowledges receiving from L. E. P., 20s.; A. W., a Hamper of Spring Flowers.

For Children's Day in the Country, S., 5s.; S. & G., 8s.

The Infant Day Nursery opens every morning at 7.30. Industrial Classes for Boys on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 12.30. Work among Elder Girls and Young Women on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays, at 8.30 p.m., Sundays 3, and Saturdays at 4 p.m. Poor Women's Sewing Classes, on Mondays and Wednesdays, at 3 p.m. Evangelistic Services every Sunday Evening at 7 o'clock. Room to room Visitation, Open-air Services, Bible Classes, Mothers' Meetings, &c.

Friends are invited to visit the Institution any day but Saturday.

Post-office Orders should be made payable at 66, High-street, Whitechapel, E. Letters and Parcels should be addressed to GEORGE HOLLAND, The Ragged Schools, George-yard, High-street, Whitechapel, London, E.

"This large and most useful book for five shillings. . . . We need not say a word to commend Cruden's priceless work. Young men can now for a crown purchase a new copy of the best Concordance; whereas not long ago we thought ourselves fortunate if we could pick up a second-hand copy at that rate."—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in The Sword and Trowel.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A COMPLETE AND AUTHENTIC ACCOUNT OF THE LIVES, SUFFERINGS, AND TRIUMPHANT DEATHS OF PRIMITIVE AND PROTESTANT MARTYRS IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

By John Foxe. With Twelve full-page Illustrations. Complete in one handsome volume, cloth boards, 1083 pages, 10s. 6d.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book; and we are specially pleased to observe that the aid of pictorial art has been invoked to attract to the volume the attention of the young. Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican ritualists to undo the blessed work that was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth who, in dark days of priestly domination, resisted unto death."—Christian Leader.

H. PERRY (The Blackfriars Mill Company, Valentine-place, S.E.)
J. R. WOOD (Great Northern House, King's Cross, W.C.)

BANKERS:—LONDON AND COUNTY BANK (SOUTHWARK BRANCH).

Dear Friends,

We are preparing to send out another party of 100 Boys this year. They will leave Liverpool (d.v.) on the 28th inst.

The expenses connected with this undertaking will amount to £1,000, of which we have about £400 in hand, leaving £600 still required to carry out our plans in their entirety.

We hope that not one of the expectant 100 Boys will be disappointed, but we cannot send more than our means will allow.

There are three very cogent reasons for appealing for your help in this matter:—

(1) These 100 Boys will be thus placed in far healthier surroundings, and with much better prospects in life, than we could possibly provide them with in this country.

(2) There will be 100 vacancies created by one stroke for 100 more Rescued Boys to be forthwith received and trained in our Homes.

(3) The despatch of each party tends to relieve the pressure from over-population, and the superabundance of labour which is so seriously burdening and disturbing the Old Country.

For £10 a precious young life can be removed far away from old evil associations and fierce temptations, and be placed in a thrifty, industrious Canadian homestead, never again to be a burden to anyone.

In behalf of the Council I will thankfully receive and acknowledge any donations sent towards the despatch of our young pioneers to the Far West.

Promises of help by the 24th June will enable the Council to see their way plain to go forward accordingly.

I am, Dear Friends,
Yours faithfully,
J. W. C. Fegan

James Nisbet & Co., 21, Berners-street, W.

New Work by the Author of "Counsels and Thoughts for the Spiritual Life of Believers." Just Published.

Spiritual Truth for the Spiritual Mind of Believers

CONCERNING

I. The riches of God's grace and love, through the Lord Jesus, in saving lost sinners.
II. The riches of God's grace and love, through the Holy Spirit, in giving spiritual life to dead sinners.
III. Personal assurance of salvation, and the spiritual consolation of believers in all their trials and afflictions.

By THOMAS MOOR.

Crown 8vo., Cloth, price 2s. 6d.

NOTICE.—A Cheaper Edition of "Counsels and Thoughts" has now been published. Crown 8vo., Cloth, 400 pages, price 2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

I. FULL SALVATION IN CHRIST.
II. THE SPIRITUAL CONFLICT.
III. THE LIFE OF FAITH AND FELLOWSHIP.
IV. JUSTIFICATION, SANCTIFICATION, &c.
V. BRIEFER THOUGHTS AND COUNSELS FOR DAILY HELP IN THE SPIRITUAL LIFE.

SOME OPINIONS OF THE PRESS ABOUT "COUNSELS AND THOUGHTS."

"The author's vessel does not hug the coast of ordinary experience, but launches out into the deep waters of confident trust, assured faith, and intense consecration. Every paragraph tells of an experimental fellowship with Jesus, and a closeness of intercourse, which fit it for becoming the guide and adviser of others. Certainly there is here no milk for babes, but strong meat for those who are of full age."
Rev. C. H. Spurgeon in the Sword and Trowel.

"There will be doubtless a considerable sphere of usefulness open to such a book. It is pious and thoughtful, and cannot, we think, be other than productive of benefit to its readers."—Literary Churchman.

"This is a choice volume by no ordinary scribe: a delightful combination of the good old puritan doctrine and advanced spiritual instruction. The index on the opening pages awakens an appetite which is fully supplied in the rich fare throughout the book; and it seems to us impossible that any believer can rise from its perusal without a deeper sense of his indebtedness to God for the riches of grace he is here so sweetly reminded of as being provided for all his necessities in relation to life, conflict, and final victory. This is truly a book for the times, and we give it our strongest commendation."—Footsteps of Truth.

RIFTED CLOUDS;

Or, THE LIFE STORY OF BELLA COOKE:

A Record of Lovingkindness and Tender Mercies. Written by Herself.

"This is indeed a wondrous record."—Word and Work.

"The autobiography of an Englishwoman, long resident in New York, and who has a wonderful story to tell of the Lord's faithfulness."—Christian Leader.

"With the sense of holy awe upon us, as of having been in the presence of a saint of God, and caught a glimpse of the power and the calm, and the holiness and the hush within the veil, we would bring before our readers the Life Story of Bella Cooke, which has just been given to the British-reading public. From beginning to end it is a 'record of lovingkindness and tender mercies'—a complete refutation of the too oft-accepted theory of the connection between sin and suffering, and a living, marvellous testimony to the truth—'He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might He increaseth strength.'"—The Christian.

At this time of national debate it may serve our readers to quote opinions on the Irish question. A minister of pronounced Liberalism who has been long resident in the South of Ireland, told a correspondent of The Nonconformist:—"Home Rule and Catholic supremacy are one and the same thing. The Roman Church has never given toleration, and before it does so it must turn its back upon its own past." Another in the South writes:—"Two little cousins of nine and ten were stopped by a gang of men who tore up their hymn and prayer-books, and told them with an oath that they were safe to go to hell, and when they had the power they would make this earth a hell to such as they."

Rev. William Arthur, whose name entitles his opinions to weight, and who is himself an Irishman, writes to The Daily Telegraph:—

> The officers of the National League declared that its branches numbered 1700, and that in almost every case a priest was either the president or secretary. Now, was there ever a colony in which every district was ruled by a junta, headed by a Roman Catholic priest?

The Methodist Recorder quotes the opinions of two eminent Wesleyan ministers, one of whom travelled this last month, in non-clerical attire, through the interior of Ireland. They are to this effect: "The lowest class of the Irish are more abjectly submissive to priestly influence than any other population in Europe." Speaking at Gorey last August, Mr. O'Brien, M.P., said: 'When the complete programme of the Land League is accomplished, landlordism would vanish from the country, and the soil of Ireland would be free, its people owning no master but the Almighty, and owning no flag but the green flag of an independent Irish nation."

This sorely agitating question is very much more than a political one; having to do with the future religious welfare of a generous people, and the upholding of the honour and truth of God, it demands a far wider judgment than that of the political partisan.

Last year, a student from a Nonconformist college was refused, on account of his negative theology, admission to a Devon Congregational Association. He has lately been installed over a congregation in Maidstone, and at the public service is reported as affirming, "There are among preachers two camps the one alive to the revelation and inspiration of the past, and wholly engrossed with that, the other fully occupied in spelling out the revelations which are manifesting themselves to-day."

The men who rank in the latter of these "camps" so explain away their vague and hazy language, that it is not easy to understand it. But the open assertion of the existence of this party, and the support given to it by influential ministers on the occasion in question, makes it more than the adolescent opinion of a young preacher. It means apparently that there are not merely elucidations of the deep meaning of Holy Scripture, but that there are "revelations," and disclosing manifestations of Divine realities to-day, which are of equal value with those of the New Testament; and that those who are "spelling out" these modern revelations belong to an opposite "camp" to those who are following the inspiration of the sacred writers.

This is a fearful assumption. Who are the men who by word or pen are superseding the sure and unchangeable Word of God? Where are writings from them which command the attention of the highest intelligence of mankind and disclose depths of unfathomable meaning? An Apostle supported his inspiration by appeals to what Christ had wrought through him for the obedience of the Gentiles by word and deed, in the power of signs and wonders, in the power of the Holy Ghost. Where are the credentials of these present-day apostles? In the Bible there is a profound unity. Among these modern illuminati there are pitiable differences, disagreements, contradictions, changes, and recantations. Let the age beware. This new conceit, let it be said plainly, means nothing less than to undermine our Christian religion.

The Fabian Society has made arrangements for a Conference at the South Place Institute, Finsbury, London, from June 9 to 11, in order to afford an opportunity for those interested in the labour question to discuss the present economic system, and the better utilisation of national wealth for the benefit of the community. These subjects are of pressing moment at the present time, and a calm discussion of them on righteous principles must be of great service. There is need, however, to lay stress on the words we have italicised, especially when so many proposals are afloat that would in their result be an abrogation of more than one of the Ten Commandments.

In the current number of The Contemporary Review, Mr. W. T. Stead has an article on "Government by Journalism," in which he says:—

> Government by kings went out of fashion in this country when Charles Stuart lost his head. Government by the House of the Lords perished with Grattan and old Sarum It is possible that Government by the House of Commons may equally become out of date. . . . The trend of events is in that direction. Government tends ever downward.

This is in perfect accord with the vision of the king to whom at the commencement of the times of the Gentiles, the Great King revealed the decline of governmental prerogative from absolute autocracy to rule by the will of the people, which in the eyes of the absolute monarch was a decline from gold to clay.

The Fourth Estate, the Press, as at once leading and obeying the will of the people, is, in Mr. Stead's view, the ultimate instrument of government. And the view he gives of the powers wielded by the journalist, and the responsibility to exercise those powers rightly, deserve and demand the deepest consideration. The information given and the thought suggested are invaluable to all who read, contribute to, or edit our periodical literature.

A correspondent sends us a prospectus of a Grand International Fancy Fair, "under the distinguished patronage of"—including the names of some foremost Christian men, who we cannot believe ever knowingly consented to be associated with this production. Here is one of the items under Stalls and Stall-holders: "Wales. Elders' stall.

"'Twas the language spoke in Eden—
Hence the Fall."

The line must be drawn somewhere; we should have thought it necessary to draw it inside of turning into a coarse and ghastly joke the calamity which "brought death into the world, and all our woe." On the previous page the locality of the church is described as "an oasis in a desert; all around it there be streets that are narrow, and homes that are humble, where dwell men and women, weary often, and needing the Word that bids them 'Look up' and win true cheer. Therefore have we builded us there a Christian Church; and, certes, it hath been blessed, and been a blessing." Do our brethren think that these often weary men and women, in their humble homes, in narrow streets, will not instinctively prefer the Mission Halls and the Theatre Services to the Church of the Fancy Fair—

The way thereto being by the spire:
To build so much we do aspire—

unless, indeed, the irreligiously disposed among them put us all down as a lot of cants and humbugs. We do appeal to all who desire to please God, and honour Christ, to consider whether it is not time for us to shake free of this method of raising money.

HAMPSTEAD Y.M.C.A.

A very interesting and well-attended meeting was held on Saturday afternoon, May 1, on the site of the new building in Willoughby-road, to witness the laying of memorial stones by Mr. George Williams and Mr. Hugh M. Matheson.

The latter gentleman, who presided, congratulated the Association on the near realisation of their long-cherished desire to have a building erected which would enable them to carry on the work more efficiently than their present ill-adapted rooms permitted. Of the £1800 which it would cost, a little over £1000 had already been raised by the committee and members and their immediate friends, and that they might therefore now appeal to the Christian community of Hampstead to aid in the completion of the building, that it might be opened free of debt.

After brief addresses by Rev. Gilbert Karney, Rev. Professor Elmslie, and Rev. G F. Head, the stones were laid. Mr. George Williams addressed the meeting, heartily wishing Godspeed to the undertaking, and expressing his own gratification at being present.

MR. HAMMOND IN SOUTH LONDON.

During the present week Mr. Hammond has been holding meetings daily at Anerley and Penge. At the first service at least a thousand were crowded into the Baptist Tabernacle, and yet many, we were told, were unable to find entrance. It was a time of blessing. The Word of God came with power to the heart. Many of all ages were deeply convicted of sin. During the week it has been found that numbers that first afternoon gave themselves to Christ.

At the close of one of the meetings a gentleman grasped Mr. Hammond warmly by the hand, saying, "I was greatly prejudiced against you, but I believe my three children have been converted in these meetings, and now I love the work in which you are engaged." Numbers have come long distances to enjoy these services.

On Thursday evening Mr. George Morgan gave some account of his recent visit to Africa, which greatly interested all present.

Another gentleman, whose children have been brought to the Lord in these meetings, as an expression of his gratitude to God, has given to many of the children present copies of Mr. Hammond's books. At one of the services Mr. McClatchie gave an account of Mr. Hammond's meetings in Dumfries, which he attended when a boy, in 1861. As he spoke of the conversion of his brother and sister at that time many were deeply affected.

THE SPEZIA ORPHANAGE.—Connected with the Evangelical Educational Institute, this Orphanage has just concluded the first year and half of its existence, and reports that the expenditure has been met, and a small balance left. The family of Mr. Greenham, the English Consul, has heartily entered into the project, and eleven orphans have been provided for. Signor Ernesto Filippini, Via da Passano, Spezia, Italy, fears that the distress caused by the pestilence will continue to prevent the extension of his work, which is greatly needed. Many pitiful appeals for admission, he says, "lie before me, to which I am totally unable at present to give heed."

Anniversaries.

Woolwich Y.M.C.A.

The annual May breakfast of this Association was held on the 2nd inst., when about 240 friends and members were present. Dr. McKilliam gave a most helpful address to Christians, based on 2 Sam. xxiii. 9, 10. He showed the need of the study of the Word of God, the Sword of the Spirit, to the end that it might literally become part of the servant's being, and that by means thereof the Lord might work a great victory. Rev. Mr. Jephson spoke chiefly to young men from Prov. viii. 17. From the experience of university life at Cambridge, he rebutted the idea that it was an unmanly thing to be a Christian, and urged those present to dedicate their youthful powers to the service of God. Major Russell, R.A. made a loving appeal to the unconverted. Mr. David Davies, a young member of the Association who has just been accepted by the Church Missionary Society, spoke on the necessity of diligence in service; and after a further appeal by one of the Secretaries to the unconverted to decide at once for Christ, a most happy and profitable meeting was brought to a close by prayer.

J. B.

Mrs. Meredith's Institutions.

On Thursday, May 7, the Princess Mary of Teck visited the Conference Hall, Clapham-road. Fifty of the children from Addlestone were present. Major-General Sir Robert Phayre, late Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, took the chair. Rev. C. Sharpe, vicar of Addlestone, opened the meeting with prayer, and Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbotson read the report for the Princess Mary Village Homes for 1885. Rev. John Campbell-Colquhoun read the report of the Prison Mission, and Sir Edmund du Cane, Chairman of the Prison Commissioners, gave some valuable statistics, proving the decrease of crime among women, which was mainly due, in his opinion, to institutions like Mrs. Meredith's,

Mr. R. N. Cust, who takes such an interest in the work, and can speak as a magistrate and from his knowledge of prisons, followed. It was encouraging to hear that many of the discharged prisoners have not only been brought under the sound but have felt the influence of the Gospel. Some have been in the Nine Elms Mission for years, and, by steady "continuance in well doing," prove the reality of their change of heart.

The Princess Mary handed in £50, which she had received for the Addlestone Branch. She has made many of the little ones glad at heart by a large gift of toys which she kindly brought with her for the children of the Home.

George-yard Ragged School.

Mr. George Holland held his thirty-second annual meeting at the George-yard Ragged Schools, Whitechapel, on Monday evening last week. He reported that the Lord continues manifestly to bless the labours of those associated with him, about 170 of whom are sowing precious seed among young and old. Perhaps one of the most interesting features in the work of the Institution is the classes for teaching the children a trade; some of the results were exhibited at the meeting in the form of boots, baskets, &c. In the Sunday-school are 800 scholars; the Thursday evening meeting for young people has been largely attended, and a gracious work of God is going on among them. Since the commencement of the work thirty years ago, between forty and fifty thousand persons have joined the Temperance Society. The Rest at Addiscombe is doing splendid service in restoring to health and vigour the worn and weary.

The Chairman, Hon. Lionel Ashley, said he always felt the better for a visit to George-yard, where he believed many had received fresh stimulus for Christian work. Sir Harry Verney paid a tribute to the memory of the late Earl of Shaftesbury. Mr. Meyers delivered an address on "The Secret of Success in Christian Work." Mr. Todd, Dr. Coke, and a neighbouring clergyman also addressed the meeting, urging self-sacrifice and personal consecration.

The extension of premises at George-yard is greatly needed; to secure this, arrangements are already being made. Mr. Holland says if the largest room were made four times as large, it would not contain all those who desire to be present at the gatherings. Friends are invited to visit the Institution any day but Saturday.

Brighton Y.M.C A.

A meeting, "not only magnificent in numbers, but magnificent in promise," as one speaker remarked, was held in the Brighton Town Hall on Monday week, to celebrate the fifteenth anniversary of the local Y.M.C.A., which has attained more than local fame under the spirited management of Mr. Ashby Wiffen, the secretary.

Mr. Marriage Wallis, one of the most active friends of Brighton young men, presided. In his opening speech he expatiated on the varied advantages to be derived from a connection with the Association, physically, mentally, and spiritually. Mr. C. E. Lewis, M.P., looking from the standpoint of middle age, envied the privileged youth of the present day. He promised his mite of £5 towards the extinction of the debt of £1540 in connection with the building fund. Rev. Dr. Hamilton commended the different branches of the work; all were needed so that the young men might be thoroughly equipped and have all their faculties brought into fullest exercise in the service of God and of each other. He pleaded for freedom to develop individuality within the broad lines of God's immutable laws. Mr. M. H. Hodder, while rejoicing in the provisions made for athletic and educational purposes, brought into relief the primary object of the Y.M.C A.—the spiritual enlightenment and growth of young men. The Chairman assured Mr. Hodder that this point was continually kept prominent. Among the other speakers was Rev. J. B. Figgis, who said their aim with the young men who came under their influence was "to get, under God, the right to plant their minds with the first crop, and they prayed God that the devil might never get the chance to plant a second."

An abstract of the report, read by Mr. W. J. Smith, one of the Vice-Presidents, showed a large and varied programme of work accomplished during the year. Special reference was made to the high appreciation expressed by many visitors of the benefits received from a stay at Sterne House.

East Central Y.M.C.A.

This branch of the Y.M.C.A. has found for itself a new and more convenient abiding-place in the Metal Exchange, Whittington-avenue, leading out of the west end of Leadenhall-street. The reading-room—a very cosy apartment on the ground floor—is in Whittington House; when it has been fully furnished it ought to be a great centre of attraction for the teeming crowds of business young men in that part of the city. Across the street is the spacious and beautiful hall of the New Metal Exchange. This fine room, and several smaller adjacent rooms, are available for the purposes of the Association after five o'clock. We believe, however, that Mr. Hughman, the active Secretary, and his friends, are not satisfied even with this enlarged accommodation. They are ambitious enough to hope that one day in the near future the branch may be able to boast of its own freehold. It is a very laudable and legitimate aspiration, and we hope a grateful public in the eastern part of the City will have the good sense and the good judgment to gratify it.

It was in the Metal Exchange Hall that the branch held its annual meeting on Thursday evening. It was not at all a show affair. The young men almost exclusively composed the audience, having evidently come thither straight from their office desks. Mr. J. H. Tritton, who is chairman of the branch, was also Chairman of the meeting, and filled the post well. His words to his young brethren were sensible, sympathetic, and practical. He dwelt chiefly on the remarkable development in our day of the idea of co-operation, in all departments of business and commercial life. His contention was that as Christians, and as members of the Y.M.C.A., they must utilise this idea for the furtherance of their special work.

In a brief address Rev. Evan Hopkins unfolded his favourite theme, growth in the spiritual life. He held up the high ideal of the Christian walk as revealed in God's Word; he spoke of the supernatural power needed in order to press forward to this ideal, and of appropriating faith as the means by which that power may be grasped and applied. Dr. Sinclair Paterson commended the Association for its aggressive and missionary spirit. If it would be truly great, he said, it must become the servant of all. At the same time he put in a strong plea for soundness in doctrine. We judge from the Doctor's remarks that an amalgam of Salvation Army fire and Presbyterian orthodoxy constitutes his beau ideal of what should characterise the Christian workers of to-day.

Mr. George Holland paid a high tribute to the zeal and devotion of the members of this branch, some of whom give him great assistance in his varied work in Whitechapel. He told us that he was extending his premises, and would soon be glad of further personal help.

Mr. Hughman had a good report to give of the past year's work. As Mr. Tritton observed in his address, the Association is, above all things, a missionary agency. Among the masses of Bermondsey, Lambeth, and Whitechapel, it gives out the spiritual force it generates at the Association. We wish for it a growingly prosperous career in its new abode.

Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association.

The attendance at the annual meeting of this Association, which took place last week, was not large, but from another point of view, it was highly significant. Exeter Hall was perhaps half full, but the noteworthy fact about the audience was that it was composed almost entirely of bonâ fide working men and their friends. The Earl of Harrowby, who has succeeded the late Lord Shaftesbury as President of the Association, took the chair. Every year, he said, made him feel more and more the great blessing of the Day of Rest. He was firmly convinced that if once the English people realised what the agitation for the Sunday opening of places of amusement really meant, they would crush that movement out of existence. A new argument has been recently brought forward. Lord Thurlow, in the House of Lords, contended that the opening of museums on Sundays would promote the cause of Temperance. The noble lord omitted to notice that it is proposed to open the museums and picture galleries just at the very time when the public-houses are closed, and to close them just as the public-houses re-open. He failed to see how the Temperance cause would be promoted by that. Besides, if this scheme were carried out it would be impossible to refuse permission to other places of amusement to open too. Lord Thurlow and his friends opened the Alexandra Palace for some weeks, and what was the result?—130 people were compelled to be at work within the building itself; and an earnest protest from the railway guards and other employés stated that the opening of this one place had added 100 men each week to the Sunday labour list. The mass of the working people must take the matter up as a question essentially touching them, and determine to retain this great inheritance which has done so much for the nation in the past.

The report, read by the Secretary, Mr. Charles Hill, was commendably brief and businesslike. At the Trades Union Congress held in September, 1885, in Southport, the members of which representated more than 600,000 Trades Unionists, a resolution against opening museums, &c., on Sundays was carried by 67 votes against 51. Out of 208 M.P.'s who voted against Sunday opening 102 are in the present Parliament, and 106 are absent. From 1872 to August, 1883, the petitions presented to Parliament were:—Against Sunday opening, 4669 petitions, with 685,028 signatures; for, 170 petitions, with 80,497 signatures.

Mr. Allen, M.P., said that it was his lot to represent a large working class Radical constituency. When he appeared before the 400 of that borough, at the time of the General Election, there was nothing in his speech which was more vigorously cheered than his statement that he intended to vote against any resolution having for its object the opening of places of amusement on Sundays. Mr. George Williams said that in the Bible were given to us the Ten Commandments, and he wanted to know where was the authority to expunge one of these. The Colonial Exhibition was giving us an illustration of England's greatness. Whence did that come? From the fact that our nation hitherto had honoured God and his day. Mr. Cossham, M.P., supported the resolution in a speech full of a manly Christian earnestness, and characterised by great power and force of logic. Mr. Battersby, Chairman of the Standing Orders Committee of the Trades Union Congress, moved, and Rev. J. F. Kitto, rector of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, seconded a resolution to the effect that the Sunday opening of Museums was opposed to the wishes of an overwhelming majority of the working-classes, and that the meeting earnestly appealed to the House of Commons to reject every such proposal. Further addresses followed from Mr. Jennings, a wire worker, and Rev. J. Finch, Wesleyan.

Church Army.

Last Friday the Church Army held its fourth annual Conference at Prince's Hall, Piccadilly. We rejoice to record the great success of the movement throughout the country, details of which were then submitted. Following very largely in the lines of the Salvation Army, they do not enter into any parish without an invitation from the Vicar, and the work is done under his supervision. But in the organisation there is no place for that preciseness which many are accustomed to connect with the Established Church. That unconventional heartiness which finds expression in "Hallelujahs," bright music, brass bands and big drums—and which has justified itself in the Salvation Army by attracting the very residuum to Gospel meetings—has ample scope in this vigorous organisation.

The day's proceedings began by a march upon Westminster Abbey, where they were received by the Sub-Dean and others of the clergy. As they marched in, "When I survey the wondrous cross" was sung in a style which woke up the echoes of the venerable building. Holy Communion was celebrated, and the presiding clergyman, in a short, sympathetic address, bad them Godspeed in their work.

The Conference was well attended, such subjects as Conviction of Sin, Preaching Christ, Dealing with Penitents, and Instruction of Converts receiving careful attention.

The three o'clock meeting was presided over by the Lord Bishop of Truro, and Rev. M. W. Christopher, of Oxford, was the chief speaker. The evening assembly was a great praise meeting, at which officers from all parts of the country reported upon the success of their work.

Friends who are desirous of further information should procure the most interesting annual report. We do not anticipate there can be any lack of support to a cause which is bringing about such good results.

National Temperance League.

There was a splendid muster of the friends of Temperance at the anniversary of this vigorous Society in Exeter-hall on Monday week. The Bishop of London, as President of the Society, took the chair. In its full and excellent report of the proceedings, The Temperance Record says:—"The leading feature of the meeting—which, like a silken thread, ran through all the speeches—was that of personal responsibility. In the most direct manner speaker after speaker pointed out that man's first duty in the Temperance reformation is that of personal abstinence; his second, that of personal service. In too many of the addresses that are delivered from Temperance platforms, the individual is represented as a weak, resistless mortal—a mere puppet in the hands of a wicked Government, and the victim, not of his own appetite, but of the machinations of a nefarious trade. The important fact is overlooked that the law is enacted and administered by a Government selected by the people. It is also apt to be forgotten that a power of decision is left with the individual himself, and though the removal of temptation from his path is an object that should by no means be lost sight of, yet its consummation is not likely to come speedily within the range of practical life. The pivot upon which the whole work of the League turns is that of personal responsibility, leading up to total abstinence; and it was this that was recognised in the addresses of the speakers, and the master key by which to get at their full purport. Nothing could have been more emphatic on this point than the address of the President himself, which, as was remarked later on, struck the keynote of the whole meeting."

On this point of personal effort the Bishop forcibly said he would rather that a man gave himself than that he gave £10,000 to the cause. He felt confident of the success in the Upper House of the Sunday Closing Bill for Durham, and they would not have much longer to wait before they got from Parliament all the legislation for which they were striving. In a humorous and lively speech, Dr. Marshall Lang, of Glasgow, vindicated the success of Sunday closing in Scotland. Mr. J. W. Probyn asserted that the cry about robbing the poor man of his beer was now losing any meaning it ever had, because the greatest earnestness in the cause of reform was being shown by the humbler classes themselves, who were beginning to see and feel the degradation brought on them by the evils of the drink. Rev. U. R. Thomas referred to the reflex influence of the drinking habits of parents in hindering the education of the young. No wonder children do not go to school when the father or the mother pawn their clothes for drink. Let us strain every nerve to redeem the little children of England, from their bitter share in the great curse of intemperance. Excellent and pointed speeches were also made by Mr. J. Leicester, M.P.; Rev. W. Bray, Surgeon-Major Pringle, Mr. S. A. Blackwood, and Mr. John Taylor. The concluding watchword of the right rev. chairman was, "We mean to go on."

Mr. Robert Rae's secretarial report was full of facts calculated to encourage one at the steady growth of temperance at home and abroad. Sympathetic reference was made to the death of Mr. J. B. Gough and many other staunch friends of the cause.

The annual sermons, preached by Rev. C. B. Symes at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and Canon Duckworth at Westminster Abbey, were worthy of the subject, and must have a wide influence for good.

London City Mission.

This Mission, to which London owes so much, had a very successful meeting on Thursday last, in Exeter Hall, when Mr. F. A. Bevan, as chairman and treasurer, presided. After singing and prayer, Mr. George Williams, in felicitous language, paid a tribute of affectionate memory to their late treasurer and chairman, Mr. Joseph Hoare, and welcomed his successor. His congratulations of the Society on the falling of Mr. Hoare's mantle on Mr. Bevan met with shouts of approval. The Chairman made an admirable speech in his new capacity. He alluded to the loss of Mr. Joseph Hoare, and spoke most feelingly of the late Earl of Shaftesbury, whom he aptly styled as "the London City Missionary par excellence." He proceeded to dwell upon the causes of thankfulness which surrounded them. This year sees the Society in a flourishing financial condition; it has seen its material strength increased in the Sea-side Home, the Disabled Missionaries' Fund augmented, and the Jubilee Fund subscribed. He attributed a large amount of the success of the two first to the exertions of Rev. P. B. Power. But, he continued, it is not money, but the men, who constitute the strength of the Society. At no time had the Society had better men, and there had been no need during the year to find fault with any missionary; the men who are offering themselves are of a very able stamp. There was never greater need for the work itself. In alluding to the increase of population and to the growing spirit of infidelity and socialism, he said these could only be met by the Gospel.

The report, an abridgment of which Rev. T. S. Hutchinson read, is of a most satisfactory character. The income shows an increase of £7562 over the ordinary income of last year, and £5817 over the expenditure. The number of missionaries remains the same as last year, 463, but five more are soon to be appointed. Striking individual instances of blessing received are reported.

In moving the adoption of the report, Rev. L. E. Shelford, of Stoke Newington, alluded to his having been stirred up when living at home in a country village thirty-five years ago by the account of the work of the Society. He dwelt upon the indirect benefit the Society had conferred by touching the consciences of Christian people and making them feel that it was not enough for them to enjoy their own Christian feelings, but that they must help to give them to others. He traced the extended use of mission-halls, both by the Church of England and Nonconformists, to the example set by the Society. He thought the great work of the London City Mission was to send missionaries to special classes of the community, such as tram-car men, public-houses, &c. He adduced an interesting instance of the Society's work from his own experience in Upper Clapton. That parish, on the borders of the Lea, had become a resort for crowds of people on Sunday morning, and the banks of the Lea were in consequence turned into a fair. He made an appeal for help to the London City Mission. A band of missionaries came from all parts of the East-end and conducted services, through which by degrees the whole place was changed; the amusements went, the publican's business was not so brisk, and there was a glad response on the part of the people to what was said.

Rev. Jackson Wray read a most brilliant paper, comprising a remarkable survey of London—its growth, its varying streams of life, its influential literature, its sin, its pauperism, its waifs and strays, its gilded crime, its aristocratic abominations. Such was the dark side he sketched. He then surveyed its bright aspect—its regiments of knights of the red cross, its sisters of mercy, who wear no peculiar garment, and its London City Mission. He greatly delighted the audience by his allusions to the Jubilee volume. "I said when I was looking it over one day—Well, well, the Acts of the Apostles is no finished volume, it is a story to be continued." "London saved means the swift dawning of the millennial morning; if you want a motto to stir you up, here it is: 'London for Jesus Christ.'"

Hon. T. Pelham pointed out that in his resolution there were four things which called for extended operations—the increasing population, the infidelity, the intemperance, and the immorality of London. The Society had a claim on the whole country, for not only do the enterprising but often also do the dregs of the country gravitate towards London. From his experience of the way the young men value the youths' institutes provided for them in different parts of London, he had good hopes of its future. The religion of Jesus Christ can not only cure, but do what nothing else, such as education, can—it can make men become strongest upon the point on which they are weakest. The missionary, he said, must be a good all-round man—a good speaker, and, a good listener too, for he has to listen and sympathise with all sorts of troubles, real and imaginary.

Mr. Dunn, late Missionary to Public-houses in Shoreditch, after a touching reference to the loss sustained in the Earl of Shaftesbury, drew a dark picture of the growth and power of infidelity, and urged that the effectual way to counteract all this was to send more City missionaries. He gave several incidents, some drawing tears from many eyes, showing the blessing God is giving to the work of the Mission.

Church Missionary Society.

We take the following interesting summarised report of this Society's annual meeting, on Tuesday week, from The Record:—

Tuesday's proceedings in Exeter Hall began with the feeding of the outer man at the customary clerical breakfast, and of the inner man in a stirring address from Rev. A. Baring Gould. At eleven o'clock precisely, Mr. Wigram, amid hearty applause, announced that Captain the Hon. F. Maude, R.N., would take the chair as President of the Society. After the reading of Isaiah v. and the offering of prayer, it was seen that the exigencies of the meeting demanded a deviation from the accustomed order of proceedings, and a resolution of tribute to the memory of the late president, the Earl of Chichester, and of welcome to the new president, was proposed and seconded and carried before the chairman's address was delivered. All felt it was no ordinary occasion—nearly two generations have passed since a president of the C.M.S. took the chair for the first time. At length the President rose to speak, amid unusual cheering, and it was not surprising that he should express himself as overwhelmed with the occasion. His words were but few. His allusion to the steadfastness of the Society to its old principles drew forth hearty applause, and so did the mention of the names of Secretaries of the Society whom he had known—Bickersteth, Jowett, Venn, Wright, and Wigram.

The remarkable Report, in which as with a master hand the writer, who by a fiction is supposed to be unknown, had drawn out in broad outline the leading features of the year, was listened to with deep attention during the thirty-two minutes which it took Mr. Wigram to read it, and many of its chief points drew forth hearty applause.

Tremendous cheering greeted the rising of the Bishop of Liverpool. There was the well-known ring of the old metal when he spoke of the Protestant and evangelical principles of the Society, and said that as long as the Society was faithful to them she would be well supported, and the meeting evidently fully endorsed his opinion that the Evangelical body is not passing away, as some would think. Right manly and stirring, and good to hear, were the words in which, turning to the platform, the grey-haired Father in God appealed to the clergy, and especially to the younger portion, to be bold for the truth and for evangelical principles.

Bishop Moule, of mid-China, who came next, received a most hearty welcome. He showed how God is working in some parts by means of the native converts themselves. He next spoke of an Edification Society which he had formed for deepening the spiritual life of the missionaries and native Christians in Hangchow, and lastly, of the increased zeal and earnestness of Mr. Hoare's students at Ningpo. These, as he truly pointed out, though not very great in themselves, were evidences of God's presence among them. He closed with a powerful appeal to more fervent and earnest prayer.

In a meeting where all the speeches were of a high order, it is scarcely fair to single out any one, but none raised the meeting to greater enthusiasm than that of Mr. Sidney Gedge. He mainly dwelt upon the cloud which darkened the horizon, the cloud of income inadequate to expenditure, and he asked if that cloud was designed to test the faith of God's people? In a series of startling statistics he pointed out how miserably small is the sum given by the laity to foreign missions. But it was not only the laity whose shortcomings he laid bare; he did not spare the clergy either, but asked with a force which must have gone home to many a heart present, "Which is of most importance, the decoration of our churches or the rearing up of spiritual temples?" "Let us give up," he added, amid enthusiastic applause, "our religious luxuries." I wonder if all those who applauded will do it! His closing suggestion was a happy ending to a telling speech. It had been pointed out, he said, that the letters "C.M.S." might mean not only "Church Missionary Society," but also "Christ My Saviour," and "Carry My Salvation;" but he would like to see the thing made four-square, and to see inscribed on every box in addition to those three thoughts this—"Contribute More Supplies."

An opportunity of doing this was fortunately now afforded by a collection during the singing of a hymn, after which Rev. H. U. Weitbrecht gave some interesting particulars of his work at Batala. Rev. H. M. M. Hackett spoke of some of the objections that were urged against work in India, and Rev. E. C. Dawson, a friend of Bishop Hannington, wound up the meeting. It was a very striking thing to look upon the audience at 2.15, scarcely thinned at all after more than four hours' listening. Surely there is energy enough in such a number of evidently interested supporters of this branch of God's work, "even in times like these, to make the missionary contributions half as much again throughout our land."

Another meeting was held in the evening.

British and Foreign Bible Society.

The Earl of Harrowby presided over the annual gathering of this great Society in Exeter Hall last week, and in a few opening well-chosen words paid a pathetic tribute to the memory and service of its late President, Lord Shaftesbury. In his abstracted report, Rev. J. Sharp, one of the secretaries, had a deficit of £2300 to record—a financial deliverance, he said, which in all the circumstances "takes high rank among the special mercies of the year." During the year no less than 4,123,904 copies of the Scriptures, in whole or in part, had been sent out from the Society's depôts. "There has happily been no large call this year to distribute New Testaments on an extensive scale to English troops going on active foreign service. But Upper Burmah has been added to the responsibilities of the British people, and the Committee are in communication with several friends able to assist them in undertaking any advance of Bible-work in Burmah for which this new British responsibility may open the door or create the need. They have added several new languages to the long list of those in which it has been the privilege of this Society to supply the Word of Life to some portion of the family of man. A 'Penny' Testament has been provided for Wales; and the amended version of St. Luke's Gospel in Irish is being distributed in the Emerald Isle." Details as to the scattering of the Word of God in all parts of the European Continent, in Persia, India, China, Japan, and the Isles of the Sea, were given in this report, and the Secretary said that it was but a shadow of a portion of the vast and varied work the Society has been permitted to do during another year.

In his able and altogether admirable speech, Professor Monier-Williams, of Oxford, paid a splendid tribute to the teachings of the Bible as compared with that of the sacred books of the false religions of the East. On a preceding page we give an extract from this noble and timely utterance. The address of Rev. H. C. G. Moule, of Ridley Hall, Cambridge, was also noteworthy as expressing the deepest convictions of a learned and mature Christian thinker. He said:—

"Does it not come to this, when we analyse the reasons why the Bible exists, that we know it to be the Word of the Lord, which liveth and abideth for ever? Whatever intimations God has given us of immortality in our nature, or in nature around us; whatever weighty things there are in the way of suggesting to us the blessed prospect of the future of the redeemed, when we ask, 'Where is the positive information, where is the reason for certainty, where is the title to go on as matter of fact?' we are reduced to this Sacred Book of the East, this mysterious, blessed, Divine Bible. This thought of the Bible being the only book to clasp to the heart of the dying, or to lay beneath the dying head—is it not inseparably connected with another fact, that this Book claims, as no other book does, to have final authority? I feel profoundly that that word 'authority,' is a vital word in all considerations about the Scriptures. There are controversies about inspiration and its mode, controversies which are legion, but they may circle like waves round a rock, round the question of authority. That which separates the Bible from all other books, however elevating, is, after all, not so much that it contains such treasures of historic information, of poetic beauty, of moral analysis, as that it contains the authority of God and the certainty of his word. Yes, it is this, after all. There are other books, for which God be thanked, written in other ages, which have had their influence on the elevation of man, but the difference between them and this book is, that no conceivable amount of information or influence from them, as such, is binding on the conscience; but we claim for this Book, which the Bible Society exists to circulate, that when we have once ascertained the meaning of it, it binds us. It is not merely attractive and elevating—it is all this—but it is binding upon us; it says in the name of a greater than itself, 'Believe this, because I say it; do as it says, because I do it.' And are we sure of this? Surely we are, for a reason as simple as it is deep. It is as irrefragably certain as anything in history that this was the opinion held of the Book by the Son of God Himself. It is not arguing in a circle to give a proof of it. The Bible holds two different characters—history and revelation. In its capacity of history, it takes me to Jesus Christ as an historic fact and reality, and Jesus Christ presents to me the Bible in its character of authoritative revelation. As surely as Jesus Christ was and is, so surely, from Him, the Bible is written as a binding work. And I venture to hold it for certain, that so long as that opinion of the Holy Scriptures is the ruling and certain and confident opinion of the disciples of Jesus Christ, so long will there be an inexhaustible supply of faith and hope, and a range and means of work for a Society like this. But let that opinion go out of fashion, let it be undermined in the public opinion of the Christian world, and indubitably, however slowly the tide may ebb, the resources of a Bible Society, as such, must fail."

We have not space to report the remarks of Alderman Fowler, Canon Hoare, Rev. Dr Hunt (of the American Bible Society), and the noble Chairman; suffice it to say that they were all in keeping with the occasion. Such a gathering reminds one of the pithy saying of Mr. Moody in his address on the Study of the Bible, that the attacks of sceptics and critics on the Bible are but like the baying of dogs at the moon; that luminary shines on, and the Bible moves along its wondrous course undisturbed by the opposition of men.

Wesleyan Missionary Society.

The annual meeting was held on Monday week in Exeter Hall, Mr. W. Shepherd Allen, M.P., presiding. The spacious hall, says The Methodist Times, was occupied with ministers, students, laymen, ladies, and other friends of the Society. The Chairman, who was cordially received, said, in the course of his address: I do not think we ought to moderate the magnitude of the work we have to do, or the tremendous difficulties we have to pass. I suppose, roughly speaking, the population of the world at the present time is about 1,300,000,000. Out of that number about 900,000,000 are not worshippers of the one true God. There is then plenty of work for us to do. There is the vast empire of China; there is India; there is Central Asia; there is Africa; there is South America; there are other places which are, comparatively speaking, untouched by missionary enterprise. There is, indeed, plenty to do. Depend upon it, we want the very best men we can get for our missionaries. It won't do to send humdrum men to the mission field. You want men full of the Holy Ghost and of power. You want men fired with the old Methodist enthusiasm for saving souls. In the mission field we want men, not only full of the Holy Ghost, but free to act, and bold to preach the everlasting Gospel. I myself have seen something, in different parts of the world, of our Wesleyan Methodist Society. I have watched its operations in Europe. I have seen it at the Cape of Good Hope. I have seen it in Tasmania. I have seen what Christianity has done in the lovely island of New Zealand. I have seen those whose fathers and grandfathers were savage idolaters and ferocious cannibals. I have seen them worshipping the one true God as devout and humble Christians. We are citizens of the greatest, the most powerful, and the most Christian country that the world has ever seen. Why has God given such vast possessions to England? I believe it has been that England may give the Gospel to them, and be the means of raising churches to Christ throughout all her dominions.

Rev. R. Roberts, President of the Conference, having referred to a decrease in the income of the Society, pointed out causes for encouragement in the progress that had been made. He said, Missions pay well in the highest sense of the word. Last Conference twelve months we sent a young man to Central Africa. He wrought hard, and made a new circuit for himself, some seventy-five miles in breadth. A message came to him from a village of one of the tribes that a few natives living there had heard missionaries in other parts, and were anxious again to hear the same blessed Gospel, twenty-two miles up the country beyond his own circuit. He undertook the journey, and to his astonishment found that there were already in that distant village Christian people. There was an old man named Abraham, who had been converted in the Orange River State, and had gone to that remote region to live. While there he had been the means of leading some of the natives to the knowledge of Christ. When the missionary arrived he found twelve members of the Methodist Society. The same missionary has made a second visit, and baptized more converts. We must not abandon our old stations, but, while retaining them, we must push further on, and encourage and strengthen them by adding new links. God will give us the men we want.

Rev. E. E. Jenkins said he stood for the first time in his life on the platform as a witness for China. The hostility to foreigners in China was not universal, for travellers were now wandering beyond the Treaty ports, and this Society had stations beyond consular protection. The enmity of the large cities was due to the jealousy of the Mandarin officials, who, professedly in the interests of public order, watched for a pretence to interfere with the freedom of the foreigner; for they were opposed to change. No power disquieted the Mandarin mind so much as the advancing language of England. The introduction of the English language would necessarily be followed by a revision of scholastic methods in Chinese schools, a revision of standards and literary valuations. That which was worthless in the old days would perish, and that which was valuable would aid adequately in the new revolution. The Chinese Government was waking up; it was high time for the missionary societies, who had agents in China, to wake up also. China moved with its Government; 300,000,000 followed as one man the lead of Pekin. The annexation of Upper Burmah—which event he hailed with thankfulness and hope—had brought us within hand-shaking of the western border of China; and over that border we should go, the missionary and the merchant, hand in hand, to prosecute the enterprises of commerce, and the sublimer traffic which was better than the merchandise of silver.

Rev. W. Scarborough (from China) moved a resolution expressing gratitude to God for preserving Rev. E. Jenkins, during his long visitation tour in India and China, and anticipating great advantage to the Eastern missions of the Society from Mr Jenkins' visit. The speech was a reply to the taunt that missions were a failure. Mr. Scarborough based his answer on facts which he presented to the meeting in a clear and conclusive way, as a reporter (to use his own words) of the work he had seen and shared in China was the scene of his labours, and he declared that the mission work was going on prosperously. Christian missionaries deserved the support of all men for the missionaries were materially contributing to the improvement of the civilisation of China by means of schools, hospitals, chapels, and by providing a secular literature of great value, and a sacred literature of priceless worth. All this array of facts ought not only to strengthen faith, but should make the friends of missionaries rejoice, both as philanthropists and Christians.

Rev. R. Wilberforce Starr, in a lively speech, referring to some large commercial projects, said all these bold enterprises rebuked them as Christian men for their lack of faith.

Rev. H. Haigh (Mysore) said there were two Indias side by side to-day—vernacular-speaking India, which lay chiefly, but not wholly, in the villages; and English-speaking India, which lay entirely in the towns. For ages the boast and the strength of India had been its unbroken unity. But now a change was taking place. One section of Hindu society still remained in a mass; but the other had become detached, and had begun to float into distant and open waters towards Truth and Freedom, and not improbably towards danger. One, and by far the larger, class of Hindus was still thoroughly conservative, and bound to be so, alike by instinct, education, habit, and interest. The new party, which was composed of natives who had studied the English language, though small in numbers, was great in present power, and sovereign in promise. A subject on which agitation was spreading was that of enforced widowhood in India. Suttee had long been abolished, and all would rejoice to honour the Viceroy, during whose rule and by whose influence that inhumanity ceased—he meant Lord William Bentinck. But in India, suttee, though a sharp agony, was a brief one; while widowhood there, under present conditions, was little better than a prolonged suttee. It was a degradation from which there was no escape but by dishonour. Some of the widows of India ought never to have known what it was to be wives. Let it be clearly known that 78,000 were under nine years of age, 21,300 between nine and thirteen, and 300,000 between thirteen and eighteen years of age. No wonder that educated India was beginning to protest, and that men were asking for some law which should protect widows who chose to marry again from those penalties which caste would impose. It seemed to him that it would be one of the womanliest acts of the womanliest Queen that ever reigned if our Queen were able to put her royal name to a Bill of that character. But these agitations were indications of an unrest that went much deeper. For educated India, as for the world, Christ was the supreme want. The English language had been spoken of as a well undefiled. Thank God that Christ and his principles permeated English literature. The night for India had passed, and the grey dawn was coming; the eyes of India were still heavy, and it could not see very clearly; but give it time, and the awaking life of the land would yet rise and look straight towards the Sun, even the Sun of Righteousness.

Rev. Dr. Rigg said it had been a remarkable meeting—remarkable for its contrasts and varying moods, and distinguished, from first to last, for accuracy of statement and for the earnest attention which the audience had given. One result of this meeting he hoped would be a larger income, and he trusted that the hearts of the people would be so stirred as to prompt them to give to this cause more than they had ever done before. He meant to double his own subscription, and a little more.

Sunday-school Union.

The Committee of the Sunday-school Union were very fortunate in their speakers for the annual meeting, which was held at Exeter Hall on Thursday. The addresses were all of them such as could not fail to be of the utmost practical value to the great body of teachers and others interested in Sunday-school teaching, who thronged Exeter Hall on that evening Looking round upon all those earnest upturned faces, and then over the vast platform, with so many workers in the vineyard there to give a mighty impetus to the cause of Sabbath Schools, one could not help wondering what good old Robert Raikes would have said if he could have looked in to see that gathering. He would certainly feel that his labour had not been in vain.

The Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland had been announced as chairman, but his official duties in Dublin prevented his being where we are sure he would have been pleased to be—presiding over such a meeting. So Mr. Edward Crossley, M.P., undertook the duties. Mr. Crossley ought to make a good legislator, for he has been twenty-seven years engaged in Sunday-school teaching, fifteen of which have been spent in superintending a school of about 700 scholars. His wife is an earnest worker, too, so the meeting was not surprised to hear his Christian testimony, that whoever devoted himself to Sunday-school work always derived tenfold more good than he did to others, and such work was the best investment of their lives, not only for time but for eternity. Mr. Crossley read an interesting telegram which reached him during the meeting from Gottenberg: "Sweden thanks England for Sunday-schools, also Union for successful visit of Duncan Miller and Bellringers. Cheap Bible Fund meeting here to-night. Pastor Trübner, Gottenberg." A message of thanks and friendly congratulations was despatched by the chairman from the meeting in reply.

Rev. Professor Elmslie then delivered a powerful address on "The basis of Sunday-school teaching." Professor Elmslie is an interesting speaker. While he talks to his audience, the noble truths of the grand old Book he has studied to so much purpose seem to shine through his fine, open face, and emphasise all he says. It was a splendid tribute to the value of Sunday-schools which he paid at the very outset of an earnest address. Said the Rev. Professor: I have studied in many colleges, in Scotland, in France, in Germany and elsewhere, but the deepest and the tenderest things I have learnt about God, and Christ, and the human soul—all that which lies at the very roots and fibres of what is faith and life, began in the Sunday-school, and were worth all the learning and all the profound study that have been added since." He only wished all the teachers present could stand in his place on the platform, and see their own faces. They would be impressed with the glory of their work, feel the glow of heavenly magnetism, and be ready to go right through the streets of London, and compel the children to come in and gather round the feet of Jesus Christ. Contemplating all this stupendous activity, he was led to inquire, What was its spring? He was present at the Continental Sunday-school Teachers' breakfast with a friend, who remarked: "I wonder whether Sunday-school teachers are better-looking than other people." He replied that he didn't know about that, but the reason why they looked so nice was because they had happy hearts. That was the secret of the activity of which he had spoken. Some people tried to account for it by saying that teachers went to Sunday-school because they must be doing something. Now, he had heard of people collecting beetles, and making it a hobby, and he could understand a young man making a bicycle a special hobby, but the man who talked about Sunday-schools being nothing but a hobby had most certainly never tried it himself. No! the enormous activity in Sunday-school work was due to nothing less than a heart full of warm, living faith and love. They believed in the immortal worth and dignity of the human soul. "Our earth," exclaimed the rev. gentleman, "must always correspond to our heaven. We believe in the dignity of our work: that it is a work incalculable in this world of ours. I know the real character of the work done in our Houses of Legislation. It is a grand thing to be one of the lawmakers in our great country; it is a grand thing to be a writer in our periodical press, if a man know God's own truth, and has a heart for the loftiest aspirations. But there is a work that lies beneath it all, and without which all this work is useless, and all our commercial enterprises and inventions and discoveries, and all our boasted civilisation, of no avail; because more and more, in this age, the stability of our Government and institutions, and all that man counts sacred, rests upon individual character. Whether we like it or not, our rich men, our learned men, our statesmen, are being compelled to fling themselves upon the faith in virtue, in the love of justice, in the intelligence and wisdom of what we call the "common people." I don't care so much who has the making of our laws, but I do care who has the making of the characters of our citizens." In words like these did Mr. Elmslie bring home to the teachers the full responsibility of their work, and then he concluded: "We glorify our painters and our sculptors, and we do rightly; but the men and women who are carving into Divine personal beauty the hearts that God made are doing a more imperishable and precious work—a work infinitely more like the work of God. To you who are engaged in this ofttimes weary work, what more shall I say than that no finer work is done by statesman, sage, or saint."

Rev. Charles Clark, of Ealing, who was the next speaker, took for his topic "A Girdle of Strength;" and an admirable speech it was. Logical in argument, poetical in expression, with full flowing periods he carried his audience along. The girdle of strength of which he spoke was composed of three threads; the first of which was love, the second patience, and the third faith. These were the bands that engirdled the spirit of the faithful labourer with a strength which, like a three-fold cord, was not quickly broken. Mr. Clark is no pessimist. He is sure that the good old type of earnest, plodding Sunday-school teacher has not died out. God's angels walk about the earth today. They walk, and we see them transfigured before us. Love, he said, is the best economist in what she sows and in what she reaps, and closely intertwined with the love which prompts to service is the patience which prevents us from growing weary in well-doing. On the mind undisciplined by patience, discouragement falls like a blight; hence the importance of this cord to the Sunday-school teacher. Nothing but the perfect working of patience can sustain the soul in the long season of waiting for results; and what but this will enable us to forget disappointment, and put such heart into the work that for its own sake it will become pleasant and precious. Then the golden strand of faith completes the girdle. Without faith we disesteem the noblest things. Faith teaches us to reverence the possibilities that lie in the heart of every little one, and to be joyful even in one case when we are enabled to unfold the human into the divine. "Gird up your loins then with these three threads for your Christ-appointed labour, and when the lucid heavens reveal the future ye shall see his face with joy, and, behold, your Lord shall say, 'Here am I and the children whom thou hast given me.'"

Rev. Colmer B. Symes, of Kensington, followed. Looking into the future, he dwelt upon "New Claims and Fresh Plans," pointing out in the first place that they had to deal with an association of independence which was showing itself in the child, in the youth, and in the grown-up person. They found this association of independence in the cant of the day, which was talking of "liberty of thought." That meant a large amount of liberty and very little thought. Too many young men had thrown off the skins of old religious observances, and were craving for these new forms of liberty. They must meet it wisely and never, on any account, pit law against freedom. In asserting their freedom, young people would destroy their power of usefulness; so he counselled the pressure of personal authority upon all, and especially, in the first place, parental authority. If a teacher had a dozen children in his class and he would make it his duty to look after a dozen homes, the Christian Church as well as the school would thereby be enriched. Scepticism must be met sympathetically if it was to be overcome, for no authority would be accepted unless it could be shown that such authority was intelligent and based upon reason. Then he counselled a little less attention to the history and geography of the Bible, and more to the essential truths. The geography of Palestine would no more save a soul than the geography of Cambridgeshire. In conclusion, Mr. Symes strongly urged the following up of those who had left the schools, in order to keep them within the influence of some church.

Mr. F. F. Besley, of Rochester, also addressed the meeting. We ought to add that the London Sunday-school choir greatly added to the enjoyment of the audience by their good singing. Our space does not admit of our giving a resumé of the most interesting report; we would advise the friends of the young to send to the Sunday-school Union, 56, Old Bailey, E.C., for a copy.

BRIGHTON.—On Monday, May 3, a plain but commodious Mission Hall, admirably suited for its purpose, was opened at Hove, Brighton. The building consists of a large hall, capable of seating 650 persons, with a smaller hall and a class-room. It is proposed, when a further sum of £2000 has been received, to add a coffee tavern, with rooms over, another class-room, and a reading-room. The need of such a building has long been felt. Visitors to the West-end of Brighton will find the hall with its striking red brick building in Clarendon-villas, and there at present a mission is being held by Mr. Day, of the Evangelisation Society.

MISSIONS AT BENARES.—The London Missionary Society has issued a report of its work at Benares during 1885. The statistics of the mission show that the operations for the year have been carried on by twenty-seven missionaries, native teachers, Bible women, colporteurs, &c., and that the total number of persons under instruction in the various schools was nearly 1200. One interesting fact recorded is that this Society shares the work of evangelising Benares with four other societies, the representatives of which assemble every week for devotion, and meet once a quarter for mutual help and consultation. Rev. John Hewlett, senior missionary, evidently cherishes bright hopes for the future of this important district of India, which covers an area of nearly 1000 square miles, contains a population of nearly 100,000 inhabitants, and furnishes a fine field for missionary labours among Hindoos and Mahomedans alike.

A GOOD SAMARITAN WANTED.

They say that difficulties exist to be overcome, that every troublesome fact is a messenger from God, which is only troublesome because it has not delivered its message, because our ears will not hear it, or because our eyes are turned otherwhere. Here is a concrete fact which is troubling me. Can any of your readers help me to its solution? Six months ago a young, beautiful girl, whose stepfather treated her unkindly, and even brutally, ran away from home with a gentleman who had paid court to her, and who promised her marriage. After a month he deserted her. It was the old story—trustful, innocent girlhood sacrificed, honour lost, home destroyed, all through passionate confiding love on her side, and ruthless selfishness on his.

She came to London. Her youth, her innocence, her beauty won for her many admirers. Of course she lived a lazy, luxuriant, self-indulgent life, receiving more pounds in a week than by honest industry she could make shillings. At last she met one who had known her before her fall. He induced her to make an effort to regain a position other than that of shame. She was not converted; she was not religious. Still she felt the life she was leading was wrong, that it was dangerously fascinating, but that the end thereof was ruin. So she determined to make a new start. But how? The life of self-indulgence, of pleasure, of dissipation, unfitted her for domestic life. Besides, why should she not turn her gift of beauty to good use? Why could she not find an opening where her pretty face would have an honest, economic value to her employer? She only asked shillings from virtue where vice had given her pounds, but, alas, the shillings are not forthcoming.

If some sensible motherly Christian woman, who has a shop as florist, confectioner, or some light business, would but take her and give her a start under her own eye! But where is such a one to be found? I have tried friends, advertisements, everything, but as yet have failed. And the poor girl thinks it is all no use; no one will take her. The road back to an evil life is so easy and so tempting. The girl is ladylike. She is staying at our house as a friend and visitor until something turns up. She has been there a month, and nothing has turned up yet. I look at her pretty face, and think of that fatal gift of beauty, and wonder if the problem is insoluble. Can virtue make no good use of a gift which in the hand of vice coins gold? If any of your readers can help me to a solution of that problem, I shall be grateful indeed for their help.

[We fervently trust our correspondent's touching appeal will not be in vain; we will gladly forward communications to him.—Ed.]

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—May 16, Deut. xxx. 8—20; May 17, xxxi. 1—13; May 18, xxxii. 1—12; May 19, xxxiii. 1—12; May 20, xxxiii. 13—29; May 21, xxxiv. 1—12; May 22, Ps. cv. 1—15.

STRANGER'S REST, RATCLIFF.—On Friday last, the usual monthly meeting for workers was held, Mr. M. H. Hodder presiding. Mr. Isaac, hon. secretary, spoke of the present great need of funds, and of book bags for the sailors. Dr. Barnardo gave an important address on the lessons to be drawn from the history of Asa as found in 2 Chron.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE.—At Wicken, near Soham, the clergyman, Rev. T. W. Thomas, is doing an earnest work. The village abounds in men: eighty-five of all ages have joined the Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Mission, and many are seeking the Lord, and some are rejoicing in a newly found Saviour. The church is out of the village, and a mission hall is needed, to cost £150. Sympathy and kindness are shown by the Nonconformists, and union in prayer. High Church influence is strong. The people are poor, and help is needed to build the hall.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH.—Many of our readers are aware of the circumstances of Amanda Smith, now in the fourth year of her labours in Liberia. As mentioned a few weeks ago, she is now at Cape Palmas. A second letter just received from that place mentions her intention of taking a small house. As the stores sent to her early last year were most useful, it is intended to forward another box. Contributions will be most thankfully received by Mrs. T. Davis, Foxrock, co. Dublin. She mentions handkerchiefs and cloths as most useful for barter with the natives, but almost anything will be useful either for herself or them.

EMIGRATION TO CANADA.

Mr. Byrne, the Government agent in Liverpool for the Province of Ontario, has just received the following letter from Mr. David Spence, the Secretary of the Immigration Department, Toronto:—

Toronto, April 13, 1866.—We have a brisk demand for farm labourers at the present time, but, unfortunately, we are not getting many, Mr. Owen, of Dr. Barnardo's Home, brought eighty fine young men to Toronto last Thursday evening, and they were all sent to places by the train on Friday morning. These lads ranged from sixteen to twenty years of age. I inserted notices in the papers of their expected arrival, and on Saturday a large number of farmers came to Toronto to get them, but they were too late. This transaction will show you what the demand is. This, of course, is the season when farmers are anxious to hire men by the year. The current wages for competent men by the year, are 160 dollars (£32 16s.) with maintenance.

CONFERENCE ON EVANGELISATION.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL, MILE END-ROAD, E.

Monday evening, May 17.—Preliminary Prayer Meeting, 7.30 to 9.30. Chairman—Mr. Frederick N. Charrington. Mr. Charles Inglis, Mr. R. Radcliffe, and others, will take part.

Tuesday, May 18, 11 to 1.—Subject—Foreign Missions. Chairman—Hon. Ion Keith Falconer. Speakers—Messrs. Judd and Parrott, Missionaries.

Afternoon, 3 to 5.—Subject—Medical Missions and Women's Work. Chairman—General Haig. Speakers—Miss Macpherson and others.

Evening, 7.30 to 9.30.—Subject—Home and Colonial Evangelisation. Chairman—Mr. James E. Mathieson. Speakers—Messrs. H. Varley and Charles Inglis.

Wednesday, May 19, 11 to 1.—Subject—Continental Evangelisation. Chairman—Mr. R. Cope Morgan.

Afternoon, 3 to 5.—Subject—Emigration. Chairman—Mr. Grattan Guinness. Speakers—Captain A. Hamilton, Messrs. A. Wilke, and W. H. Seagram.

Evening, 7.30 to 9.30.—Subject—Foreign Missions. Chairman—Lord Radstock. Speakers—Rev. Archibald Brown and Mr. R. Radcliffe.

Thursday, May 20, 11 to 1; afternoon, 3 to 5; evening, 7.30 to 9.30.—Chairman—Mr. Reginald Ratcliffe. Meetings for Prayer, Praise, and Personal Testimony. The following are also expected to take part in the meetings:—Mr. Goodriche (Manchester), Rev. F. B. Meyer (Leicester), Dr. Barnardo, "Aaron" (Hindoo), Mr. Frank White, and Mr. W. Hind Smith.

MR. AND MRS. C. KING have been used of God in Galashiels, where they have been holding services in the Baptist Chapel and the Drill Hall.

CHISWICK.—Mr. Thomas Eyres, of the Children's Evangelistic Mission, has conducted meetings for children here which have proved most fruitful in blessing to many.

CARDIFF.—Mr. W. Spencer Walton held Gospel services at the Y.M.C.A. on May 1 to 3. The meetings were well attended. All greatly enjoyed the Gospel addresses; many, it is believed, received blessing, and others stirred up to a closer walk with God.

A CONFERENCE ON PERSONAL CONSECRATION in relation to the Second Advent was held on Tuesday, last week, at the Town Hall, Kensington. Many earnest and impressive addresses were delivered. The Conference, which it is contemplated to make an annual one, was of special interest to those who study the Prophetic Scriptures.

REV. W. F. GOOCH.—We recently announced that this earnest preacher of the Gospel was about to leave Sunderland, where for some time he has been pastor of Bethesda Chapel. He resumes his ministry at the Baptist Church, Upper Norwood. On Wednesday evening last week there was a goodly gathering of friends in Sunderland to bid him farewell, and to express their affectionate esteem for him, and their sense of the loss sustained by his departure from their midst.

HOLLOWAY.—The sixth anniversary of the Evangelistic and Open-air Mission at Holloway was held on Sunday, May 2, at the Hall, 301, Holloway-road. On Monday a number of friends sat down to tea, after which a public meeting was held, presided over by Mr. H. Putterill, superintendent of the Mission. Mr. J. Shelley, the secretary, gave an interesting report of the work during the past winter. Help is needed for this work, and will gratefully be received by Mr. J. Shelley, whose address is 23, Upper Tollington-road, N.

MADEIRA.—Mr. W. G. Smart writes to us that the Jesuit party in Madeira are very active just now, and do not seem at all inclined to leave Protestants alone. His wife superintends a Portuguese mission school, with an average attendance of forty children. Articles have lately appeared in a Romish paper in the island calling upon the civil authorities to close the school and Bible depôt. Mr. Smart says his magic lantern has been useful in Gospel work among the Portuguese, and large audiences have been attracted to see pictures of the Prodigal Son and the Pilgrim's Progress. If any one can send him a second-hand set of Scripture slides he will be grateful. A hand printing machine would be very useful. His address is 183, Rua dos Ferreiros, Madeira.

GOD IN CHRIST.

"He giveth to all, life and breath and all things."
Acts xvii. 25.

What is the word of truth to-day
  Amidst the blaze of light,
Which Science, hastening on her way,
  Emits from depth to height?
That word down all the ages cries,
  Alike from sky and sod,
Whoe'er receives Him, or denies,
  "The Christ is very God."

He grows upon us silently,
  From tree, and flower, and star;
We trace Him in the darkening sky,
  'Mid elemental war;
On frozen peaks, 'mid Arctic snows,
  Or 'neath an Eastern sun,
All nature liveth to disclose
  God and the Christ are one.

Before his conquering advance
  Night fleeth fast away—
Dark night of doubt and ignorance:
  Upon our souls the day—
Blest day, on which true Science folds
  Religion in embrace—
Bursts on our view in Him who holds
  God's splendour in his face.

Great, all creating God in Christ,
  The end of age-long strife
Draws nigh, as nature keepeth tryst
  With Him who is her life.
Proclaim his name, sun, moon, and star,
  All things from sky to sod;
And shout to worlds, and spheres afar,
  "The Christ is very God!"

MR. CAMERON'S WORK IN BATTERSEA.

We have noticed more than once in our columns the very successful work carried on by Mr. D. M. Cameron amongst the working men of Battersea. Thursday last was a memorable day with them. Their new tabernacle was opened on that day, and two very successful meetings were held, presided over by Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard and Mr. T. A. Denny respectively. Numerous friends—ministers of the neighbourhood and others—took part in the meetings, and commended our brother and his work to God in prayer.

The working men have subscribed liberally to this plain but commodious new building, with a seating capacity of 800, which they have called "Union Tabernacle," but there is still a considerable sum required to clear it of all debt. Our friend's address is D. M. Cameron, 2, Norfolk Villas, Albion-road, S.W.

REV. J. AND MRS. MOUNTAIN, who have been conducting evangelistic services with much success in New South Wales and Queensland, are expected shortly to visit Victoria.

NORWICH Y.W.C.A.—This Association is about to enter upon the premises now and for many years past occupied by the Y.M.C.A., the latter institution having acquired new and much more commodious quarters. On May 4 a meeting was held in the Victoria Hall, when Mrs. Stephen Menzies gave an address on Y.W.C.A. work, and made an urgent appeal to the large and very representative assembly to support the Society.

MARSEILLES.—An Industrial Exhibition was opened at Marseilles on Saturday, May 8. This opportunity for distributing the Scriptures and illustrated papers ought not to be lost. There will be the multitudes; and the loaves and fishes are here in the shape of endless supplies of both Scriptures and papers, lying in the depôt for sale, but the medium for putting them in circulation is wanted. The exhibition will be open for three months, and there are 10,000 exhibitors.

LIMERICK RAGGED SCHOOLS.—With these are linked the Male Free School and the Female Free Schools. "In these institutions the teaching of the Holy Scriptures has been the cause of their permanence, their growth, and their success." Close on two hundred children were taught last year, of whom one hundred and forty were in daily attendance. The new report says there are many children who are not reached, chiefly through the neglect and indifference of parents, and from the evil influence of mixed marriages. The Havergal Memorial Building still requires £50 to complete its purchase and alterations. Rev. Canon Gregg is treasurer and secretary.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

Y.M.C.A., LÜBECK, PRUSSIA.—In 1883, the year of the Luther Jubilee, it was decided that suitable buildings should be erected for the Young Men's Christian Association. In spite of opposition from merchants, working-men, and even some public teachers, money flowed in freely, and on March 22 the building was opened. It contains a large hall for religious, social, and scientific meetings, also a hospital with many rooms. —Anzeiger.

AT JURANCON, near Pau, evangelisation has been carried on among the Spaniards for fifteen years, under the superintendence of M. Pozzy, pastor of the Evangelical Free Church. The Sunday-school contains thirty-one children and an adult class; it is proposed to open a school for girls. who at present have no other means of education than that afforded by the Romanist Sisters. Madame Pozzy has a workshop for women under her direction.—Témoin de la Vérité.

PARIS.—A dispensary has just been opened—the first of its kind—in connection with the McAll Mission. It consists of several well-fitted rooms that have been added to the Salle Beach in the Place des Ternes. A second will be ready very shortly in the Rue Nationale at Ivry. The two establishments will be under the care of Dr. Anderson, brother of Rev. S. H. Anderson, one of Mr. McAll's coadjutors and pastor of the English Congregational Church in the Rue Royale.

CHERBOURG.—A new Gospel Hall was lately opened here. It is situated in an important suburb of the town, in a large street, and is capable of containing 200 persons. Since the day of its opening well-attended and interesting meetings have been held. Whilst the monk who preached the Lent Sermons in the Church, where payment must be made beforehand, complained that the men did not attend, the Hall, where there was nothing to pay, was crowded.—Témoin de la Vérite.

PARIS Y.M.C.A.—The Secretary thanks the many friends in England and Scotland who so practically responded to his appeal for copies of The Christian. As a Working Committee has been organised for the distribution of tracts and portions of Scripture at the races, fêtes, railway stations, also to the omnibus and cabmen of the city, donations of tracts in English and French, or contributions towards expenses, would be gladly received from Christian friends. The secretary is Mr. S. Lee, Y.M.C.A., 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris.

MR. GEORGE MULLER'S VISIT TO MELBOURNE, says The Southern Cross of March 19, is awakening great interest. Mr. Müller himself is as wonderful as his own orphan houses. He is over eighty years of age; he has carried for the greater part of that time what to most Christians would be an almost crushing burden of anxiety and work. Mr. Müller is now undertaking labours that would tax most men in their prime. Yet he shows no signs of weariness or anxiety, and few traces of age or infirmity. Mr. Müller is a witness of what may be called the medicinal virtues of a cheerful faith.

SARDINIA.—Our Easter has been brightened by the visit of Rev. J. H. Eager, of Rome, Baptist missionary. He preached one evening in our meeting-room a most earnest sermon. He left Sassari for Tempio, a town fifty miles distant, where he employs a native evangelist; there he has met with a very warm reception. This week we look forward to seeing Signor G. Quattrini, Waldensian minister, of Leghorn, and I purpose accompanying him to several of our towns and villages, to some of which we have been invited. Signor Quattrini hopes to remain a month or so on the island. John E. Thomas.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION.—Pastor Brandt, in the Baltic Provinces, has recently, at the pressing request of some parents who had quitted the Greek Church, baptized their children according to the Protestant rite. For this, not only has he been turned out of his church, but the Administration has ordered him to hold himself ready within fifteen days for transportation to Smolensk. No similar measure towards a Protestant pastor has taken place since the Emperor Paul sent Pastor Seider to Siberia, because a forbidden book was found in his house. The Emperor Nicholas displaced some pastors. but that such an act should be done without the accused being heard is unexampled.—L'Evangéliste.

MARIN, GALICIA, SPAIN.—About four years ago an English missionary and his wife landed at this small port in order to preach the Gospel. From the first they found a real thirst for the Word of God among the inhabitants, so that the hall was crowded as soon as the doors were opened. Most of the people are sardine fishers, or small farmers, and are, therefore, independent of priestly influence; no one can deprive them of their daily bread if they declare themselves Protestants. The Romish Church lost its prestige through the immorality of the priests. The Church now consists of 130 members, and not a month passes without fresh conversions and baptisms. A poor dressmaker gave her house and garden as a site on which to build a place of worship, towards the erection of which the people, who are all poor, are very liberally contributing. Neighbouring villages are also awakened, and are inviting the missionaries to visit them.—Mr. Armstrong's Circular Letter.

"ROME, THE MURDERESS."—To meet numerous requests for a reprint of the extracts under this title that recently appeared in these columns, we have issued it in leaflet form, suitable for enclosing in letters, price 1s. 6d. per 100.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A Prohibition campaign is being organised in every county in the State of Oregon.

Mr. Coad has had a successful mission at New Islington Wesleyan Chapel, Manchester

Rev. A. Mursell would have a drunken man lay the foundation-stone of every workhouse."

The Sunday Closing Association invites special prayer on behalf of the movement in the Legislature.

Dr. F. R. Lees is preparing a life of Mr. W. Hoyle, and will be glad to receive letters or information.

Russian workmen are paid very low wages, but they keep many "Saints' days," and are very intemperate.

In Norway, a Bill for the total prohibition of the liquor traffic is under the consideration of the Government.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson is expected back in England early in June. We trust he will return in vigorous health.

The Metropolitan Police Court's charge-sheets proved that Good Friday was more soberly observed than formerly.

Sir Charles Warren, now Chief Commissioner of the London Police, is "head and heart with the Temperance cause."

The Romish Church in the United States has received the sanction of the Pope to a vigorous crusade against the drink traffic.

Rev. Sam Jones says the liquor traffic ought to be made so odious that nobody but a scoundrel will sell it, and nobody but a fool will buy it.

The Temperance Society at Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle is four years old, and during that period 20,000 persons have there signed the pledge.

A legacy of £200 has been received by the Church of England Temperance Society from the executors of the late Rev. John Robinson, of Sidmouth.

At the Scottish League annual business meeting there were some complaints that Temperance sermons were not more common on the anniversary Sunday.

At Le Mars, Iowa, the homes of the mayor and a Member of Congress have been partially destroyed by fire, on account of the anti-liquor action of their owners.

Mr. Joseph Sturge draws attention to the extraordinary discrepancies in the use of alcohol in London hospitals. The cost per patient varies from 1s. 6d. up to 11s. a-year.

It is stated that dissolute parents frequently insure their infant's lives, and then allow them to waste away from want of food, that they may obtain the insurance money for drink.

The views of the new Bishop of Manchester on Temperance are disappointing to the Temperance world. Between him and the Bishop of London on this question there is a great gulf.

Mrs. Leavitt, of America, who is now on a temperance advocacy tour round the world, has been addressing large and influential meetings in Australia. She next visits China, India, and Japan.

The Wesleyan Conference is to be asked to appoint a Connexional Temperance agent. An agent is about to be appointed to work in the Manchester Wesleyan district, which includes 25 circuits.

A prominent lawyer of Clark County, Georgia, asserts that before Prohibition went into effect in that county his criminal practice amounted to 1000 dollars, and now he would take 150 dollars for it.

At the recent meeting of the English Presbyterian Synod, a long discussion took place on the subject of Sunday closing of public-houses; a motion petitioning the Government to further this movement was passed.

The Heyrod-street (Manchester) Gospel Temperance Society have arranged eleven districts, and four visitors for each. During the year which their report covers 50,000 visits have been paid, and 51,408 copies of literature circulated.

There are 3000 drink-shops in Brooklyn, New York, and it is said that 99 per cent. are open on Sunday in violation of the law. A gentleman, who has publicly called attention to these violations, has been threatened with assassination.

The United Kingdom Temperance and General Provident Institution shows that in five years ending 1885 the deaths in the Temperance section were about 71 per cent. of the "expected," as compared with 97 per cent. in the general section.

Mr. W. Birch, who has recently done noble work for the Manchester "unemployed," writes that during the severe distress the religious working men have "nobly endured their privations," while "the majority have by previous drinking habits accentuated their distress."

Mr. R. T. Booth, the Gospel temperance evangelist, has begun a fresh campaign at the Antipodes. Ballarat, Warrnambool, Adelaide, Queensland, and Rockhampton, are among the places he is to visit. Mr. Booth has just concluded a very successful Tasmanian tour.

THE GOSPEL IN CAMP. — About nine hundred militiamen from various parts of Wales and England will be assembled for their annual training, under canvas, at Brecon, in the course of a week or two. Every year the camp is visited, repeatedly and systematically, by members of the Y.M.C.A. with tracts and religious papers. Christian periodicals, tracts (illustrated preferred), and Gospel booklets, are earnestly solicited by D. Devoir Thomas, Y.M.C.A., Brecon.

THE CURE OF INTEMPERANCE.

Among the institutions for the care and cure of inebriate women is "Buxton House," Earl's Colne Essex, conducted by Miss Pudney. Dr. Parrish, of the Sanitorium, Burlington, New Jersey, who visited Buxton House when in England in the autumn of last year, thus writes of it in the (American) Quarterly Journal of Inebriety:—"Miss Pudney aims to promote a higher moral tone and more force of character, by which the power of habit may be overcome; to develop these, great kindness and gentle firmness, unremitting oversight and personal companionship are devoted. Pleasant social intercourse, recreation, and refining amusements are provided. With such a course of treatment, and the intervention of the medical adviser when needed, 'Buxton House' is an instrument of good for the upper and middle classes—a peaceful home, presided over by the genius of philanthropy and wisdom."

We are pleased to read from an impartial pen so favourable a notice of a private temporary refuge for the care and cure of some of our weaker sisters. "Buxton House," we believe, has thus far been well patronised, and the treatment of some cases of an almost extreme character has been attended with the most satisfactory results.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most important that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

THE FULTON-STREET PRAYER-MEETING still holds on its way as an evangelical power in New York City. Forty letters were recently received in one day, asking for prayer for the conversion of loved ones. In them many mothers plead for sons going astray from God. One fourth of the requests were for the victims of intemperance. Requests came from all lands.

THE SOUTHSEA CONFERENCE.—The programme of this Conference on May 18—20, called by Rev. F. Baldey, St. Simon's Vicarage, Southsea, has been issued. The subjects will be the Life, the Walk, and the Victory of Faith. "My design in proposing these subjects," says Mr. Baldey, "is that which Rev. W. Romaine proposed to himself when he prepared his treatise on the Life of Faith, viz., 'To display the glory and all-sufficiency of the Lord Jesus Christ, and to encourage weak believers to glorify Him more, by depending and living more upon his all-sufficiency.'" A long list of well-known speakers is announced. The Conference will assemble each day in St. Simon's Schoolroom, Clarendon-road.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.—Rev. C. Seaver, of Belfast, one of the local superintendents of the mission, writes with respect to its work:—The good old Scripture Readers' Society has carried on its work quietly, zealously, faithfully among us for the past half century, and still continues vigorous as ever. Its agents are greatly valued, and very urgently needed in such a town, where there are above 60,000 Protestants absent from the places of worship on the Lord's-day, most of whom, but for the labours of these missionaries, and those of kindred societies, would be uncared for; their numbers are daily increased by the influx of the population from the country. The quiet, unobtrusive labours of the Society's agents have been testified to by their superintendents, while our dear Master has owned their faithful efforts by giving them many souls for their reward. I may add that they are directed to visit the Roman Catholics when opportunities occur, and that they always have had access to the members of that communion, to whom they have made known the Gospel of Christ, and for whom they have read the blessed Word of God. They labour among the poor in the town parishes, the clergy of which find it impossible to raise sufficient funds to pay the salaries of these agents, and are indebted to the generosity of the Society for their continuance.

Notes on Daily Readings

SUNDAY, MAY 16.—JUDGES II.

1.—An angel of the Lord.—"The angel of the Lord (not an angel). The phrase is used nearly sixty times to designate the angel of God's presence. In all cases where 'the angel of the Lord' delivers a message he does it, as here, as if God Himself were speaking, without the intervening words, 'Thus saith the Lord,' which are used in the case of prophets."—Sp. Com.

3.—They shall be as thorns in your sides.—"The Canaanites, spared by Israel in disobedience to God, shall be the punishers of that disobedience. You would not drive them out, therefore I will not drive them out from before you' (ver. 3). The professors who love the world shall be given up to the world. The pleasures, the ambitions, the gains of the world become 'thorns,' whereby they 'pierce themselves through with many sorrows' (1 Tim. vi. 10). —A. R. Fausset.

5.—And they sacrificed there unto the Lord.—"This indicates the close proximity of Bochim to Shechem, where the tabernacle was at this time."—Sp. Com. However, Keil does not consider this necessary, as "In any place where the Lord appeared to his people, sacrifices might be offered to Him (see chap. vi. 20, 26, 28, xiii. 16; 2 Sam. xxiv. 25). On the other hand, it does follow from the sacrifice of Bochim, where there was no sanctuary of Jehovah, that the person who appeared to the people was not a prophet, nor even an ordinary angel, but 'the Angel of the Lord,' who is essentially one with Jehovah." This permission to sacrifice to the Lord, wherever He might appear to any of his people, is probably founded on Exod. xx. 24.

16.—Nevertheless the Lord raised up judges.—Verses 16—23 are an epitome of the whole book. This is the first introduction of the name "judges," from which the book is called.

MONDAY, MAY 17.—JUDGES III.

4.—They were to prove Israel by them, to know whether they would hearken unto the commandments of the Lord.—"Rest too often produces rust. If there were no foe to try us, we should forget the secret of the good warfare (Ps. lix. 11). God knows all things to come by his foreknowledge, but after the event He 'knows' it by evidence discernible by men (compare Gen. xxii. 12). He proves us not that He may know, but to make us know."—A. R. Fausset.

6.—And they took their daughters to be their wives.—"Intermarriages with the ungodly have ever led to apostasy, as many Scriptures, from Gen. vi. 2—5 to 2 Cor. vi. 14—18, testify."—Ibid.

7.—Served Baalim and the groves.—"This word 'the groves,' is here, as elsewhere, a wrong translation of the word 'Asherah,' originating from a misunderstanding of Deut. xvi. 21, of which the true translation is, 'thou shalt not set up an "Asherah" (i.e., an image of Ashtoreth) made of any wood, &c.'"—Sp. Com. R.V. renders it, "served the Baalim and the Asheroth. In other words, "images of Baal and Astarte." A similar apostasy may be traced in the history of the professing Church, which first allied itself to the world, and then was drawn in to adopt the polytheism and idolatry of paganism under a so-called Christian form, as we see to this day in Romanism.

9.—And when the children of Israel cried unto the Lord, the Lord raised up a deliverer, . . . who delivered them.—The Hebrew is literally "a saviour . . . who saved them," and is thus rendered by R.V.

16.—Ehud made him a dagger.—"Ehud took a plan which, unless he was specially directed to it by God, was unjustifiable. No expression of Scripture is used commanding or approving of the means which he took to obtain his end. The act was permitted, though not ordered by God. It is not said of Ehud, as of Othniel, that 'the Spirit of the Lord came upon him.' Nor does Ehud appear among the examples of faith in Heb. xi."—Fausset.

TUESDAY, MAY 18.—JUDGES IV.

2.—Jabin king of Canaan, that reigned in Hazor.—"Joshua had already conquered one king, Jabin of Hazor, and taken his capital (Josh. xi. 1, 10). The king referred to here, who lived more than a century later, bore the same name. The name Jabin, 'the discerning,' may possibly have been a standing name or title of the Canaanitish kings of Hazor, as Abimelech was of the kings of the Philistines (Gen. xxvi. 8)."—Keil.

4.—Deborah, a prophetess.—"Her name, meaning 'a bee,' is the same as that of Rebekah's nurse (Gen. xxxv. 8). A female ruler was so extraordinary a thing in Israel (not a single instance occurs, except that of the foreign usurper Athaliah), that the reason of it is immediately subjoined to her name. She was 'a woman, a prophetess,' like Miriam, Exod. xv. 20; Huldah, 2 Kings xxii. 14; Isaiah's wife, Isa. viii. 3; Noadiah, Neh. vi. 14; and Anna, and Philip's daughters, Luke ii. 36; Acts xxi. 9. Compare Rev. ii. 20, 1 Cor. xi. 5. In verses 6, 9 14, we have examples of her prophetic powers, and in chap. v., a noble specimen of prophetic song."—Sp. Com.

8.—If thou wilt not go with me, then I will not go.—"Barak, like Gideon (vi. 15, 36—40) who is named with him (Heb. xi. 32) among the examples of victorious faith, and like even Abraham, the father of the faithful (Gen. xv. 2, 3, xvii. 18), and Moses (Exod. iv. 10, 13), and Peter (Matt. xiv. 30, 31) exhibited some weakness of faith at first. But this only makes his example more profitable for our encouragement, though he suffered some loss from it himself (ver. 9)."—Ibid.

9.—The Lord shall sell Sisera into the hand of a woman.—In judging Jael's treacherous conduct, as related in verses 18—22, we are not to forget that it was as a judgment upon Barak's want of faith that the Lord transferred the duty of putting to death the chief captain of the enemies of Israel from him, to whom it rightly belonged, to a woman. That she should have been appointed for such a task involved the permission, but not the sanction, of the mode by which she carried it out. We must estimate the actions of Rahab, Ehud, Jael, &c., not by the light of the Gospel, but by the state of morals in those lawless times.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 19.—JUDGES V.

2.—Praise ye the Lord for the avenging of Israel, when the people willingly offered themselves.—"The best critics, ancient and modern, agree for the most part that this verse ought to be rendered, with the Septuagint, 'For the leading of the leaders in Israel, for the willingness of the people, bless ye the Lord.'"—Sp. Com. So also R.V.

4.—Lord, when Thou wentest out of Seir.—"This passage occurs again in nearly the same words in Ps. lxviii 7—9, and is imitated, though less closely, in Habak. iii. 3—12. The three passages clearly relate to the same events, and so mutually explain each other. The subject of them is the triumphant march of Israel, with the Lord at their head, to take possession of Canaan."—Ibid.

15.—For the divisions of Reuben there were great thoughts of heart.—"Rather 'at the brooks of Reuben' or 'by the watercourses of Reuben' (R.V). There follows an ironical allusion to the result of these "great thoughts of heart;" they ended in nothing, and Reuben "abode among the sheepfolds to hear the bleating of the flocks." See Num. xxxii. 1—4.

18.—Zebulun and Naphtali were a people that jeoparded their lives.—These two tribes had raised 10,000 fighting men at Barak's call (iv. 10), who constituted the kernel of the Israelitish army.

20.—The stars in their courses fought against Sisera.—"Josephus relates that, just as the battle began, a violent tempest came on, with a great downfall of rain and a hailstorm, which driving full in the faces of the Canaanites so blinded and benumbed them with cold that they could neither use their bows with effect, nor even hold their swords. The description in this verse, coupled with the overflowing of the Kishon, makes Josephus's account very probable."—Sp. Com.

23.—Curse ye Meroz, said the angel of the Lord.—This curse is "for omission of service, where there was afforded a grand opportunity. So surely did the curse work, that Meroz is only known now as the city cursed for indifference."—A. R. Fausset.

26.—She smote off his head.—Rather, as R.V., "she smote through his head." He who sought to crush Israel with 900 iron chariots, was himself crushed with one iron nail."—Ibid.

THURSDAY, MAY 20.—JUDGES VI.

11.—There came an angel of the Lord.—This should be, as in R.V., "the angel of the Lord." It is one of the many illustrations this book affords of Isa. lxiii. 9: "In all their affliction He was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them."

13.—If the Lord be with us.—Gideon misunderstands and misquotes the angel, who had not said, "The Lord is with you," but "with thee," i.e., to deliver Israel.

16.—Surely I will be with thee.—In the Hebrew these are the exact words spoken to Moses (Exod. iii. 12), rendered there, "Certainly I will be with thee."

21.—There rose up fire out of the rock, and consumed the flesh.—As notable a miracle as that great sight which Moses turned aside to see, "why the bush was not burnt," and as significant, too, for there it set forth God dwelling in the midst of His people—"a consuming fire," yet in grace not consuming them. Here it is the Lord accepting their sacrifice, which, to satisfy justice, the fire out of the rock (i.e., from God) does consume. Hence the revelation of his name here is Jehovah-Shalom, "The Lord is peace."

25.—Throw down the altar of Baal.—This word, which came from the Lord "the same night," shows that peace with God must at once produce conflict with evil.

38.—I will put a fleece of wool in the floor.—Gideon's sign, whereby he sought to know "that Thou wilt save Israel," has had many an exposition of its mystical meaning. Perhaps the most satisfactory one is that which regards the fleece of wool as a type of Christ, on whom during his life rested in its fulness the grace and favour of God, while all around was dry, but in his death, and as its result, "made sin for us, who knew no sin," the grace and favour were on all around Him, whilst of Himself He says (Ps. lxxxviii. 7, 16), "Thy wrath lieth hard upon Me. Thy fierce wrath goeth over Me."

FRIDAY, MAY 21.—JUDGES VII.

2.—Lest Israel vaunt themselves against Me, saying, Mine own hand hath saved me.—The Hebrew word for "vaunt themselves" is literally "glorify itself." It is translated into Greek in the LXX. by the very verb used in Eph. ii. 9: "Not of works, lest any man should boast."

5.—Everyone that lappeth of the water with his tongue, as a dog lappeth.—"It has been much discussed whether the moral qualities of those who drank were shown by their lapping, and bowing down upon their knees respectively, or whether it was entirely an arbitrary division. But it can scarcely be doubted that those who threw themselves upon the ground and drank freely were the more self-indulgent; while those who, remembering the near presence of the enemy, slaked their thirst with moderation, and without being off their guard for an instant, were the true soldiers of the army of God."—Sp. Com. This view, which is that also of Keil and A. R. Fausset and J. N. Darby, is the opposite of that taken by Josephus and Theodoret, who regard the 300 who lapped as instigated by fear, and the 2700 who went down on their knees as "men of courage."

15.—Blew the trumpets and brake the pitchers.—See 2 Cor. iv. 7, which contains a manifest allusion to this. The "trouble," "distress," "perplexity," and "casting down" which attend the proclamation of the Gospel of Christ answer to the breaking of the earthen vessel, that thereby the light from within may the more shine forth.

SATURDAY, MAY 22.—JUDGES VIII.

1.—They did chide with him sharply.—"The success of Gideon's enterprise mortified their pride as the chief tribe, seeing that they had played a subordinate part (comp. Judges xii. 1).—Sp. Com.

8.—The men of Penuel answered him as the men of Succoth had answered him.—"Fear of Midian's vengeance, pusillanimous regard for self alone, and contempt for the smallness of Gideon's force (300 pursuing 15,000), whereby they betrayed their unbelief towards God, actuated the men of Succoth (and Penuel). Their seemingly prudent policy proved to be most imprudent. The venture of faith is the true wisdom, and in the end furthers one's best interest."—A. R. Fausset.

23.—I will not rule over you . . . the Lord shall rule over you.—A noble answer, indicative of true faithfulness to the Lord, but followed, alas! in the next verse by a sad falling away, covetousness being apparently the temptation (see 1 Tim. vi. 9).

27.—Gideon made an ephod thereof.—"Gideon, to whom the Lord had manifested Himself directly, as He had not to any judge or leader of the people since the time of Joshua, might suppose that he was not acting in violation of the law, when he had an ephod made, and thus provided himself with a vehicle for inquiring the will of the Lord. His sin, therefore, consisted chiefly in his invading the prerogative of the Aaronic priesthood, drawing away the people from the one legitimate sanctuary, and thus giving an impetus to the relapse of the nation into the worship of Baal after his death."—Keil.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE
MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

THIS Society is employing nearly 130 earnest, faithful, and experienced Readers—most of them in the poorest localities in the Metropolis—who visit from house to house and room to room, bringing the Word of God to the poor, the sick, the erring, and the outcast; they also help generally in the spiritual work of their respective parishes.

Unless speedy help is received several grants must be withdrawn for want of funds.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION FOLLOWING UPON LARYNGITIS.

CASE of Mrs. WARD, of OSWESTRY.

It is nearly two years ago since this patient commenced my treatment. She was then residing at Leeds. There had been "Consumption on her father's side." She had been ailing for some time, and disease had been insidiously making its way. At the time her husband wrote for her, "great loss of flesh over the whole frame, with corresponding weakness," was reported. "Very heavy perspirations, very delicate stomach, appetite next to nil, hard harassing cough, with mattery expectoration, pains in the chest, and difficult breathing."

In one month, "my wife feels a little better, cough slightly abated. The heavy and damp weather affects her breathing. The Liniment you prescribed has been used with beneficial effect."

In another month, after being away and returning to Leeds, though improved in some respects the breathing got worse again. Advised to remove from Leeds. It was some weeks before she did so. Moreover, circumstances prevented for a time that regular continuance with the medicine which is so essential to recovery. Also an attack of acute rheumatism, laying her by for a time, needed her having the attention of her own doctor at home.

After this she was removed to Oswestry, and recommenced a more regular course of my medicines. Writing me herself in May last, she says:—"Your medicine has been the means of restoring me so far. I have recommended it very often, and to all that have tried it it has done good."

Other correspondence followed, to the end of the year. When writing to me she says:—"I can say truthfully that I owe my life to the use of your Balsam. Had not your treatment been unfortunately suspended at different times I should have been cured much sooner."

Although this letter was sent me for publication I thought it better to wait through the winter. In a letter just received, dated April 7, she writes:—"I have never got through any winter so well as this. I am able to attend to my duties, which I could not for years. May God spare you long for your good work. I am a walking wonder. I gladly bear my testimony, which you can make known as you please. With many, many thanks.—Yours truly, Hannah H. M. Ward, 2, Larne-terrace, Albert-road, Oswestry.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

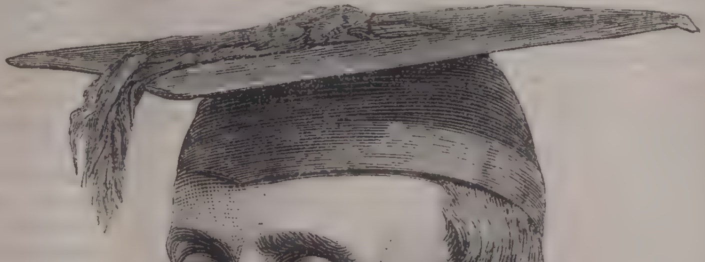
THE LATE

REV. HENRY BAZELY,

Oxford Evangelist.



"Of whom the world was not worthy." These are the words that involuntarily come to our mind as we close a somewhat hurried perusal of the memoir of HENRY BAZELY,* whose portrait it is our privilege this week to present to our readers. There are many modern biographies that could well be spared, but this is not one of them. The editor deserves most cordial thanks for the evident fidelity and impartiality he has shown in preparing the volume, so as to give a clear and uncoloured picture of a truly remarkable and blessed life. We venture to think that no person who is in the least degree open to good and holy influences could read this memoir without feeling the inspiration of such a fully consecrated life, and without being strongly moved to desire the like consecration of soul and unswerving obedience to enlightened conviction. Would that a copy of the book could be placed in the hands of every thoughtful young man throughout the English-speaking world.

Henry Bazely was but a few months more than forty years old when he was taken into the presence of the Master he loved so well, and served so faithfully. Yet he did a work for God and man in the city of Oxford that will keep his name and memory green for many generations, in the hearts of all classes of the community in that classic centre of the world's wisdom and learning. For God was with him, and gave him favour with the people. Born in the East-end parish of Poplar, where his father was then Rector of All Saints' Church, he early showed unusual intellectual gifts. These were developed by a liberal education, and by travel. At the age of nine he wrote a journal of a tour in Switzerland, the extracts from which, given in the memoir, justify the remark of his biographer, that it was "a startling performance for so young a child." At the age of thirteen he entered Radley College, where he soon manifested that independence of thought and action that were such distinguishing marks of his after life. The teaching at Radley's, according to the biographer, was largely tinged with "the mystical in religion and the sensuous in art," which were equally abhorrent to the young student. "The result was a recoil of his religious nature from the system of the Anglican Church which he never recovered." Proceeding in due course to Oxford University, he ranged himself with those belonging to the Evangelical school of theology. His active and inquiring cast of mind led him into the study of questions relating to Church government. A good deal of space in the memoir is given to a record of his mental studies and struggles on this point, but it is unnecessary for us in a brief sketch to follow that record in detail. Suffice it to say that, in opposition to all his early predilections, associations, and training, he reached the conclusion that the Presbyterian system of government, as seen in "the Constitution of the Church of Scotland by law established," was most in accordance with the teaching of the New Testament. He visited Scotland on several occasions, and passed some time at Aberdeen University; though he discovered, to his unconcealed disappointment, that many of the students, and even of the ministers of the Church of Scotland, were very different, in a spiritual sense, from what he had hoped and expected, he finally decided to join that communion. In it he remained till the time of his death. He gratuitously ministered for a time at a Presbyterian Church in Stepney, and afterwards built a church, at his own cost, in a poor neighbourhood of Oxford, of which he was pastor when he was called to his rest in 1883.

Though strong in his convictions on ecclesiastical and doctrinal questions, Mr. Bazely was essentially and by choice an evangelist. It was to that department of Christian work that he devoted his best energies, with a consuming zeal and a dauntless courage that made him a great power for good in Oxford and elsewhere. Early in his University career he became associated with Rev. A. M. W. Christopher, of St. Aldate's Church, at whose Saturday evening meetings for undergraduates he met with others like minded. After he had formally forsaken the ranks of the English Establishment, and on to the end of his busy life, he and Mr. Christopher remained fast friends and fellow-workers in every good cause. Commencing his evangelistic efforts with some student companions at a village near Oxford, he gradually extended the sphere of his labours. Henceforth he was only in his element when delivering the Gospel message to a crowd in the street, to companies in halls, barns, or cottages, to the Oxford Militia, to the miscellaneous throng on the racecourse, to the denizens of the lodging-house, to the fallen sisters of the city, or to the ones and twos with whom he came in contact.

At St. Giles's Fair, Oxford, which happens in the time of the Long Vacation, he and some friends set up, in 1869, a stall for the sale of cheap religious and wholesome literature, Bibles, periodicals, &c. As he had opportunity, he preached to the crowds of pleasure-seekers. This work he continued every year till he died. He attended the Oxford and Abingdon race meetings, as well as many other race and fair gatherings, selling the Scriptures and preaching the Gospel. So constant and unswerving was he in work of this kind, that one friend said, "If you want to find Bazely, you must look for him in a crowd."

The Martyrs' Memorial, Oxford, one of the most conspicuous and beautiful sites in the city, was a favourite scene of his open-air preaching. Every Sunday evening, when service was over in the churches, he was to be found at this spot (full of sacred memories), declaring the message of justification by faith, and pressing home the truth on his hearers with all the ardour and power of a gifted mind and a heart on fire. Says one of his helpers :—"Few indeed were the sermons preached in Oxford of equal clearness of thought, soundness of Scriptural exegesis, and nervous power, with those preached by Mr. Bazely at the Martyrs' Memorial." When preaching here, or at the annual Oxford boat-races, he wore the college cap and gown, as represented in our portrait.

His zeal as an Ambassador of the Cross frequently brought him into sharp collision with the Godless crowds at races, as well as with careless undergraduates at the Martyrs' Memorial services. On one occasion at Reading Steeplechases he was roughly handled. A fellow-worker gives the following account :—

> It was in the midst of great uproar, with a crowd of five hundred persons or more around us, that the cry was raised, "To the water!" The whole crowd began to hustle us down to the water-pump. We were very near to it, when a poor wretched woman (an "unfortunate") stepped up to us, and standing close beside us, said, "Well, if you put them in, you shall put me in too." It was this alone that saved us from being put in. We afterwards thanked the woman for what she had done, and got into conversation with her. She said our preaching had shown her the wickedness of her life, and she wanted to give it up.

Several years later, when preaching at the Martyrs' Memorial, some undergraduates tried to interrupt the service in a novel way. They had strewn gunpowder about the crowd, and more thickly round Bazely himself. At a signal lighted fusees were let fall, and at the explosion the crowd darted back in alarm. He remained unmoved and went on preaching as if he neither saw nor heard what was passing. In a few moments the people, seeing his calm demeanour, gathered about him as attentive as before. This was but a sample of the courage and endurance he displayed in his evangelistic labours. The notoriety he thus incurred was a sore trial to his great natural reserve and humility, but the love of Christ and of souls constrained him to brave any ordeal, if so be he could "compel them to come in." Not satisfied with simply meeting the spiritual needs of the poor, he generously ministered to their temporal wants. By far the larger part of his charity was expended out of his own hard earnings as a theological tutor. On himself he spent as little as possible. His biographer adds :—

> It is touching to remember that while sparing no pains to bring sunshine into the homes of others, he himself was living, until 1880, as a bachelor in lodgings, practising rigid self-denial, and allowing himself no superfluous comfort. . . . He was one who literally carried out the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount.

Another brief extract refers to his self-denying and successful efforts at rescue work among young women and other outcasts in Oxford :—

> There was no depth of human sin and suffering too deep for Bazely to stoop down and endeavour to help and save. That he repeatedly visited prisoners in gaol is not strange; but how many men would have dared to speak to poor street-walkers whom he met at night? He was so pure, so simple, and so well known as an evangelist, that he could do anything. He would even seek out these poor creatures in houses of ill fame. . . . Once he spent nearly a whole night in co-operating with the matron of a Home to prevent the flight of some who had been seized with a strong temptation to give up their effort at reform. He was successful as usual, but day had dawned before he returned, exhausted, to his home. For boys and men of a degraded stamp he made a great effort by establishing a lodging-house where they could have a night's rest at a less amount than they had to pay for the wretched accommodation offered them in the lodging-houses he visited on Saturday nights. He himself superintended all arrangements, and was present for a time every night to read and pray with the inmates.

Though Mr. Bazely loved to work among the poor and the outcast, there was no air of patronising condescension about him. He cared equally for all in his own sphere of life who needed his help. We read that even during the hurry of a mission in Leeds, at which he assisted, he found time to write often to a young University friend and pupil whom he had left very ill in his own lodgings. "The young man was in the last stages of consumption, and two strong reasons had led Bazely to bring him to his lodgings, and nurse him like a brother; though not poor, he had no home or parents in England, and he was also given to sceptical doubts about religion." This young man died trusting firmly in Christ, a result, says the biographer, "greatly due, under the blessing of the Holy Spirit, to the convincing argument of Bazely's Christian love and sacrifice. At his death he left all he had to Bazely, who at once executed a deed of relinquishment in favour of a relative of the deceased." Many interesting details are given in the memoir of the great influence wielded by Mr. Bazely over the undergraduates with whom he came in contact. He was much sought after as a tutor in theology, which he termed "the queen of sciences." As another instance of his thorough-going self-denial, it is recorded that in 1872 he left Edinburgh, where he was greatly enjoying the debates in the General Assembly of the Established Church, and travelled to the South of England to help a young University student who had fallen into difficulties through his own misconduct. Mainly through his influence the Oxford branch of the Y.M.C.A. was re-constituted in 1871. The large number of men employed as servants in the various colleges were objects of his special solicitude; at his suggestion a College Servants' Society and Reading-room was organised.

Thus his busy and beneficent life was spent, thinking little or nothing of himself, and ever devising some scheme or effort for the temporal and eternal good of all whom he could help in any way. In the midst of all this active and direct personal service he found time to take part in the controversies of the day. A long chapter in the book is devoted to letters he wrote to friends or to the public prints, on such subjects as the doctrines of the Plymouth Brethren, sinless perfection, eternal punishment, inspired psalmody, &c. He held exceedingly strong, and what would be thought by many, restricted views about the proper posture in public prayer, and the use of "uninspired" hymns. We read with deep regret in one of the appendices that the services in his church in Oxford have been discontinued, because Mrs. Bazely does not feel able to give her consent to the introduction of forms of worship (instrumental music and hymns) which would not have been approved of by her late husband. While we think he erred in looking on these questions as of vital moment, we regret still more that conscientious scruples on the part of his widow should be allowed to stop the flow of help in perpetuating such a noble work as he carried on.

The closing chapter, telling of Mr. Bazely's brief but happy married life, his illness and triumphant death, is one of the most touching and interesting in the book; but we must close our sketch with a reiterated expression of the hope that this inspiring record of a singularly devoted and fruitful career may be widely circulated, and that the mantle of Henry Bazely may fall on many of those whom he has left to mourn his loss.

REPEAL WORK IN INDIA.

May I, through your columns, beg the friends of righteousness and holiness of life to pray for our Purity and Rescue work in India. Now that the question of repeal will be before our rulers and people, let us try to make it more than a campaign to purify our statute-books. Let it, as far as possible, be made a war against all the various forms of immorality and vice.

I am anxious to have large quantities of Repeal and Purity literature to circulate all over India. As publisher of The Indian Purity Trumpet, I have excellent facilities for circulating such tracts and books. This is a real mission work; it will be used of God for the salvation of souls.—Yours, &c.,

Bombay, India. W. J. Gladwin.

LETTERS FROM ABROAD.—11.

SAN SEBASTIAN.

ON leaving Madrid, with its interesting and agreeable associations, we felt it necessary to set our faces towards home. But having long known the good work of the Mission of the American Board, whose headquarters are at San Sebastian, we determined to break our journey between the Spanish and French capitals by a day's visit to this delightful spot.

It would be difficult to imagine a more charming little summer watering-place. Situated on the shore of a tiny bay within the Bay of Biscay, with a miniature harbour, with a beach composed of the finest sand, and unusually firm, wide streets kept scrupulously clean, ornamental grounds carefully laid out, and edifices which would be a credit to any city in Europe, San Sebastian and its visitors soon become fast friends. It is also wonderfully protected from storms by sharp headlands at either side, and a small island situated in the midst of the opening of the bay. The surrounding country presents all the beauties characteristic of mountain and valley, and thus nature and art have combined to produce one of the most attractive health resorts in the world.

It is a striking fact that whilst the Church of God in England has so much neglected missionary effort in Spain and Morocco, both within a few days' journey, our American brethren are efficiently represented in both. Rev. Thomas Gulick has founded mission stations in several towns of Spain, all of which are now generally superintended by his brother William, from the centre of San Sebastian. Here a large house, splendidly adapted to the purpose, embraces under the same roof, schools, dormitories, chapel, printing-office, and dwelling-place. There is a felt want of trained teachers in Spain, themselves thoroughly embued with love to Christ, and competent to impart Christian and scholastic instruction. No sooner is a mission opened than the question arises, "Whom shall we get to teach the children?" for in them lies the hope of successful work. Mr. Gulick is thus rendering invaluable service by establishing senior schools for the training of teachers. There are at present about sixty pupils, of whom twenty are over fourteen years of age. Several of these come from a distance, being the fruit of evangelistic effort in their native towns. As fast as they can graduate they go to fill positions as teachers in evangelical schools; indeed the demand far exceeds the supply, and thus for the sake of the Gospel throughout Spain it is important that these training schools should be rapidly multiplied and efficiently maintained. In several towns we met young women who had shared in the benefits of this institution, and in each case they were spoken of most warmly by those with whom they are now at work.

Gospel meetings are held in the chapel, attended by from eighty to a hundred persons. It is often observed that when a mission station is first founded the services are well attended; but as curiosity dies away and persecution develops, and the people realise that the moral claims urged upon them are more strict than those imposed by the Romish Church, the attendance subsides to a smaller congregation of more or less faithful souls. These suffer many trials: they are visited by the priests and beatas, or devout women, who try to persuade them to leave the Protestant Church, and often procure their dismissal from work if they remain obdurate.

Last summer the first Conference of the Mission was held, and, naturally, was invested with especial interest. Nine stations were represented by the pastors and evangelists in charge of them. Two days were devoted to examination of the scholars, and the meetings of the Conference were attended throughout by the teachers of the school, and some twelve or fifteen of the older girls. As far as we were able to judge in so hasty a visit, Mr. W. T. Gulick is well fitted for the onerous duties which he successfully fulfils, whilst the happy, bright faces of the inmates of the seminary seemed to indicate a keen appreciation of what was being done for them, which was only equalled by their apparent anxiety to go forth and be of use to others.

In the evening of our visit we had the pleasure of addressing a meeting by interpretation, giving some account of what we had been witnessing of the Lord's work in other places.

From San Sebastian we travelled through to a journey of twenty-six hours. Here we were warmly received by our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Hermans, who have charge of the Sailors' Home which was opened by Lady Beauchamp last year. Although our stay was of but a day's duration, we gathered enough from our own observation, and from facts related, to realise the urgent need of such an institution at every port at which English ships are in the habit of calling. It almost passes comprehension how such atrocious swindles can be perpetrated by the crimps unchecked upon the sailors who arrive in port under the very eyes of the authorities, and still more that the sailors themselves can submit to be so taken in by these wretches again and again, when past bitter experiences must have opened their eyes to their character. But poor Jack is full of excitement as he nears the dock, and ready to shake hands with the first person he meets. Even before his feet touch land, the vessel is instantly boarded by a number of crimps representing the worst and lowest places in the town. Each crimp is provided with a bottle of spirits, in many cases most probably drugged. With this the sailor is freely plied, so that often, when the vessel is scarcely moored, the crew are more or less intoxicated and hardly able to do their duty. In this state they are easily led away by the crimps to their low resorts, where most frequently they are robbed of their hard earnings, thus causing misery to themselves and their families dependent on them.

If they do not succeed in decoying the men by drink, or to follow them into dens of infamy, these crimps pose as agents for tailors, shoemakers, jewellers, &c., enticing the sailors to buy at their recommendation at the so-styled cheapest shops in town, where the crimp generally receives from 15 to 20 per cent. of the sum paid by the sailor. These purchases are usually contracted while the sailor is waiting for his pay, and, when on pay-day the crimps present their bills, there are not unfrequently imaginary items added, which the man is obliged to settle for. After being thus robbed, he is but too frequently hindered, for want of means, from returning home to his friends, and is shipped off again in another vessel on the first opportunity, the crimp taking care to pocket the unfortunate man's advance wages, in payment of real and imaginary debts.

Here exist also other crimps, who constitute themselves as "shipping masters," and who work hand in hand with those before named, and who, after the men have been decoyed from their ships, arrange with the masters of vessels to supply a fresh crew, for which they demand an extortionate sum as "shipping fee," or "security for crew." Such fee amounts to ten, fifteen, and often twenty francs per head from the shipowner, and the same amount is extracted from the sailor. He often resents such extortions, when difficulties occur in inducing him to join the ship. He is then often put on board under the influence of drink, and wholly unable to do his duty, thus involving great danger to life and property.

The object, then, of the Sailors' Home is to counteract in some measure these gross abuses, by providing good lodging, &c., where sailors will not meet with the same temptations to spend their money fairly or unfairly. Indeed many are glad to deposit it in the hands of Mr. Hermans, who either keeps it until they require it, or sends it direct to their friends, reserving only as much as will suffice to pay the depositors' expenses home.

In order to get hold of the sailors, two men are employed in the uniform of the Home to board the incoming vessels and use their influence against that of the crimps. But they are necessarily without the persuasive eloquence of the grog-bottle, and so the majority decline their advice. Some declare they will "come in a day or two," but they "must have a bit of a spree first." This generally means that when all their money has been swindled out of them they come to the Sailors' Home for help. Every evening, too, there is a Gospel meeting for as many as are willing to attend, and many who have entered the Home without Christ have left it rejoicing in the pardon of their sins.

Mr. and Mrs. Hermans are constantly receiving expressions of gratitude from their late protégés. An American, a professed follower of Ingersoll, writes:—

> The books you gave me I have read carefully, and I know that I was wrong in regard to the Divinity of our Saviour. I now believe all that a Christian teaches, but I feel none of that rapture or confidence of salvation that Christians describe. My old mother wrote me lately, and in her letter said, "I hope my boy prays to God" (she didn't know the belief that I had held), and it set me wishing that I was a Christian, if only for her sake.

From one who was led to Christ during his stay at the Home:—

> Could you please tell me of any books that I could get about the Bible?—I mean explaining it; for I am asked several questions about it, and I should like to be able to answer better than I can at present. I feel and believe that I was indeed born again that Sunday night, and shall always thank God for it.

Crossing the river, we visited the sister Home at Honfleur, which is also under the supervision of Lady Beauchamp, and committed to the care of a very devoted Christian man and his wife. In both the accommodation is exceedingly good, the rooms being comfortable, large, and airy, while the food is far above the average of what is provided at such institutions.

We were glad to make the acquaintance of Mr. Whelpton, the Wesleyan minister, a devoted and consecrated man, and his helpful wife. We visited his chapel, and found over fifty gathered at the mid-week meeting, which he was conducting in French. We were told that this work is largely supported from his own means. He is doing excellent work with his ministerial colleague and some earnest workers in his congregation.

The Missions to Seamen have also a station here, under the superintendence of Mr. Heppell, formerly of Whitby, an able man, who seems suited for a wider sphere than he at present occupies.

From Havre we returned home viâ Southampton, with hearts full of gratitude for the good hand of the Lord upon us during our very pleasant, instructive, and profitable tour.

R. C. AND G. E. MORGAN.

"IT MIGHT BE DONE, AND ENGLAND OUGHT TO DO IT."

By Rev. WILLIAM PARK, Belfast.

These words, I am sure, are familiar to many. They are the motto of a picture which was exhibited in London last summer. An old sailor, in his sea-side home, is listening to his daughter, who sits at his feet, and reads to him a book of Arctic exploration and discovery. The narrative has a strange fascination for him. Much has been done, and done bravely. The Northern Seas, it is true, have as yet refused to yield their secret; but he feels that secret might be won by brave hearts and skilful hands. What a shame, if other nations should snatch the prize from England, which has so long been undisputed mistress of the seas! He wishes that he were a younger man, that he might himself attempt it. "It might be done," he says, "and England ought to do it."

There are few regions into which Englishmen have not made their way. Great are the obstacles which impede free communication between land and land—high mountains and stormy seas. But great also is the thirst for discovery in human hearts, and great the desire for money-making and gain; and so, one by one, those obstacles have almost all been overcome. To a certain extent also it is true that, wherever Englishmen pierce their way, the Gospel of Christ is sure to follow. In some cases missionaries have themselves been the discoverers, and have carried the Gospel with them into new lands. John Williams discovered the beautiful islands of Samoa, of which we have lately heard so much, and planted the flag of Gospel truth upon them; and ere he died he saw all their idols abolished. David Livingstone pierced his way through the jungles of Africa, his Bible in his hand, and held out the flag of peace and brotherhood to the nations; and now along the lakes and rivers which he discovered we see rising, not a long line of fortresses to conquer and oppress the savage peoples, but a line of mission stations, to establish among them the happy dominion of the Prince of Peace.

Yet how black is the world still, as we look at it on the missionary map! The work of discovery is almost coming to an end; there are few spots on the earth's surface which the foot of man has not trodden. But the grander work of conquering the world for Christ is only just beginning. Who can doubt that the whole earth might be won for the Master, if the Church were only in earnest about it? What nation is so well fitted to take the lead in this noble enterprise as England? God has lifted her high among the nations; He has poured out on her the richest blessings of civil and religious liberty; He has liberally endowed her with men and money to carry on this work. It might be done, and England ought to do it.

But I will turn to myself. There are many things about which it can be truly said: "It might be done, and I ought to do it." Did you ever notice the beautiful words in the Gospel of Matthew xiv. 35, 36? "And when the men of that place knew Him, they sent into all that region round about, and brought unto Him all that were sick; and they besought Him that they might only touch the border of his garment; and as many as touched were made whole." Is it not a beautiful thought—men going into all the country round about, searching for those who were sick, that they might bring them to Jesus?

I try to picture a case to myself, to make the thing clearer. In a village not far from Capernaum a young woman lies a-dying. She is a wife and mother; her husband is in despair; her neighbours weep with them, and feel deeply for them in their heavy trial. But what can they do to help them? Every remedy has been tried in vain. One morning early, almost before the dawn, a knock is heard at the door. A neighbour has been in Capernaum; he has seen the great Prophet. Virtue seemed to be flowing out of Him on every side. All who touched Him were instantly made whole. He has heard that, early in the morning, He would pass quite near to this little village. He has come to tell his friends. "Get her up," he says; "dress her quickly; some of us will carry her and place her in the great Prophet's way. Who can tell but He may take pity on her, and suffer her to touch Him? He has healed cases as bad as hers." Ah! I think I see the stir in that house that morning; I fancy I see the colour returning to that deathlike cheek. I can almost hear the grateful husband's words, as, falling on his knees, he thanks God for this great Prophet whom in mercy He has sent to refresh his weary heritage. And so the excitement spreads. Everywhere the sick are searched out by kindly friends, and placed in the path of Jesus. And as many as touched Him were made perfectly whole.

How little we think of the sick and suffering around us! If some great healer appeared in the streets of one of our large towns to-day, we would see many a sight that would surprise us. Door after door would open, and from houses in which we knew not there was any sickness at all, diseased and wounded ones would be carried out, till the streets would be full. Some of these sufferers have perhaps concealed their ailments hitherto even from their nearest friends; but now all shame and fear are forgotten, swallowed up in the hope of feeling his gracious touch and hearing his words, which bestow health and peace. Ah, if we only realised how much pain and sickness surround us at every moment, it would make us ashamed of our selfishness, and drive us to God in prayer, asking Him to use us, and make us useful to suffering men.

It is ours still to search out the sick and bring them to Christ to be cured. If we go to the houses of the poor in the spirit of love, and by careful nursing and medical skill seek to relieve and restore those who are diseased, what are we doing but trying to bring them within the range of the healing power of Christ? These things are but the means through which the Great Physician works, in healing the bodily diseases of men. There is noble work to be done here, not only by charitable societies of all kinds, but by every individual.

Christ, however, always puts the soul before the body; sometimes He even refused to heal the body till the state of the soul had been attended to. If we please Christ when we search out the sick poor, and try to cure them by the means which in his gracious providence He has provided, we please Him quite as much, to say the least, when we search out the sinful, those who are sick with the disease of sin, and try to bring them to his side. True, we cannot make their healing sure. Friends might tell the sick of Christ, and excite their hopes, and carry them into his presence, and beg Him to have mercy on them; but if the sick man did not himself call on Christ for mercy, if he did not stretch out his hand and touch Him, it is doubtful whether he would be cured after all. We cannot save men; the free human will must give itself to Christ. But there is much we can do. If only we were to go from house to house, wherever we could find admission, with kindly, loving words; if only we were to search out the sinful and unhappy, and tell them of Jesus, the great healer and comforter; if only we were to take their cases, one by one, to Christ Himself, begging Him to look on them and help them, and to make them willing in the day of his power, who dare doubt that the old scenes of Christ's days would be repeated in a higher and a grander sense, and that great multitudes, cured of those diseases which would have made eternal life and peace impossible, would be seen following Christ, praising and blessing his holy name? It might be done, and we ought to do it.

Yes, I ought to do it. But what can I do? I am to do only what I can; God asks no more. And if I do what I can, freely and heartily and always, God alone can tell what the results may be. I can at least take up one case, the case of some sinful one I know, and pray and labour for that one man or woman, until the Great Physician shall complete the cure.

"It is not mine to run with eager feet
Along life's crowded way my Lord to meet.
It is not mine to pour the oil and wine,
Or bring the purple robe of linen fine.
It is not mine to break at his dear feet
The alabaster box of ointment sweet.
It is not mine to bear his heavy cross,
Or suffer, for his sake, all pain and loss.
It is not mine to walk through valleys dim,
Or climb far mountain heights alone with Him.
He hath no need of me in grand affairs,
Where fields are lost, or crowns won unawares!
Yet, Master, if I may make one pale flower
Bloom brighter for Thy sake through one short hour;
If I, in harvest fields, where stray ones reap,
May bind one golden sheaf for love to keep:
May speak one quiet word when all is still,
Helping some fainting heart to bear Thy will;
Or sing one high, clear song on which may soar
Some glad soul heavenward, I ask no more."

HELPERS OF ONE ANOTHER.

When reading in last week's Christian of the League of Ministering Children, I thought it might interest your readers, and advance the cause, if I told you of poor children banding themselves together and helping each other and themselves. I refer to the Juvenile Branches of the Total Abstinent Order of the Phœnix. These societies are for the purpose of encouraging total abstinence and thrift. They are conducted on Gospel temperance lines, the meetings always opening and closing with prayer and hymns. The rules enforce obedience to authority, and the utmost decorum, indeed ceremonious courtesy. The girls are drafted into the women's lodges at 16, thus preventing their fatal falling away at the most dangerous age—as is often the case in ordinary Bands of Hope. The members, for a very small weekly sum, ensure their lives, and (in the case of adult lodges and lads) are entitled to a stated sum per week in cases of sickness.

I should be very glad if we could open a number of girls' lodges, to have enough to entitle the juvenile sisters to become a properly registered society, as the men's, women's, and lads' are. One adult is sufficient to manage a lodge, as the children are their own officers. A sensible working woman said to me, referring to the lassies being put into authority, "Anything which will make a girl feel herself of importance is a good thing." Although at first sight this seems strange, yet as she was speaking of poor girls she was wise. They are apt to be thought of little account, and thus lose self-respect. Our little women take an intelligent interest in the settlement of the business of their lodge. I have seen a bright little mite of six get up to second a resolution. They get trained in discretion also. The little innocent secrets of the Order, and all that passes during the meeting, are not talked about outside. The pretty scarves and emblems seem more suitable to small people than to their elders, and it is a pretty sight to see our juveniles in their open lodges, to which we cordially invite any who would like to see and inquire more, on Mondays, at seven o'clock.

THE SCAPEGOAT.

The Dean of Peterborough, in The Contemporary Review, argues that in Lev. xvi. 8, 10, 26, Azazel must be a proper name, and insists upon the rendering in the text of the Revised Version: "And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for Azazel." The R.V. gives the marginal reading "for dismissal," instead of "for Azazel." And the Edinburgh Reviewer (October, 1885), regarding the word Azazel as a concrete noun, with the signification "going far away," or "far removed," says we must translate "for an azazel, i.e., as destined to be far removed, or going far away." But this, says the Dean, "makes shipwreck of the passage by utterly destroying the balance of the clauses—'one lot for Jehovah, and the other for'—not a person, but 'for going far away.'" Azazel, he considers, must be regarded as "an evil spirit inhabiting the wilderness." Origen understands by Azazel the devil. This, then, is the interpretation of the ordinance as suggested by Dean Perowne:—

> To intimate to them by the significant rite which laid their transgressions upon the head of a goat, which was to carry them to the evil spirit as being rightfully his, and not their own, is no trivial or false conception, nor one which, apparently, conflicts with anything that we have been taught of God's method in redemption.

To us, on the contrary, such a conception appears utterly false, and "to conflict with" everything "we have been taught of God's method in redemption." For, if the sins are not ours, but the devil's, why was Jehovah's equal Son found in fashion as a Man? Why in that form did He die the death of the cross? Why did God send his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh? and on what principle did the Righteous Judge condemn sin in the flesh when Jesus died—if men's transgressions were to be "carried to the evil spirit, as being rightfully his, and not their own"?

But is the Dean right in supposing that the balance of the clauses necessitates a person in the second as well as in the first? The circumstances were these. It was the Great Day of Atonement, and the whole congregation of Israel confessed, through their priest, the sins of the past year. Having first offered a sin-offering for himself, he presents before the Lord the two goats, which he has taken of the congregation, and casts lots upon them—"one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for dismissal." For two facts are to be typically manifested: (1) that by the blood of the slain goat—or rather of Him whom it typifies—their transgressions are expiated, and the broken law is vindicated; (2) that all their iniquities and all their transgressions in all their sins are dismissed from God's remembrance, to be brought against them no more again for ever. Is not this exactly what the burdened sinner needs? and could it be more expressively exhibited than by the shedding of the blood of the first goat, and the dismissal, the removal, the going far away, of the other goat, laden with all their iniquities and all their transgressions in all their sins? "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." "Behold the Lamb of God which beareth away the sin of the world."

If the books of Moses were studied and taught, not only historically but typically, by professors and tutors in our theological halls and colleges, we should not have the people told from the pulpit, even by preachers who are regarded as evangelical, that the death of Christ made an atonement, but they don't know how or why. It may be taken as an axiomatic truth that no one is a thoroughly qualified teacher of the Gospel of God who is not well instructed in the types of Exodus, Numbers, and Leviticus. M.

"IT IS YOUR PRIVILEGE TO KNOW."

By Dr. G. F. PENTECOST.

In an after-meeting in the Memorial Baptist Church in Philadelphia, where we were holding some Gospel meetings, a gentleman rose and related his experience, or at least a part of it; as much as would bear upon the main theme of the evening, which had been to show how God would use us in very small acts of service and testimony. The gentleman told this story substantially as we relate it:—

"It was more than ten years ago, when Mr. Moody was holding his meeting in this city. The after-meeting, for men only, was held in the church on the corner of Broad and Arch-streets. I had left my store to go to that men's meeting. Upon arriving I found that the meeting was over, and the last of the men were coming out of the church. Being somewhat disappointed, I said to the first man I met—

"'Is the meeting over?'

"'Yes,' was his reply, 'the meeting is over; but are you a Christian?'

"I was somewhat startled by the question, for I had really never thought of this matter as a serious personal question. I was not a pagan, and therefore I had rested in the thought that so long as I had a respectful thought of Christianity, and nominally regarded Jesus Christ as the Son of God, I was a Christian. Nevertheless, I was arrested by the question, and in my haste I simply made answer—

"'I hope so.'

"The man then said to me in a broad Scotch brogue, which was very dear to me as being the tongue in which my father spoke—

"'It is your preevilege to know. The Saviour says he that believeth on the Son of God hath everlasting life.'

"This was all. He left me and passed on, or I left him and passed on, I do not know which. Nevertheless that single sentence took hold of my soul. I left the vestibule of the church and crossed over and took shelter under the porch of the Masonic Temple (it was raining), and there I paced up and down for an hour or more. The words of my strange friend, 'It is your preevilege to know. He that believeth on the Son of God hath everlasting life,' kept ringing in my ears. Finally I said, That is very simple, surely I can believe on Him; that is I can take Him at his word, and trust Him; just leave the whole matter with Him, as I would commit a business matter to an attorney. And that I did. Having done so there came to me a sense of rest; a kind of knowledge that a personal transaction between myself and the Son of God had been consummated, by which I became possessed of eternal life through Him. I went to my home and told my wife, and she, too, accepted Jesus Christ as her Saviour. The next morning I told my partner that it was 'his privilege to know,' as it was mine. I told my clerks that I had found Christ, and that it was their privilege to find and know Him. I have been telling the story ever since. That has been more than ten years ago. The peace of God has never left me. I have not been all that I ought to have been as a Christian, but God has kept my feet in the way, and I have ever since been confessing Christ as my Saviour, and have been telling others, as I have had opportunity, that it was their 'privilege to know,' that they had eternal life in Christ.

"I have never but once seen that friend who spoke to me; I do not even know his name nor where he lives. Once about five years ago, as I was standing on the platform of a street car, I saw my unknown friend standing on the platform of another car going in the opposite direction. I recognised him in an instant, but he was gone by before I could hail him, and my time would not allow me to turn back and seek him out. I have longed to see him and thank him for his timely and kindly word to me; for, under God, I owe him ten years of Christian life and peace. And now I have a strange sequel to relate. I came down here to-night to hear my old friend Mr. Pentecost preach. As I entered the door I started to find a seat in the far corner of the house, but for some reason one of the ushers told me to wait a moment, and he would try and find me a seat in the body of the house, and he brought me here and gave me this seat on the aisle. Why did he bring me here; what guided him? As I rose to speak my eye took in the side face of the gentleman sitting just across the aisle from me, and in a moment I recognised the man who ten years ago accosted me with the question, 'Are you a Christian?' and said to me, 'It is your privilege to know.' I have longed to see him and tell him what his word did for my soul."

With this the gentleman stepped half way across the aisle and put his hand on the Scotchman's shoulder, and said with a suggestion of tears in his voice—

"My dear friend, I thank you for your word. It led me to Christ and put me in the way of taking God at his word, which next to the fact of conversion, is the greatest blessing that man can have."

It may be readily imagined that the incident thus dramatically brought to our attention sent a thrill through the whole audience. A word in season, how good it is. Who of us know what a word may do? Alas! that so few of us venture to speak these little words for Christ and for souls. We may never know what such a word may do. We may never know until we are in glory the man who has spoken to us or to whom we have spoken, but no doubt in glory we will have meetings like the one described above. Let us be on the lookout for opportunities to say a word for Christ.—Words and Weapons.

A THANKSGIVING MEETING.

On Wednesday, May 12, members of various London associations, which have been engaged in combating the State regulation of vice, united in a thanksgiving meeting to praise the Lord for the recent victory obtained in the repeal of the English Contagious Diseases Acts. The meeting was called by the London Branch of the Ladies' National Association, and was presided over by Mr. Benjamin Scott, City Chamberlain. It was held in the Friends' Meeting-house, St. Martin's-lane, Westminster. The Chairman's address was a real note of thanksgiving, ascribing to God the glory, who had chosen the workers, fitted, inspired, and led them on, worked in and through them, till victory was obtained, and the iniquitous laws abolished. He referred to the Christian Convention, held on January 24 and 25, 1883, as Pentecostal meetings, where men of all Churches assembled, with one accord, to cry to God for help. From that date God began to show them that they would be victorious.

Rev. J. P. Gledstone, Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, Mr. William Fowler, and Mr. J. B. Wookey in succession led the meeting in prayer. Specially selected psalms were sung. After the devotional part of the meeting was concluded, a short address was given by the Right Hon. James Stansfeld, M.P., recapitulating some of the phases of the recent Parliamentary victory. He said that although fewer societies were needed their force must be united and consolidated to give impetus to the movement in our colonies and on the Continent of Europe, by aiding the British Continental Federation.

Mr. William Fowler, Miss Bewicke, and Mr. Percy W. Bunting, also addressed the meeting. Thanksgiving meetings of a similar character have been held in various provincial centres during the past fortnight, including York and Bristol.

FIVE WEEKS IN NAPLES.

By Mrs. JOSEPHINE BUTLER.

I should like to enlist the sympathy of your readers for the spiritual and moral state of Naples, and, above all, for that of our own countrymen living there. I have just been spending five weeks in that city, which has been the home for more than thirty years of my dear sister, Madame Meuricoffre. I do not know how to account for the fact that evangelists, holiness teachers, and others so rarely visit Naples. Many go to Italy, but they all seem to stop short at Rome, which is only six hours' ride from Naples.

I wish I could give you a picture of the Protestant colony of Naples. They are Swiss, German, French, English and Scotch, belonging to various evangelical churches of different nationalities. Although they are a considerable population, they are a mere handful in comparison with the vast Neapolitan population, who are, of course, Catholics. Society there is generally very corrupt. There is much darkness and ignorance of the truth, but there are a few noble exceptions. I have met men and women of the aristocracy of Naples who seem to have risen spiritually and morally to a standard high in proportion to the depth of corruption around them. I never met with truer or nobler persons.

But they are few, and they naturally, though sympathising with all that is good, do not bring any help to the Protestant colony. That colony has to support its own churches, schools, orphanages, associations of every kind, including a most excellent institution, started by my brother-in-law, called "The International Hospital," in which are received strangers from England, America, and all parts coming into port, who are subject to accidents, or fall ill of fever. I visited the hospital with my sister, and thanked God that there was such a place of refuge for strangers arriving in that city, where they can hear their own language spoken, and converse with kind friends about their homes and families; where the Bible is free, and they know that they are among sympathetic people. They are glad not to be sent to the great Neapolitan Hospital, where the influences would be uncongenial.

My brother and sister had meetings of different kinds for us during our stay in Naples, and I can testify to the fact that the people there are really thirsting for help, spiritually, and that they need help materially to keep up the institutions by which our own fellow-countrymen and others there are so much benefited. We had a meeting among the sailors of the men-of-war and other vessels. It was in a room of the Sailors' Rest, the atmosphere of which, even so early in the spring, was like the Black Hole of Calcutta! The men were so crowded that they were sitting on each others' knees. But, in spite of the close atmosphere, they seemed much interested and touched at hearing evangelical truth, lovingly and simply brought to them, and especially by any allusion to home and friends. The work of the Bethel and Sailors' Rest, lately established, is chiefly carried on by Stephen Burrows, the Harbour Missionary, for many years a sailor himself. He works with my sister and her group of friends.

We succeeded also in forming a Vigilance Committee, in connection with the National Vigilance Association lately created in England. The work of this Committee embraces that of the abolition of the "State Regulation of Vice," and consists in a strenuous opposition to the vices of that great city—vices which I could not describe in your pages. There is a kind of moral blight over the place, extending to Pozzuoli, and other places in the neighbourhood. It seems as if the worst corruption of the times of the Roman Empire had left a curse upon the land. One seems to breathe a sort of moral miasma, and, together with the haunting shades of classical crimes, there is much of the refinement of modern vice. This little Vigilance Committee is fighting a hard battle against fearful odds. Its members are very earnest, though they are only beginners. I should like to send them some encouragement and sympathy from England, and therefore I venture to ask that kind friends who have in the past been so willing to contribute to such needs would aid them by a few contributions. One of the treasurers is my nephew, John Meuricoffre, Pallasso Fraia, Reone Amadeo, Naples; or I would myself receive funds to forward to them.

It may interest you to know that already this Vigilance Committee has attained something. It has long been the custom for powerful men—physically dangerous through their great bodily strength—acting as agents of the houses of ill fame, to board all the vessels which arrive in port, without exception, and to thrust into the hands of the sailors and others cards of invitation, photographs, &c., of an indescribable nature. Any personal opposition to these creatures made one liable to be stabbed in the back, or knocked down in the dark. Mr. Burrows has fought them long and at great risk to his own life. He has always refused police protection, and when my sister offered him one day a large Danish dog, a powerful, silent creature with strange watchful eyes, he replied in his simple way, "Perhaps the Lord would not be pleased at my taking a dog." His trust in God has been justified, for it seems that there is now a sort of superstitious idea among those evil agents, that he has a charmed life, and that it is dangerous to touch him. He makes his way into the houses themselves.

An application, however, to the Questore (Head of Police) on this subject has been so successful that these agents are now scarcely ever seen on board the ships. A few who attempted to transgress the limit lately were arrested. The Neapolitans are not without good qualities. In one of our meetings I made a strong appeal to some of their best legal men, and pointed out to them the Articles of their own Penal Code (a very noble code) which are violated daily and hourly in the streets of Naples. The question of criminal vice and the application of the law against it is now being discussed, I am told, in Naples, and among the persons one would most desire to win.

We had a meeting also at Pozzuoli, for Sir William Armstrong's workmen, a colony of whom is settled there to start the great works for the Italian Government for the manufacture of torpedoes and gunboats. I have pleaded for these men elsewhere. A committee has been formed there also, of which my sister is the treasurer. It was very touching to me to see the eager gratitude with which our friends received a very modest present I managed to give them, and the manner in which they brought forward proposals for its economical use to further a work which in England would be considered worthy of support in the form of hundreds of pounds. The strain on their own purses is constant and great, as they are obliged to fight hard to keep up all their institutions (holding up all the while the highest standard in money matters) in the midst of hostile influences, of course without State or Municipal aid.

There are these things, then: The International Hospital, the Vigilance Committee, the Sailors' Rest at Naples, and the Workmen's Rest at Pozzuoli, which have all been hopefully started, and which it is a great strain on our friends to keep up. The opposition already excited by some of their efforts is of a nature which may be best described to you by the following fact: A young Neapolitan who was believed to be trustworthy had been selected and trained for the work of conducting newly arrived sailors to the Bethel, or the Rest. He was found to have been heavily bribed, and, unable to resist that temptation, was taking these sailors to resorts of the deepest infamy. The keepers of these dens and their friends were so enraged at the newly formed opposition, that they maltreated these poor fellows in the most horrible manner. After having first tempted them, they robbed and stripped them of everything, and turned them out into the streets. One was found stabbed in several places, stripped of all his clothes, staggering down a dark street. Another was flung, wounded and bleeding, into the sea. His body was found hanging across an anchor-chain, which had prevented him going to the bottom. Life was not extinct, and he was restored. He also had lost everything, and had not a rag of clothing upon him. Our brave friend, Mr. Burrows, is threatened at every step, and those who work with him are no doubt also marked out for vengeance.

Will Christian friends extend their sympathies to this group of brave workers whom I have just left behind me? It seems hard, after a winter of such distress as we have had in England, to tax the generosity of friends already so heavily taxed, but they will remember how many young countrymen of their own find themselves in this centre of corruption, and thank God that He has raised up some to defeat the purpose of the destroyer of souls in that place.

I have just received a letter from Mr. Burrows, and would be glad if you could add the following words of his to this letter:—

"The evil agents are giving drink gratis to the more foolish of our sailors, and this drink is drugged with a powerful narcotic. One of our seamen has been killed. The cry of these perishing men will speak to British Christians. We urgently need a Christian seaman to help here."

The Close, Winchester, May 10.

EVANGELISATION SOCIETY of VICTORIA.

The half-yearly meeting of this Society was held on March 16, in Collins-street Baptist Church, Melbourne, when the opportunity was taken advantage of to give a welcome to Mr. George Müller, of Bristol. Mrs. Müller also occupied a seat on the platform. The Hon. C. J. Ham, chairman, said the Evangelisation Society of Victoria was of an entirely undenominational character, and simply sent missionaries into the bush or up-country, or anywhere where they might be needed. Their object was to bring the truths of Christianity before the people, and then allow them to join whatever sect they wished. The arrival of Mr. Müller among them was very opportune, and as the meeting would, doubtless, be glad to hear him, he would not himself make any extended remarks.

Mr. R. Gillespie (secretary) said the Society, as the chairman had told them, was of a purely undenominational character. To show this he might mention that during the year there had been visited eleven Presbyterian churches, ten Wesleyan churches, seven Bible Christian churches, four Baptist churches, nine State-schools, one Church of England, one Congregational church, fourteen public halls, two Primitive Methodists, one Bethel, and one private house. They had visited altogether forty-two places, conducted twenty-one missions, and held 473 meetings, with estimated attendance of 95,000. The evangelists had gone back to the places they had previously visited, and found that many of their converts were now prominent members of churches. It was through the agency of this Society that Mr. Müller was personally invited to come to Australia. The Society could not be carried on without means, and £300 would be required to meet the ordinary expenditure. Besides this, the Society had in view extraordinary expenditure, as they contemplated bringing out one or two additional evangelists to this Colony.

Rev. A. Hardie gave a warm greeting to Mr. Müller in the name of the Presbyterian Church. The Chairman said it was a peculiar pleasure to him to welcome, in their name, and in the name of the Christian people of the colony, their revered friend, Mr. Müller and his wife. Mr. Müller, who was received with loud cheers, in the first place returned thanks for the hearty and loving welcome given to himself and wife. He then gave an intensely interesting account of his preaching work in various places.

SPIRITUAL REVIVAL.—A meeting for prayer, and for Conference on Spiritual Revival, was held in the City Temple on the afternoon of May 11, at 4 o'clock. The meeting was convened by private circular, the conveners being Revs. Professor Cave (Hackney College), Dr. Clemance (Camberwell), R. Balgarnie (Scarboro'), W. Crosbie (Brighton), and Dr. Wickson (London). Some seventy or eighty gentlemen were present, and about two hours were spent in prayer and conversation.

JESUS THE MESSIAH.*

This is a new and revised edition of a valuable work we have already reviewed, but which in its new and cheaper form deserves special notice, as it has now by considerable reduction of price—from two guineas to 24s.—been brought within the reach of a much larger circle of readers. The large sale and favourable reception already accorded to it—this being the third edition within three years—proves the high estimate formed of its value. Its author, being himself a Jew, and as such better fitted than any Gentile to understand and deal with Jewish modes of thought, having, moreover, at his command vast stores of Rabbinical knowledge, combines with these qualifications for the task he has undertaken the higher one of being a spiritually minded Christian, one who can not only portray the historical life of Christ, but can appreciate the object of his coming, as expressed in his own words: "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

As a scholar, too, Dr. Edersheim can hold his own against names however great. A favourable specimen of this occurs in a note on John iii. 2, where, having rendered the words "born again," born from above, he defends his rendering thus:—

"Notwithstanding the high authority of Professor Westcott, I must still hold that this, and not 'anew,' is the right rendering. The Greek word has always the meaning 'above' in the fourth Gospel (iii. 31, xix. 11, 23); and otherwise also St. John always speaks of a birth from God (i. 13; 1 John ii. 29; iii. 9; iv. 7; v. 1, 4, 18)."

Professor Westcott in his commentary on this passage chiefly rests his defence of the ordinary rendering on the fact that Justin Martyr, in quoting John iii. 3, uses the Greek verb used in 1 Peter i. 3, 23, which unquestionably means, "born again." But this only shows that Justin Martyr, or possibly the tradition of his time, so regarded it, but gives no answer to the argument derived from the Apostle John's own writings as to how he elsewhere rendered the word, or in his Epistles expounded the thought it contained. St. John is a better expounder of his own meaning than Justin Martyr could possibly be.

We give an extract from Dr. Edersheim's remarks on the anointing at Bethany (John xii. 3).

"It is at least not unreasonable to suppose—remembering the fondness of Jewish women for such perfumes—that Mary may have had that 'alabaster' of very costly ointment from olden days, before she had learned to serve Christ. Then when she came to know Him, and must have learned how constantly that decease, of which He ever spoke, was before his mind. She may have put it aside, 'kept it' against the day of his burying. And now the decisive hour had come. Jesus may have told her, as He told the disciples, what was before Him in Jerusalem at the feast, and she would be far more quick to understand, even as she must have known far better than they, how great was the danger from the Sanhedrin. And it is this believing apprehension of the mystery of his death on her part, and this preparation of deepest love for it—this mixture of sorrow, faith, and devotion—which made her deed so precious that wherever in the future the Gospel would be preached, this also that she had done would be told for a memorial of her. And the more we think of it, the better can we understand how at that last feast of fellowship, when all the other guests realised not—no not even his disciples—how near the end was, she would 'come aforehand to anoint his body for the burying.' Her faith made it a twofold anointing; that of the best guest at the last feast, and that of preparation for that burial which, of all others, she apprehended as so terribly near."

It is, however, much to be regretted that Dr. Edersheim's remarks on John xx. 23 are so unsatisfactory. In the first place, while admitting, with Dr. Westcott, that our Lord's words, "Whosesoever sins ye remit," &c., were not addressed to the Apostles alone, but to others also, he gets rid of the practical bearing of this fact, by saying that "the power of forgiving and retaining sins (which he regards as disciplinary power) was primarily bestowed on the Church, and exercised by her through her representatives, the Apostles, and those to whom they committed rule.

That is, our Lord conferred upon all present what the Apostles appropriated to themselves and those upon whom they chose to confer it! It is in keeping with this, that he says, "in the exercise of which power (as it seems to the present writer) the authority for the administration of the Holy Sacraments is also involved." Dr. Edersheim's remarks on this passage confirm the conviction that the disciplinary view is wrong, and that it refers to the forgiveness or retention of sins connected with the proclamation of the everlasting Gospel.

THE GOSPEL OF FATHERHOOD.

Notes of Sermons preached at Highgate Congregational Church, 1885—1886. By Rev. J. M. Gibbon. Whiting & Co., 32, Sardinia-street, Lincoln's-Inn-Fields. 4s. The preacher is the successor of Rev. J. Viney, Congregational minister of Highgate, and has already attracted a largely increased congregation. There are many precious truths, eloquently, elegantly, poetically stated, in these eighteen sermons. They have been highly spoken of by some of our contemporaries, and we gladly endorse their praises so far as we can. But we hesitate at the title. What does the Gospel of Fatherhood mean? We find no such description of the Gospel either in the Evangelists, the Acts, the Epistles, or the Apocalypse. We find, indeed, "the Gospel of the Kingdom," but the preacher says:—

> I am tempted to anger when I see how men are trying to eclipse God's Fatherhood under the paraphernalia of Kinghood, who turn worship into court etiquette, reduce adoration to ceremony, and who speak of heaven itself as if it were the court of an Oriental despot on a larger scale. I hunger for the Father, and say with Philip, "It sufficeth us."

The context shows that this sentence specially refers to Ritualism; but it also clearly indicates that in the preacher's mind the relation of man, as man, to God, is that of a child to a father, rather than that of a subject to a king. And this is corroborated by other passages:—

> This brings us to the last question: What is God to us, what are we to God? . . . What, then, is God? "Our Father, who is in heaven;" and men are his children. "The Spirit Himself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the sons of God." . . . Here, then, is the ground of our faith: Man has a capacity for life: God a desire that he should live. Man on his side says, "I would live." God answers, "I would have thee live." Man is the child, God the Father. Is it not enough?

Here, and elsewhere, Scriptures written concerning the saints are applied to all men. The fact is overlooked that when the son of a king has committed a crime the privileges of sonship are forfeited until the crime has been expiated. One of the noblest records of English history is the committal of Henry Prince of Wales, by Judge Gascoigne, for an offence against the law.

The great defect of the teaching of this book is that it fails to distinguish between this sonship of all men to God in Adam, and the sonship of believers to God in Christ. The first is by natural generation. In regard to this, we have indeed a relation to Christ, in consequence of his incarnation, as He was a son of Adam, and we also are sons of Adam, who was a son of God (Luke iii. 38). But the second is by regeneration. By faith we are identified with Christ in his death and resurrection, and thus the believer dies out of his relation to the first Adam as his representative head, and is raised up into a new life in resurrection, in which Christ, the second Adam, is his representative Head; as it is written, "God . . . gave Him to be Head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all" (Eph. i. 23). Thus the Apostle says, "Henceforth know we no man after the flesh; even though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now we know Him so no more" (2 Cor. v. 16).

At pp. 15—17 of the book there is a definition of "the Birth from above," which is defective because it entirely misses this great truth of identification with Christ in his death and resurrection—the truth that to be born again is to be born of the Spirit, and is as definite a reality as the former birth of the flesh: "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born the of Spirit is spirit."

We are in entire accord with the preacher when he asks (p. 8):—

> Why, then, do you say that Christ made, or bought, or in any way procured the love of God; when it was God's love that sent Him forth on his mission?—when God's love was before Bethlehem, else there had been no Christmas—before Calvary, else there had been no Good Friday? Was it not the love of God that gave Christ, that kept Christ in life, that received Him in death, and raised Him gloriously from death to kingship at God's right hand? How, then, say you that Christ procured the love that gave Christ to us?

Not only are we at one with the preacher in all this (except that it is not to present but to prospective Kingship that Christ has been raised), but we know of no evangelist or evangelistic preacher of the present day who says that "Christ procured the love that gave Christ to us," as though it had not emanated from the Father.

But on the next page we read:—

> Love built heaven, love made earth, love made hell: and its pains are the measure of God's love for goodness—its flames are love on fire! "He overthrew Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea; for his mercy endureth for ever;" and by the kiss or the rod; by caress or correction; by "gentle gales from the wings of angels that fan His Mercy-seat," or by hot blasts from the burning marl of hell; by the blood of Christ, and pleading love, or by fire and brimstone of punitive love, God will overthrow all evil in all men and beings, and will not rest until the Holy Spirit shall say of the New Creation, "It is finished:" for "God is love."

Against this kind of preaching we protest, for the same reason that we should object to an ambassador exceeding his written orders. However much we might desire the restoration of lost men and lost spirits, we do not find it in the Bible; and it is no kindness to sinful men to preach, without a line of Scripture warrant, that in those who die impenitent and are sent to hell for their sins, God will overthrow all evil, and bring them into the new creation. Granting that the atoning death of Christ will never lose its efficacy, it is certain that it can only avail to those who repent and believe the Gospel; and where is it stated or suggested that there will be any power or disposition in hell to repent and believe in Jesus? The ambassador who should promise amnesty to rebels in arms would be guilty of treason against the Government which he represented. Is it less treason against the Government of God to suggest a promise of deliverance to those who reject the offers of his grace?

The Gospel of Fatherhood, while it professes to be humanitarian and philanthropic, is the most cruel trifling with the souls of men. The natural heart only too eagerly catches at any excuse for procrastination, and the proclamation of salvation after death encourages sinners to sow to the flesh and reap corruption.

We do not concede to Mr. Gibbon, and those who preach in the same way, the exclusive testimony that God is love. We believe and testify that his tender mercies are over all his works; that the grace of God which bringeth salvation to all men hath appeared; that the fullest provision is made for the salvation of all men; that Jesus tasted death on behalf of every man; but we dare not, in the face of Scripture, promise that dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie, shall ultimately have a right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city.

SEAMEN IN RIO DE JANEIRO.—Dear Sir,—On Sunday, April 4, the opening services of the "Igreja Evangelica Fluminesse" (the "Rio Evangelical Church") took place. The building, which is capable of seating about 500, was quite filled. Hymns, printed in Portuguese upon sheets similar to those in use for anniversary purposes, were circulated, and the congregation very heartily entered into the singing. The sermon was a model of evangelistic simplicity and vigour, and was listened to with marked attention. The services during the afternoon and evening were equally well attended. During the week following, services were held every evening, with an average attendance of about 350. The pastor of the church is a Portuguese with an extensive knowledge of these people, their wants, habits, and prejudices; it is sincerely to be hoped that he may be long spared to labour in this most important work. * The Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah. By Alfred Edersheim, D.D. Longmans. (New and Revised Edition.)

"NOT BOUND."

The words suggest many figures of life, and liberty, and power. But especially do they remind us of the almighty power of God, in and by his Word. "The Word of God is not bound." It is free as the air; it is like the wind, that bloweth where it listeth. What a blessed thought, and how full of comfort!

Marvellous are the ways in which the Word of God is applied to the hearts of men—it is, indeed, "quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword." Of this we have an abundance of illustration in the little book, entitled "Not Bound," which is the report for the current year of the noble work of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures. It contains extracts of letters from many parts of the world, telling, in the simplest language, of what had been accomplished amongst people of all nations, some of them the most hardened and reckless, by the Word of God. Great has been the work done amongst the soldiers of other countries. An Italian soldier, having heard the word at Rome from the lips of Signor Capellini, when he went home told of what he had learnt. The family begged him to send them Testaments, which, through the instrumentality of this Society, he was able to do. They then met daily to read the Bible, and became active evangelists, the result being that numbers of the neighbours attended the meetings. When, by and by, Rev. H. Piggott went with a pastor to take charge of the community, they found a congregation of 400 persons ready to become members of a Protestant church, and we learn that the movement is spreading in the neighbouring villages. All this the fruit of a little seed sown in the heart of one soldier, by the simple reading of God's Word.

From Marseilles it is reported that 2200 Bibles and Testaments were given to troops about to sail for Toulon, the men receiving them with great thankfulness. From Spain, Bohemia, Italy, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, Austria, Finland, Russia, Turkey, Palestine, Armenia, Persia, India, Siam, Demerara, Jamaica, and Mexico, we have also marvellous proofs of the wonder-working power of the Word of God. To some simple people in their quiet homes it has come as the best gift they ever had—the gift of God, bringing with it untold peace and happiness. To some in foreign prisons whom, like the demoniac in the Gospel story, chains could scarce bind, so fierce were they, it has come and made them new creatures in Christ Jesus, at whose feet, as revealed in the Scriptures, they now joyfully sit, clothed and in their right mind. In far away places of the earth, sometimes by children, sometimes by the peasants, the good seed of the Word of God is scattered, and great is the result.

Grants of money are made to workers on the spot, who make use of all opportunities that present themselves for freely distributing this priceless gift. From the Santhal Mission, for instance, we learn that to forty Hindoo priests a Gospel was given, and some listened with tears to the glad tidings. In two days in Hungary 590 Testaments and Psalms were given among prisoners. Thus has this work been carried on, and God has wonderfully blessed the work. Grants amounting to over £8500 were made during last year for this work of the free distribution of the Scriptures. The closing words of the report must not be omitted from this brief sketch of the Society's work: "The work is done by free agencies, in order that the funds may be available for the purposes of the work, the opportunities for which are almost without limit, since eight hundred millions of the human race have never yet received a copy of the Bible, and never will unless we give it to them." We need scarcely remind our readers, who have generously aided this work in the past, that the devoted Hon. Secretary of the Association is Mrs. A E. Robertson, 1, Oak Hill-park, Hampstead, N.W.

BIBLE STUDIES.—15.

THE AGENCY OF THE HOLY GHOST SHOWN IN THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

I.—The key-note of the book is struck in chap. i. 2, showing that even Jesus Himself gave his commandments through the Holy Ghost (chap. i. 2). "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power" (chap x. 38).

["And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots: and the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon Him," &c. (Is. xi. 1—5.)]

(Here we have the secret of the Divine Servant's power, telling where alone we too may find grace and strength.)

II.—Baptism of the Spirit enduing (1) with power. "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto Me" (chap. i. 8). "They were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues" (chap. ii. 4; iv. 33).

(2) With boldness. "They were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness" (chap. iv. 29, 31).

III.—Taught by the Spirit (1) the words to speak. "Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, said . . ." (chap. iv. 8). "Agabus . . . signified by the Spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world" (chap. xi. 28). "Paul, filled with the Holy Ghost . . . said . . ." (xiii. 9—11). "Disciples . . . said to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem" (xxi. 4). "Agabus . . . said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost," &c. (xxi. 11).

(2) The step to take. "The Spirit said unto Philip, Go near," "The Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip" (viii. 29, 39). "The Spirit said unto Peter . . . Go with them" (x. 19, 20). "The Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul." "They, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed" (xiii. 2, 4). "They were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia . . . they assayed to go into Bithynia: but the Spirit suffered them not (xvi. 6, 7).

IV.—To be filled with the Spirit an essential qualification for office. "Look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom . . . They chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost" (vi. 3, 5). "They sent forth Barnabas . . . he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith." (xi. 22, 24).

V.—A gift sought for all disciples in the early Church. "Repent, and be baptized . . . and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, for the promise is unto you . . . and to all that are afar off" (ii. 38, 39). In Samaria the Apostles prayed for the converts "that they might receive the Holy Ghost" (viii. 15—17). "The Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word" (x. 44—48). "The disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost" (xiii. 52). "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? . . . And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them" (xix. 2—6)

VI.—Recognition of the Spirit as the Inspirer of Scripture. "Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers" (xxviii. 25). "The prophets . . . searched . . . what or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify" (1 Peter i. 10—12). "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Pet. i. 21; 2 Tim. iii. 16).

"How much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" (Luke xi 13).

"The Holy Ghost whom God hath given to them that obey Him" (Acts v. 32).

"The same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon Him" (Rom. x. 12).

ENCOURAGEMENT TO OPEN-AIR PREACHERS.—A young man, walking up High-street Margate, was invited to a Gospel meeting at the Y.M.C.A. At the close of the service one of the workers asked him if he had given his heart to the Lord Jesus. After some conversation the young man said to the worker, "Would it surprise you to hear that you were the means of my conversion?" He went on to say that one evening last summer he had been present at a meeting on the Sands when the worker was speaking from the text, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." The Holy Spirit sealed the word to his soul, he went home, and, alone in his room, sought and found pardon in the precious blood.

APPRENTICED TO DEATH.

Sold to the round of the prisoner's tread,
Sold as the living is chained to the dead,
Sold every day in the market of man,
Sold into bondage and set under ban,
Sold in the darkness away from the sight,
Sold at the noontide as well as the night,
Sold beyond help, without wishes or willings,
Sold for a trumpery handful of shillings!

They are bought, they are sold,
But not valued at gold:
Human chattels are choice, human chattels are cheap.
When but souls will be slain,
Do we ever complain?
We have sown to the wind, and the whirlwind we reap.

Sold to the freezing, and starving, and fog,
Sold for far less than your favourite dog,
Sold to the service the lip cannot name,
Sold to the shadow and torture of shame,
Sold for the crown of a funeral wreath,
Sold unto sin and apprenticed to death.

How long, O just Heaven, how long
Shall this traffic in ruin and wrong
Go wrecking our flowers with its flood—
This traffic in flesh and in blood?

Sold in the shambles by those you make poor
Sold to the sorrow unseen at your door,
Sold by the vice that you pamper and pet,
Sold for the pitfalls your own hands have set,
Sold in their weakness the children you know
Sold from the depths to yet deeper below,
Sold for the cost of mere luxury's frillings,
Sold for a beggarly handful of shillings!

They are sold, they are bought;
It is nobody's thought;
Human chattels are cheap, human chattels are choice;
For the slaughter of souls
Not a bell ever tolls;
Not a watchman in warning will lift up his voice.

Sold while you sit in your armchair and sleep,
Sold in their youth while they helplessly weep,
Sold for the blood-money you might have paid,
Sold because ease will not go to their aid,
Sold in their tenderness, blown like a breath,
Sold to the devil, apprenticed to death.

How long, O kind Heaven, shall gain
Get its winnings from murder and pain,
While our slothfulness, deaf to the knell,
Is accomplice in horrors of hell?

CHILDREN AND PUBLIC-HOUSES.

Last Saturday one million copies of an appeal signed by Mr. Samuel Morley, calling attention to the evils consequent upon children visiting public-houses, were distributed from house to house throughout the kingdom; and on Sunday, the 16th instant, special reference was also made to the subject by clergymen and ministers of all denominations. We understand that a similar effort is being organised by Cardinal Manning. The following is the text of Mr. Morley's appeal:—

"34, Grosvenor-street, W., May, 1886. Attention has recently been called to the large number of children who are constantly being sent by their parents and friends to public-houses to fetch beer and spirits, and who are thus exposed to great temptation, and are frequently the witnesses of scenes of a most degraded character, which must have a bad influence upon them. Were parents fully to realise the danger to which they are exposing their children it is believed that many would avoid the practice, and thus preserve their little ones from familiarity with sights and sounds which are certain to weaken the effects of all religious and moral training. As one deeply interested in the welfare of the young, and intimately associated with several of the societies established for promoting it, I earnestly appeal to parents and friends of children to do all in their power, both by precept and example, to discourage this dangerous custom, and thus to remove one at least of the many pitfals in the path of the youth of our beloved country.—Samuel Morley."

MADAGASCAR MISSION.—The London Missionary Society publish a report of this Mission for 1885, telling of the churches formed, the day-schools conducted, the Preachers' Society, the prayer meetings, medical missions, and general work. There have been no great changes during the past year. A large amount of information about the varied districts is detailed, with the results of work done, and future prospects. The reports point out, emphatically, the utter inadequacy of the present number of missionaries on the Island. In Imerina alone are some eight hundred churches, and the same number of schools. The pamphlet may be obtained from the Secretary, London Missionary Society, Bloomfield-street, E.C.

For the Young.

A ROSE-BUD WITHOUT THORNS.

It was bed-time in the nursery, and the evening prayers were said; only baby was kneeling, and the mother listened for the closing words of her short petition. They were these: "Oh, Lord, make me a sweet rose-bud without any thorns." And then the rose-bud face was lifted, and with little arms around her neck the mother asked—

"What did you mean about the rose-bud, dear?"

"Oh," said baby, "sometimes I get vexed, and I'm naughty, and dey's de torns."

"Yes," said one of the older children, "we call this beautiful nursery a little garden of the Lord, and we are the flowers in it, and if we are unselfish and obedient and gentle, our heavenly Father loves us, and is pleased, and if we are any other way the thorns hurt Him, and make us ugly and our garden is spoiled."

The mother turned with a thankful smile to the good nurse who stood by. She came from one of the cold north countries, where the mind seems to revel in beautiful fancies, and with a heart set on all things pure and lovely, she was leading the little ones of her charge to goodness and happiness by pleasant paths. Should we not look up with the faith and prayer of the little children, asking always to be made more like Him till the smile of the Lord is the feast of the soul?—New York Observer.

A LETTER ABOUT QUEEN VICTORIA.

My Dear Young Friends,

When I first heard that our beloved Queen was coming to honour our city with a visit to open the Liverpool Exhibition, my first wish was that the poor little children of Liverpool might share in the pleasure of Her Majesty's gracious visit; and as something to eat and some singing never comes amiss, I have arranged this little treat for as many children as possible to take part in—about 3000.

I hope you will all join in singing "God Save the Queen," remembering that it is really a prayer that our good and noble Queen may be blessed by God, the King of kings.

In the month of June Her Majesty Queen Victoria will enter on the 50th year of her reign, and, when we think of the splendid example she has set before her people during all those long years, our hearts should fill with love to her.

From a child she was brought up in great simplicity, and the little Princess might often have been seen trudging along in the rain, clad in thick boots and a cloak like any country girl. She has told us in her own words of many a wild mountain ramble and also of many visits to poor women in their little cottages, and in their times of distress and bereavement to comfort them.

When young, the habits of thrift and honesty were taught her, which would be the greatest help to every poor child who reads this.

She was never allowed to buy a toy or other article, unless she could pay for it out of her own little quarterly allowance, and if this was all spent, she had to wait until next quarter-day came round and she could honestly pay herself for what she wanted. When she became Queen at the age of 18 she paid all her father's debts (he had died when she was a baby).

From a child she was trained to be industrious, and early rising was enforced as strictly as if she had to work for her living. The result of these good habits is that never in her long reign has the Queen been known to keep people waiting. She is always punctual to the appointed time.

Lastly, do we not all know that in any trouble or misfortune Her Majesty's deepest sympathy is with "all sorts and conditions of men." Does a great and good man die? Her Majesty will visit his desolate home, or cable across the sea messages of condolence, or, if necessary, come forward and take upon herself the charge and upbringing of the friendless orphan.

Does any sad accident leave hundreds of toiling women widows and their children fatherless? Her messages of sympathy and anxiety to hear any particulars are prompt and kindly; her pecuniary help ever ready where needed.

Then let us believe that our loyalty and affection in return will really help to cheer her on her difficult path. She has been a good daughter, a good wife, a good mother, and a good Queen.

And let us all echo the poet Tennyson's words:—

"May all love,
His love, unseen but felt, o'ershadow thee,
The love of all thy sons encompass thee,
The love of all thy daughters cherish thee,
The love of all thy people comfort thee,
Till God's love set thee at his side again!"

Believe me, in the Saviour's service, a friend to his little ones. Louisa Birt.

A SALVATION ARMY RESCUE HOME.

"Come and see us when you like," said the young woman in charge when I called to inquire about a case they had taken for us. I may say that we are engaged in rescue work, entirely distinct from the Salvation Army. This was a very sad case, and though I am not going to write about one in particular, I cannot pass on without mentioning how lovingly this girl was received. We took her to the Home about seven o'clock one evening. After a little conversation concerning some money she owed, the attendant gently took off the girl's hat and jacket, saying, "Well, dear, stay with us, and we will help you to a happier and better life." Then we prayed, and the tears filled our eyes as we left her encircled in those loving arms. The remembrance of the girl's pale face, with hollow cheeks and sunken eyes, rises before me now, as six weeks later she said to us, "I can never thank you enough for bringing me here. I know God has forgiven me, but I want to be a credit to the Home and a comfort to dear 'Mother' for all her love to me."

Having had this little glimpse of the Home, it was with pleasure I looked forward to spending a day there. When I arrived the "Mother" was even busier than usual, one worker having left the previous day to open a new Home. So I went into the workroom and remained chatting until half-past twelve o'clock, when a helper came in with the girls from the kitchen. We all went down on our knees; "There is a fountain filled with blood" rose softly, and, as the chorus, "I do believe," was sung again and again, one felt that some hearts there meant what they sung. I have since proved the truth of this; the salvation of each girl is the primary object, and numbers are saved long before their training time is up.

After some prayer and more singing, work was resumed until the whistle blew for dinner. In the dining-room each girl knew her place, and stood until grace was sung. Then all became busy enough, the soft but animated talking, the gentle inquiry from "Mother" as to how H.'s throat was, and whether M. felt better to-day, all told that they have, and feel they have—the only thing that will win our poor fallen sisters, who so hate control of any kind—tender love. After dinner we sang grace on our knees, and had some prayer; then, as the girls went back to work, I had a little time with the babies, three such frail mites; one could see it was quite true they required "so much attention."

But I had promised to read to the girls. All day the gentle tones of the girls to each other struck me very much; but, as I read, directions were given in a whisper, and tears fell from many eyes. I felt how true it is "love shall conquer." By and by came tea, with a short Bible-reading after. Then on to our knees, and, after a chorus, one asked God to forgive her, as she had not been right all the week, and to cleanse her, and make her real and holy. Another in low, broken tones thanked God for what He had been to her, and her voice strengthened as she blessed Him for sending the Salvation Army to rescue her from such degradation. I afterwards learned that this woman had lived in open sin ten years; from a good position she had fallen into the lowest depths.

Now, for the first time to-day I was able to have a little chat with the "Mother" over some "difficult cases." As I heard the story of one and another, I wished that some who could so easily help had been sitting with us, that their hearts might have been stirred as mine was. But the "Mother" must never rest long. "A young girl wanted to see her;" so, while they talked, I read one more chapter to the girls. Then it was time to get ready for the meeting. As I watched the eagerness with which they prepared, the voices of the girls on the streets at midnight sounded on my ears, "We won't be shut up in a sort of prison!" and showed how wise this loving freedom is.

I bade good-night to the "Mother," who was still talking with the young girl. As I walked home I thought of some fond mothers who might give a thankoffering to God for their own fair innocent daughters of whom they are so proud; and of some big, loving hearts who would help this blessed rescue work if they only knew. The sad faces of the girls we talk to night after night passed before me, and I seemed to hear their despairing voices declaring they do not know what happiness is. I felt these girls might be saved, if those who have the means only knew, and did their part to enable these loving hearts, who are so successful in this work, to help all they reach. A. B. BISHOP TAYLOR'S MISSION.

Writing recently to an American contemporary, Bishop William Taylor says:—

I want by next December a young man and wife for Setta Kroo, where I have a young man—Bright J. Turner—preparing the way. I want also a man and wife for Cape Palmas, to open a good English school, to include book-keeping and surveying, if possible, and the lady to teach needlework, music, &c., to prepare the girls for practical industry and usefulness. I may not require this year more than the two men and wives aforesaid, but when I return to Liberia a year hence I shall need a large number, white or coloured.

All persons, white or coloured, who have the requisite qualifications for some department of these industrial schools among native tribes in Liberia and beyond, and who feel called by the Holy Spirit to this great work, will please communicate with Richard Grant, 181, Hudson-street, New York. If they satisfactorily answer his inquiries, he will, through the generosity of the friends of this movement, send them to my order in due time.

The garden spot of West Africa is Liberia. In soil, variety of productions and seasons, but few spots in this world are equal, and none superior to Liberia. As to healthfulness, speaking from experience, I have to say that I spent a month in Liberia a little over a year ago, and nearly a month recently, and never felt better in health, all the time, in the course of my life. Most persons may expect an attack of acclimatising fever, but by suitable treatment it will pass off in a few days.

TENT MEETINGS.

Dear Sir,—The summer with its abundant opportunity for tent work is now upon us, and I greatly desire to "pitch our moving tent" in many a promising field both in London and the country. Twelve tents belonging to this Mission were used in many places last summer, with most cheering results. The repair of these, with new canvas for some, recently, involved considerable outlay, and I am now waiting to send them forth with heralds of salvation to many needy spots where the Gospel of the grace of God may be proclaimed, we fully believe, to the salvation of many souls.

The Mission funds, however, are entirely exhausted. I am unable to move a step forward at present, in this matter, so that the help of the Lord's stewards will be most timely just now, and I should be glad if Christian readers will commend this matter to the Lord in prayer, so that the way may be speedily opened to utilise this practical means of carrying the Gospel to the unreached heathen of our own land.

GOING TO BUSINESS.—Mr. Thomas Greenwood, Lordship-park, Stoke Newington, London, N., asks us to state that he will send to those applying to him copies for distribution of his printed letter "Going to Business." It contains much good advice for those beginning business life.

AT WORK IN COLAR.

Dear Sir,—I arrived at Colar on November 25 last, having had a pleasant and profitable voyage, as one had opportunities for testifying to the Gospel of God's grace. My brief visits to a few cities and towns on the Continent were of much interest to me and profitable to my soul especially through Christian intercourse. At Florence I visited Dr. Comandi's Orphanage and work, and had much happy fellowship with him. To see a man thrown entirely upon God for temporal support of himself and his large work, and yet so graciously sustained so many years by God's mighty hand, and to have fellowship with one breathing such a heavenly atmosphere, was indeed a cause of thankfulness to me. It was equally joyful to me, and pleasant indeed to have had the privilege of becoming acquainted with Rev. J. R. McDougall, whose and Mrs. McDougall's kind hospitality I shared during my stay at Florence. At Rome I had the joy of meeting with Dr. Young, who works amongst the Jews, whose acquaintance I was very glad to make, he having been out in India.

We are going on with the Lord's work here, according to the ability and grace given us, seeking to make known only "Jesus Christ and Him crucified." We had two large annual fairs in our vicinity, which thousands resorted to for heathen worship and cattle-sale. The Lord Jesus was preached to these perishing souls by several of our brethren, some of whom are grown up orphans, truly converted to God. The result of the seed sown will one day be manifest.

Fourteen marriages took place to-day in our Orphanage, and therefore it is quite a joyful day to Miss Anstey's children. Some of these married couples are going out in a few days to the surrounding towns, where they will settle and engage in evangelistic work. We shall be thankful for prayer on their behalf, that they may be kept true to the Lord, in the midst of heathen darkness and demoralising influences.

It is a cause of great thankfulness that the once determined and persistent opposition of the people of Colar to hear the message of the Gospel of God's grace is melting away, and the high functionaries are apparently friendly towards us, with a few exceptions. Miss Anstey, the loved mother of the so many orphans, has been most enthusiastically welcomed back, and she is quite at home here, rather than at home (England).

Miss Bird, who has come from Clifton as Zenana medical missionary, is successfully getting on with the language, and will begin, probably this week, going into a Brahmin gentleman's house, whose wife, and some of her friends, would be Miss Bird's pupils; at any rate, it is hoped so. People are so suspicious of Christians and their motives in this dark country. Miss Steer, another worker, will probably be going to Bowering Pass in a few days to reach the darkened women of that place with the Gospel; and she, and all of us, much need your prayers.—Yours sincerely in the Lord,

F. J. E. Lakshman Rao.

The Orphanage, Colar, Mysore, March 30.

MOUNT HERMON ORPHAN HOMES.

Miss Cole has forwarded to us her twenty-second annual report, and a most interesting though brief record it is of "the Lord's tender dealings with her and her dear family of orphans during 1885." At times the very last penny was expended, but God never permitted the children to lack bread. 114 are now being maintained and educated in the Orphanage, of whom twenty were received last year.

The money contributed last year comprised gifts from many sources. One friend at Bray sent a monthly subscription of £10, as he has regularly done for many years. A small Convalescent Home at Margate is contemplated, toward which the requisite furniture has already been provided. Part of an old and long-standing debt still remains as a burden, and Miss Cole would be very thankful to be able to remove it. Her address is Mount Hermon, Cambridge-road, Kilburn, N.W.

MISS DE BROEN'S BELLEVILLE MISSION.

Every dispensary day the doors are besieged by numbers of people from the country, as well as from all parts of Paris. This work relieves annually thousands of the sick, and gains access, through their opened hearts, for the news of God's love. It is now in special need of support, for the current expenses required for the sick, the orphans, and the aged, who come to the large sewing-classes, where they gain their few pence by the simple work provided for them.

As an evangelistic agency this mission is most valuable, bringing poor ignorant men and women, through God's blessing, to the Saviour. Visitors to Paris cannot do better than go to see this work, There they will behold "something real," as was expressed by a lady yesterday, who, wearied by the worldliness of Paris, came to Miss De Broen's house, 3, Rue Clavel, to see the Lord's work carried on there. A writer lately described this Mission as "in a most flourishing condition." So it is as to work and opportunities of usefulness, but not as to funds, there being only £200 of yearly contributions out of £2000 required annually; all the rest has to be met by Miss De Broen's exertions. Will those who care for the Lord's poor in Paris send help? These people would suffer much were the work in any way curtailed.

A. Ker.

3, Rue Clavel, Belleville, Paris.

Major-General Hoste writes from Havelock Lodge, Brighton:—I have just returned for a time to England, from working in connection with this Mission. The work is many sided and most interesting. Are you fond of needlework? Then there are nearly 200 poor women wanting work prepared for them twice in the week. Are you fond of visiting the poor? Here, every year, there are nearly 8000 new homes waiting to be visited. Are you fond of teaching? There are the Sunday-schools and night-schools. The different branches of the work are only means to the end of bringing the glad tidings of salvation to different classes of the people.

The Medical Mission is especially useful in this respect. In the course of the year thousands come there from all parts of Paris to get free medicine for their bodies, and there they hear, too, of Christ, the remedy for their soul's diseases. One poor woman came to the dispensary because she heard it was the next best place to Lourdes. A fortnight afterwards she declared that it was not next best, but better still than Lourdes, for she had found not only healing for her body, but what she had not looked for, blessing to her soul as well. It is sad to turn away those who come, but every morning numbers have to be shut out, as with limited resources only a certain number of patients can be dealt with in the day.

DARKNESS IN SOUTH LONDON.

London contains many dark spots, but few are darker than St. George's Market, London-road, Southwark. The population is poor, the sanitary arrangements often deplorable, juvenile vice is rampant, and drunkenness abounds. In a foul labyrinth there are some of the worst houses in the Metropolis. There immorality festers and flourishes with shameless front.

A mission-hall, superintended by Rev. G. W. M'Cree, formerly of St. Giles's, is the centre of a good, but very difficult work. During one season seventy open-air Gospel services were held. There are—a Sunday-school, mothers' meeting, temperance society, band of hope, and religious services. Mr. Bachele, the missionary, visits from door to door and preaches the Gospel. Rescue meetings for fallen women are held, and as many as eighty of them have come to tea. The hungry have been fed, the ragged clothed, and the sick comforted. The good work is still going on, and prayer is made continually for spiritual blessing.

POPISH PERSECUTION IN SPAIN.

Mrs. Fenn wrote to us from Madrid on April 20: The opposition, and, indeed, persecution, so far as lies in the power of the parish priest and his coadjutors, continue and increase. Almost daily we hear of some new effort made, so that it is the talk of the neighbourhood. Priests one day, and ladies another, watch the children going in or coming out of school, accosting them on their way home. Some fathers think it wise to bring their children themselves to prevent this, and say, that, were it not that they would lose their situations, they themselves would be thoroughly associated with us. We possess a copy of the printed receipt signed by "Padre Bocos," which is given to donors or subscribers to these schools, "opened to counteract and destroy as much as possible the pernicious effects of the Protestant schools."

Spies have been sent to the meetings, and, indeed, we wish more would come, even Father Bocos himself, and hear the prayers offered for our opposers, and get good to their souls through the word. The teachers have been told as they walked along the streets that they ought to be "hanged for teaching the children lies," and the children that "the Protestant will soon be dead." We are told that at a recent service at the parish church, the priest reproved the parents who send their children to the Protestant schools, like Señor ——, who lives at —— (naming a respectable person, whose child attends the boys' school), and concluded by taking a kind of oath of his congregation, en masse, that they would remain faithful to the Roman Catholic faith to the end of their days, and that they would be enemies of the Protestants.

It seems from the papers that the murderer of the bishop a very short time since was almost engaged by this priest as curate. God keeps our hearts and minds in peace. Had we fellow-workers sufficient we would think it well to visit all the parents of our children, but with our present staff it is out of the question. The schools continue good; more enter them than the numbers that are removed, and two of the teachers have lately asked for extra assistants on account of the numbers. The congregations have in no way diminished, but rather the contrary. We have lately gone out in different directions for an early walk between six and seven, and Mr. Fenn has distributed hundreds of tracts to the men going to their work at that hour. None have refused to take them and many put themselves in the way to get one.

This week we have a special mission with meetings every night. Missionaries from other parts of the city are helping. So far the meetings are crowded with, for the most part, very attentive hearers. Last night the father of one of our school children was weeping most of the time; he afterwards came forward as a seeker, as did also the mother of a recent convert, a former scholar and her sister, as well as several others. Praise the Lord! The battle is his. Still we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the circumstances are very difficult, and that a more than ordinary manifestation of God's power is needed. It is most desirable also that we should occupy a place from which we could not be turned out. Though we know not how, we cannot but think that the Lord will give us this before long.

DR. BAEDEKER IN RUSSIA.

I am here on the way to Tiflis, and then I hope to go by land over the Kaukasus to Wladikawkas and Rostow. Russia is a land of many nationalities. There are Germans almost everywhere, and, in some places, one meets with lonely and forsaken Englishmen. Hitherto the Lord has wonderfully guided and sheltered his servant, and has put an open door before him in places where he had least expected it. But, oh, the teeming multitudes who have never heard the Gospel, and who are not allowed to listen to it in this land. Yet, in spite of all the difficulties, the sparks of life are not extinct, but they are fanned into flames, and woe be to the fool that dares to stamp it out.

Please to call for much prayer for Russia, for the Emperor, and for his counsellors. The time to keep silence even in Russia is past. There are men who will rather be imprisoned or exiled than quench the Spirit that is in them. God be praised for every living soul. "Is not a living dog better than a dead lion?"—Yours sincerely,

F. W. Baedeker.

A COMING CONVENTION IN CHICAGO.

A Convention of Christian workers in Chicago is being convened by a circular to which is attached the names of many active workers in the evangelistic field well known in this country. Our friend Mr. J. C. Collins, of New Haven, Connecticut, in sending to us a copy of the circular, says it is hoped one result of the gathering will be a closer union of Christian workers in America. The circular of invitation says:—

You have doubtless noticed with great joy the growing interest on the part of earnest and thoughtful Christians in the salvation of those, chiefly in our cities, who hitherto have not been reached by the ordinary ministrations of the Gospel. Many agencies for Christian work, either within the churches or outside and auxiliary to them, which have sought to save these lost ones through the knowledge of "the only true God and Jesus Christ whom He hath sent," have arisen within a few years in the spirit of the Master, who came "to seek and to save that which was lost." Some few of us engaged in these labours, ministers, evangelists, and missionaries, as also others labouring in a less public manner, have met from time to time in Christian conventions and assemblies, and "spoken often one to another." We have thus become known and endeared to each other, and have derived much practical help from private conversation and informal discussion of the plans and peculiar circumstance of our several fields of work.

The benefit we have obtained from this occasional intercourse has led us to believe that a General Convention of all Christian workers among the unevangelised classes in the United States and Canada, would in many ways prove helpful and aid in the advancement of the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Our idea of such a Convention is that it should be intensely practical. We would have no long philosophical essays or critical discourses, setting forth evils with which we, as men and women engaged in hand to hand conflict with "the power of darkness," are already familiar.

Each worker should be given opportunity, so far as possible, to explain his or her work, and to seek and to give information concerning methods, difficulties, defeats, encouragements, or successes. Topics of vital practical importance might also be discussed, such as "The Relation of this Work to the Churches: how best to co-operate, to help and get help," "Methods in Winning Souls," "The best way to build up Converts," "The Christian Worker's Relation to the Enforcement of Laws against Evils which entice Men into Sin," "How to secure Workers," and others of a like import. Plans should also be considered for a more systematic and vigorous prosecution of the work, for frequent Conventions and closer union of workers.

Believing that such a gathering would increase knowledge, encourage our hearts, stimulate our zeal, intensify our love for each other, for our Lord and his cause, and in many ways give a new impetus to the great work in which we are engaged, we therefore call a Convention to meet in the City of Chicago for eight days, June 16—23 inclusive. We invite all missionaries in cities and towns, superintendents of city evangelisation societies, workers in missions, Bible readers, ministers, evangelists, theological students, Y.M.C.A. secretaries, business men, and other persons especially interested in this form of Christian work.

REVIVAL IN SAONE-ET-LOIRE.

The power of the Gospel is being manifested in the Free Churches here. At Mâçon some striking conversions have taken place, and the church has been quite transformed. Women, young girls, and men prayed at the meetings, which greatly touched the Romanists present. At Branges, in January, at the close of a prayer-meeting, twenty persons professed to have accepted Christ. At Sornay and Monpont similar scenes have been witnessed.

In Vendée a municipal councillor begged M. Aligné, of the Mission Intérieure, to go there and preach. More than 120 persons assembled, and M. Aligné was entreated to go there often. Nearly all his Bibles and New Testaments were sold. M. Réveillaud has been holding very well-attended meetings at Alençon, Dreux, Argentan, &c. Many women were of the audience. As the priests get firmer hold of women this is very encouraging.

VILLAGE EVANGELISATION.

By Lady OLIVE SEBRIGHT.

Our summer campaign with the tents has just begun, and we hope for a greater blessing than ever before on our efforts to evangelise the villages. Missionary work in the dark places of the earth is very necessary and noble, and may God bless the self-sacrificing, earnest men and women, who scatter to preach the Gospel to every creature. But, indeed, there is a great deal of ignorance and heathenism at home amongst all classes. I am each day more surprised, as I talk to anxious inquirers amongst the rich and poor, who have been to our special services, to find how absolutely ignorant they are of the first principles of the Christian faith that they profess. A lady to whom I was speaking of Christ's finished work the other day, said, she never thought that work had anything to do with her personally, and that when He said "It is finished," she thought He meant that his life-work was over, and that she had hers to do quite apart from his.

As a general rule, alas! the teaching from the pulpits in our villages fosters this ignorance and darkness. A clergyman not far from here told his parishioners in church some Sundays ago that there were three doors into the kingdom of heaven—baptism, confirmation, and communion—and then asked his open-mouthed hearers if they had been through all three doors, as, if so, they were safe. Is it wonderful that Christian men and women feel it incumbent upon them to speak of "the Door," St. John x. 9, and, constrained by the love of Christ, can only say, "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel" to these poor, deluded, perishing souls. We have delegated our duty, as members of the living Church of Christ, to a few professional men, and this is the consequence.

Not only so, but often these blind leaders of the blind hinder those who wish to help others to enter in. I venture to publish here the following letter received from a clergyman into whose parish we proposed to send a Tent; it is a specimen of numbers that we receive:—

> To Mr. S. Hamond, Evangelisation Agent.
> Not knowing who the "we" may be who did me the honour of forwarding a "proposal" in which the "we" seem to be much interested, and having no knowledge of the Evangelisation Society or its evangelists, and as it appears they are not duly "sent" (Rom. x. 15) by any authority that I could recognise, I beg to say in reply to this vague "proposal" that it will have neither "sympathy" nor "co-operation" on my part, complying with my obligations to Christ's Holy Catholic Church (Apostles' Creed) to drive away all false teaching and error, and protect his flock from the intruder. I shall try to do so with all my influence, privately in the parish, and publicly from the pulpit, should this threatened "tent" invasion happen in the parish. I shall resent it as an insult offered to myself personally, and a most unjustifiable censure attempted to be passed on the rector of the parish by some obscure and irresponsible "we" under the shelter of an apparently Christian appellation. I return the yellow book as being a kind of literature I would not give the smallest attention to.
> The Rector of Colby Parish.

As Miss S. Hamond as well as myself are now well known all over Norfolk, this affectation of ignorance of the "we," or even the sex of S. Hamond, is truly absurd. The "yellow book" he refers to is the report of the Evangelisation Society, which we send to every clergyman. Of course, its reception is often very different.

But, Sir, we want money, as neither Miss Hamond nor myself have any. We are willing to give our time, health, and strength to the work, and it seems hard that we should be fettered by want of means. If your readers could see all the eager faces of the crowds that gather, not only in the tents but outside, to listen to the plain Gospel message delivered by ourselves and by the excellent evangelists Captain Smith sends us, I am sure that they would be willing to aid us liberally to extend our plan of operations, and to push the holy war into the neighbouring counties as well as Norfolk. We appeal for help, and are confident that it will not be in vain. Any contributions sent to Miss Hamond or myself, at Fakenham, Norfolk, will be gratefully acknowledged.

THE ABORIGINES OF AUSTRALIA.

Dear Sir,—For the information of Christian friends in England generally, and more particularly for those who deeply sympathise with Mrs. Matthews and myself in our labours among the neglected native tribes of the Australian colonies, I would ask for the insertion of a few lines in The Christian.

Under the prospering blessing of Almighty God, our work still goes on. In the face of much that is most trying among this singular people we find a great deal to encourage hope and stimulate faith in God. In answer to prayer the Lord has disposed the Government of New South Wales to materially assist us. This is not done directly, but through a philanthropic body of Christian men in Sydney—the Aborigines Protection Association. So impressed are they with the success that has attended us, that they have now appointed an overseer and matron to help us in our mission, and are about to establish other stations in various parts of the colony. The Government has liberally offered £2 from the Colonial Treasury for every £1 contributed by friends. We trust therefore liberal responses will be made, and successful agencies established throughout the length and breadth of Australia. Many of our men and women and even children, who, two years ago, gave their hearts to God, are still going forward to a higher Christian life.

We beg an extended interest in the prayers of the Lord's people everywhere for the power of the Holy Ghost. We thank the kind lady at Croydon who still sends us copies of The Christian regularly.—Yours sincerely,

Daniel Matthews.

A MESSAGE FROM ABROAD.

Dear Sir,—Will you spare a corner of your paper for a short acknowledgment, which for months past it has been on my heart to make? I have been for many months in regular weekly receipt of your paper from some kind friend unknown to me. As, under the circumstances, I cannot thank this friend, I should be glad if you will allow me, through your columns, to express my grateful appreciation of the kindness.

It may be a pleasure to the sender and an encouragement to others to know what use is made of the paper. After I have finished with it, I send it to an aged Christian friend. It goes, after he has perused it, to our vestry, where the soldiers have the opportunity of reading it with other papers. Lastly I distribute the papers in the military hospitals which I visit. Altogether the paper does good service. I have never any hesitation about The Christian being read by anyone from the first page to the last.

My work here lies amongst the English-speaking people, both military and civilian. A new regiment has recently arrived here. We find it rather difficult to start the work amongst them, as there is no nucleus of earnest Christians such as we had in "the Border Regiment." But we are looking to God for blessing, and already we have the joy of knowing that the word is having its saving effect in the case of some. Will friends at home pray that these tokens of blessing may be the first droppings of a bounteous shower? Last week some friends provided a tea for the soldiers. About fifty availed themselves of the invitation given, and thoroughly enjoyed the good things. Many others came afterwards to the magic lantern exhibition which we gave in the chapel. The subjects included the Prodigal Son and the Pilgrim's Progress, and gave opportunity throughout for pointed Gospel appeals. We trust that loving sympathy and interest will thus open their hearts for that saving grace that Christ alone can bestow.

Notes and Comments.

Next week we shall give portrait and sketch of Rev. Dr. A. N. Somerville, Glasgow.

Rev. W. Haslam hoped to reach England, on his return from mission work in Canada, by the middle of May. Letters should be addressed to him at 66, Marina, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

Our readers will observe on another page the announcement of meetings in connection with the "International Congress" convened by the Salvation Army, commencing on the 28th instant. These great gatherings will doubtless have an important bearing on the future work of the Army throughout the world. We bespeak for them the earnest prayers of our readers, that a spirit of wisdom and power from on high may pervade the assemblies, and that the outcome may be fraught with much blessing to the unevangelised portions of the human race.

Our readers know that prior to a recent election Rev. H. Bradford, of Prince's-street Chapel, Northampton, preached a sermon on "The Duty of Christians to separate themselves from all Unbelievers." This was understood to have special reference to those who were supporting the candidature of Mr. Bradlaugh. The vote of a majority of the church led to Mr. Bradford's resignation. A new chapel, with schools, was erected, and, as will be seen by the letter of Admiral Sir William King Hall (p. 13), £500 was subscribed in a few weeks by our readers, in response to the Admiral's appeal. Only £361 is now needed to open the building free of debt. We have the highest opinion of Mr. Bradford, and we trust that before the day of opening, June 24, the £361 still required will have been subscribed.

In Dr. Tristram's latest work on "The Fauna and Flora of Palestine," published by the Exploration Fund, one or two interesting facts deserve notice. The Palestine domestic ass is taller, fleeter, stronger than that of any other country. The white Syrian ass now fetches £40. The coney is little and cautious, retiring through timidity among the fissures of rocks, but acting as a sentry for other animals. The "lily of the field" alluded to by Jesus, covers the land in spring with a gorgeous richness. The mustard tree of Scripture is a garden herb, growing tall, and small birds come to its branches for seed.

A correspondent writes to us as follows :—

> In a recent Christian I was glad to see a valuable article on the Fatherhood of God. I have just been reading Dr. Candlish's Cunningham Lectures on this great subject, and would especially commend to your readers his profound exposition of the teaching of our Lord on his own and his brethren's sonship. There are not many nobler pieces of theological writing. While, however, I have followed Dr. Candlish in his able reasoning that the filial relation of men to God is not universal and indiscriminate, I would venture to say that no preaching should lose sight of the first great word of the revelation of the Divine name to Moses, "The Lord, the Lord, the God full of compassion." The broad-church views of Maurice and Kingsley have worked, and are still working, very serious ill; the Cross, nevertheless, would lose its power if it were not preached as the manifestation of love to every child of Adam, even though love brings no sonship apart from belief in Christ. Discrimination here is supremely important and deplorably lacking in modern preaching.

See our review of "The Gospel of Fatherhood," p. 7.

The project of Evangelical Church Union has been again discussed in Florence, and the hope is expressed, in which we fervently join, that a final settlement will take place in the autumn. The merging of the ancient title of Waldensian, which expresses an unparalleled continuity of faith and testimony, into that of the Evangelical Church of Italy, appears to have raised objections, and must be thought entitled to consideration. We have been furnished with the annual report of the Free Italian Church for 1885. It tells of the deplorable enervation of moral character which Popery brings on a nation, of the subtle and formidable difficulties with which Gospel preaching has to contend, and of the wide area occupied, and the multifarious efforts made, by devoted pastors and evangelists.

An exceedingly learned article by Mr. Herbert Spencer in this month's Nineteenth Century suggests melancholy reflections. Professor Huxley is quoted—that science has no creed, i.e., no certainty. The reasoning is that the term "natural selection" does not in the physical sense express a cause, and that the passing of inorganic matter into organic evolution is not adequately explained. The fact strikes us that eminent men have pushed their inquiries back to the origin of a living universe, and putting away from them the revelations mercifully given to us, they are like benighted men lost in a wood; they have no credo; no belief as to how they got there, or whether there is any path to an open. Surely the terrible issue of a Godless science has come.

The Dublin University Review states that a Theosophic Lodge has recently been founded in Dublin, and that it has already "attracted many of those adventurous spirits to whom any new system of thought seems to beckon with promise." There is nothing essentially modern in this rushing into the wilderness to see a reed shaken with the wind. It is only charitable to assume that these daring seekers after knowledge have not had an opportunity of reading the singular account of Madame Blavatsky's deceptions, upon which we commented a few weeks ago; and that they are unaware of the fact that Theosophists, perhaps only in self-defence, insist that all genuine wisdom is "essentially incommunicable."

Mr. Mohini M. Chatterji, who discourses at length in the same Review upon "The common sense of Theosophy," probably illustrates this axiom, for if he possesses the truth, he certainly in a very marked manner fails to communicate it; but in this respect he has nothing to be ashamed of, for his paper does not differ from the writings of other, and perhaps greater, Theosophists, in being simply verbiage. It may satisfy some people to know that "as light from one single source produces the appearance of different lights by reflection from a number of surfaces, so this universal consciousness, remaining itself unchanged, produces endless individualities, which in the course of their evolution reach perfection by recognising this essential unity." We prefer something easier to grasp, such as the simple words of Jesus, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest;" and, though this new exponent of Theosophy and his leaders and followers may wear themselves out in writing about "postulating egoism for atoms," we have no fear that they will succeed in displacing Christianity.

To those of our readers who live in manufacturing towns, and who desire to reach the factory girls, and find it difficult to do so, we may commend a paper in the current number of Eastward Ho, entitled, "Girls' Evening Homes, Nottingham," as it points to a practical way in which much good may be done in a very quiet and unobtrusive manner. That "the work is unsectarian" is not the least of its merits, and as the workers are banded together "with the one object of helping the girls to live pure, holy, and useful lives, by becoming faithful followers of our Lord Jesus Christ," it is pleasant to learn that their labours are very successful. Modified to suit local circumstances, there is no reason why a work of the kind should not be started in each of our large manufacturing towns where at present the dancing-saloon, the low music-hall, and the streets are the only places of recreation and amusement open to young working women and girls. Whereever the work is based upon the noble foundation which has been chosen at Nottingham, the blessing of God upon the labour and trouble may confidently be looked for.

A correspondent who has been scanning the numerous advertisements of educational establishments appearing in our columns, in the hope of finding something to suit one of his children, writes to us as follows :—

> Of "comforts," "accomplishments," "high-class training" of various kinds, and even Christian influence there appears to be no lack, but, so far as I can notice, no promise of practical training in the common things that make so much for a girl's happiness in after life. Is there to be found anywhere a girl's boarding-school, where, together with a liberal education under Christian guidance, such homely accomplishments as sewing, darning, dusting, cooking, and the like requirements of a middle-class housewife, are taught? A practical knowledge of these things is more necessary for the female head of a house than Euclid or perspective drawing. I do not despise nor would wish these latter neglected, but I do feel that for the daughters of middle-class people we are in danger of neglecting the practical side of education. I have heard of boarding-schools in America in which the girls share the domestic work in turn. Is there any such in England, or are we entirely given over to mental culture and gymnastics?

Mr. Robert Wilson, of Broughton Grange, and Mr. H. F. Bowker, of London, have issued their invitation to the Keswick Convention, for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, to be held from Monday, July 26, to Saturday, July 31. In their circular of invitation they say :—

> We ask you to unite in earnest prayer that those who minister to us may be filled with the Holy Ghost, and that it may not be they that speak, but the Spirit of their Father that speaketh in them (Matt. x. 20), and that the truth may sink into hearts prepared by Him. In these days, when so many foundations are being shaken, we rejoice that our Rock cannot be moved, and that in staying our minds on Him we are kept in perfect peace.
> Mr. John Postlethwaite, Erskyn-place, Keswick, will again act as Hon. Secretary, to whom application for lodgings or hotel accommodation may be sent, stating particulars of what is desired. Anyone taking rooms for longer than one week, will find it much easier to obtain accommodation early.

In Mr. H. S. Newman's recently published "Autobiography of George Fox," condensed from his Journal, will be found much helpful matter. The book contains a striking narrative of the life of a man who was full of faith in a living God, and who worked and prayed and preached under the influence of a never-failing belief that everything which happened to him was "the dealings of the Lord with me." God is as near to us in the turmoil of the nineteenth century as He was to those who fought and suffered in the seventeenth;

NORTH-EAST LONDON GOSPEL MISSIONS.

DROOPING LILIES.

A Plea for our Country Holiday Home: Third Year, 1886.

'Tis under the elms, on the crown of the hill,
  Surrounded by sylvan sheen,
The Holiday Home of our Mission is found,
  Reposing in peace serene.

How unlike our court, and its dreadful rows,
  Where the demon Drink reigns king;
And poverty weeps o'er the empty board,
  While sorrow her dark shadows fling.

But happy the thought, the good angels brought
  To the mind of our teachers kind,
To give us a stay, many a bright summer day,
  Where we such happiness find.

There is smart little Fred, and his wee brother Ted,
  Whose father in hospital lay;
Their share of these cares they have somehow forgot,
  So full of frolic and play.

The crape in the hats of Alice and Jane,
  Two sisters, we plainly can see,
Tell the story of mother, yes, a dear mother gone,
  To heaven with Jesus to be.

And now I remember 'twas last summer time
  That the story of Amy I read,
Which told how, though poor, afflicted, and lame,
  Here the joy of her presence shed.

She sat in the garden the long summer day,
  So patient you ne'er heard her sigh,
But would sing her sweet hymns, or talk of her home,
  Away in the heavens on high.

But Amy is gone, and no more will she need
  Our Holiday Home here to share;
By the Saviour who blest, she has entered her rest,
  And knows what it is to be there!

But here standing by is her sister we spy,
  Her mother is poor, and a widow;
Ada's round curly head reminds of the dead,
  And the gentle form now laid low.

There runs Lizzie, the orphan, poor child, we see
  She looks better than when she came;
While the lily pale faces seem drooping sore
  Of the little girls Moore by name.

We learn texts by heart, and choose our own hymns,
  Together in prayer we kneel down,
Then gladly we sleep, while the good angels keep,
  And true blessings our pathway crown.

But now we must go to the fields and the woods,
  For mother will be looking, I know,
For handfuls of flowers, to tell of the hours
  Spent so happily under the brow.

We view with delight the beautiful sight,
  The birds how sweetly they sing;
While around and above the musical hum
  Of a thousand wee things on the wing.

Oh, did the kind ladies but know what it is
  To live away down in our court,
So far, very far, from the sights and sweet sounds
  Of God's beautiful handiwork,

They would, I am sure, be quick with their help
  To speed the good work on its way,
While the blessing of Him who said "INASMUCH"
  Should be theirs evermore in "THAT DAY."

The sum of 5s. removes a child for a week, from the foul court to the smiling hills, from penury to plenty; 20s. gives two children a whole fortnight; £5, ten children a like advantage. The freehold of the above property might be purchased for about £1,000.

Your kind assistance would be thankfully received by the Editor, at 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; or by yours most respectfully,

WILLIAM CHORLEY,
2, Marquess Grove, Canonbury, N.

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.

Two hundred and three men and women have been baptized since 1883. They have come from forty villages, and there are more to follow. Pray for the unsaved multitude going to perdition.

Six oxen-carts full of Scripture have been disposed of during the above time.

Two Training Schools train teachers, and in twelve Village Schools the young are instructed.

Daily twenty native brethren, two and two, go to the villages speaking for Jesus. They visit about forty villages per week. Pray for them and their hearers.

The Medical branch has relieved ten thousand sufferers, and saved much life.

Luke v. 6, 7: "They inclosed a great multitude of fishes: and their net brake. And they beckoned unto their partners, which were in the other ship, that they should come and help them."

Contributions are much needed, and will be gratefully received by Miss M. C. Gurney, Hon. Sec., 12, Camden Hill-road, Gipsy Hill, London, S.E.; or by the Secretary, A. Haegert, Bethel, viâ Jamtara, E.I.R., Bengal.

Suggestive Prayers for the Young,

AND HELPS FOR MOTHERS.

Crown 8vo., 108 pp., limp cloth, 6d.

"This little book is exactly what it professes to be, and will fill a place of its own in devotional literature. It is evidently the work of a singularly fresh, devout, and cultured mind. Mothers who use it in their children's devotions will be grateful to the Author for such a varied range of subjects for meditation, intercession, and prayer."—Church of Scotland Home and Foreign Mission Record.

"An admirable little book. The compiler not only loves the young, but understands their modes of thought. Pure doctrines are inculcated in the simplest words."—The Christian.

"As far as such aids can be helpful it is well adapted for its purpose."—Word and Work.

"This book goes far to supply a want. It is written to suggest to mothers, &c., how they may guide their little ones to real prayer instead of mere repetition. Hence some of the pages are devout meditations to prepare the mother to teach her children to pray, rather than prayers which a child could use."—Life and Work.

"Fitted to prove real helps to devoted and dutiful mothers. The prayers are simple and natural expressions of a child-like innocence and a child-like confidence."—Weekly Review.

JESUS THE LAMB OF GOD:

Showing how He died on the Cross for Children; and how Little Ones have Learned to Love and Trust Him. By Rev. E. Payson Hammond, M.A. With Seven Full-page Illustrations.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

This little book will be eagerly read by almost any child into whose hands it may fall. It is full of stories, all clustering round some great truth, made simple to the very youngest mind. By way of illustration, the author occasionally refers to interesting cases of children who have been hopefully led to the Saviour in his meetings. Parents and Sunday-school teachers, who would see their little ones led to Christ, should get the book for them to read, and pray that the Holy Spirit may use it in teaching them the way of salvation.

GATHERED LAMBS:

Telling how Jesus gathers the Lambs to his Fold. With Eight Illustrations.

Tinted covers, 6d.; Cloth limp, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"In this book we find some excellent samples of Mr. Hammond's anecdotal addresses to the young. They are full of picture and parable, some of the most effective of the illustrations having been picked up in the Highlands of Scotland. The book contains striking letters received by the author from children converted under his ministry."—Christian Leader.

THE REAPER AND THE HARVEST.

Scenes and Incidents, in connection with the Works of the Holy Spirit, in the Life and Labours of Rev. E. Payson Hammond, M.A. Edited by Rev. P. C. Headley. 550 pages. With Life-like Portrait of Mr. Hammond. Cloth, 4s. 6d.

Ministers, Evangelists, and Christian Workers, who are looking for illustrations and facts, will discover here a treasury of information. They will at the same time feel their own hearts stimulated to labour more earnestly for the salvation of souls.

WORDS ONLY. Sewn, 1d.; Printed Cloth, 2d.

"A charming collection of two hundred and twenty-eight hymns and tunes, specially adapted for Gospel Services, Sabbath Schools, &c. While it includes some of the finest compositions of the great masters of sacred song, there are many hymns and tunes in it that will be new to the Christian people of this country; and it may probably surprise most readers to find how prolific and successful Mr. Hammond himself has been in this department of literature. Not a few of his pieces have been suggested by the touching testimonials of children led under his ministry to give their hearts to Jesus; and in these strains there is a richly experimental power."—Christian Leader.

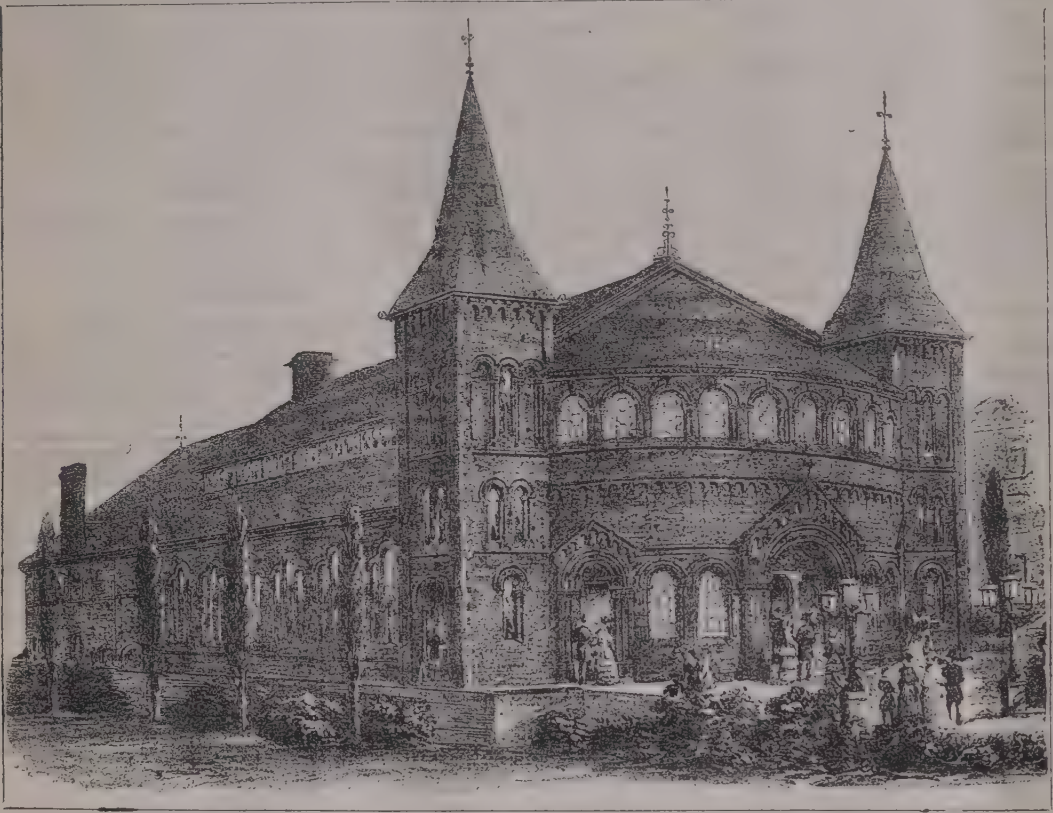
TALBOT TABERNACLE NEW BUILDING.

(POWIS CHAPEL.)

FOUR years ago we appealed for help to erect a permanent building in the place of the old iron structure, which Mr. Gordon Forlong put up in the year 1868. There was a hearty response, and money was sent to us by the Lord's people far and wide, amounting, with our own contributions, to nearly £3,000.

With this sum a substantial and capacious Lecture Hall, and several Class Rooms, Vestry, &c., were built and furnished, and opened by the late Earl of Shaftesbury in March, 1884, FREE OF DEBT. The erection of these buildings also secured for us a lease of the entire property, for 82 years.



An earnest and good work has ever since been carried on in these School-Buildings, the congregation meanwhile continuing to worship in the old iron Church. This latter has now become so dilapidated as to be scarcely tenantable, and we al feel that it would be wasteful to spend any more money on its repair. Besides which, at the expiration of the present lease (two years hence), it passes out of our hands unless we consent to the payment of an increased rental, chargeable until a permanent structure is put up in its stead. This cannot be done at a less cost than £4,000. We have resolved, therefore, on the erection, as soon as we have the means, of a new building to contain about 1,200 people.

No one feels more strongly than we do, the urgent claims of the poor, Home and Foreign Missions, &c., and in erecting a commodious building for the preaching of the Gospel, and the ministry of the Word, we believe we shall be doing the best thing to foster and promote these and other good works, with which we have been so long and so closely identified.

Our own means are most limited, but we are of one heart and mind in the matter, and are doing our very utmost. Already nearly £1,800 have been subscribed or promised.

We propose to extend promises of help over two years, at the expiration of which time, the Pastor will have completed a quarter of a century's ministry in London. To open the new place free of any incumbrance by that date, will be a great joy to him, and will, we hope, prove the inauguration of another happy and prosperous period of Gospel labour in the Metropolis.

Donations and promises may be sent to any of the undernamed, or to the Pastor, 80, Kensington Gardens-square, London, W.

Signed for the Church and Office Bearers,

Frank H White

PASTOR.

Heartily commended by—

"I can with all my heart commend to the generous help of all the Lord's servants the work under the care of my beloved brother, Frank White. He took up the work which was left by the excellent Mr. Gordon Forlong, who emigrated; and under his care it has grown, and been of eminent service in the West-end. But the meeting-place is an Iron Chapel, now nearly worn out. It must be replaced by a permanent structure, and it ought to be. Mr. White is not, I fear, a very bold beggar, and so I make bold for him, and venture to say that a worthier man there is not in London, nor a ministry more intently set upon the maintenance of truth, and the winning of souls. His needs are great just now, and he deserves help from us all."

Westwood, Beulah Hill, Upper Norwood. C. H. Spurgeon.

"I have the strongest objection to the incessant multiplication of buildings, save in cases where a very evident need is manifested. Here, however, the objection does not apply. The living agent is at work. His work has been blessed, the people have been gathered, and a building is absolutely required, in order that the work should go on and prosper."

The Late Earl of Shaftesbury.

EDINBURGH.—Mr. A. Steedman, of the Scottish Evangelistic Association, has been labouring during the past fortnight in Moray Church. The addresses were very powerful, as was evidenced by the increased interest each successive evening, and by the number led to choose Christ for their Saviour. The evangelist was assisted by Dr. Moxey, Rev. P. W. Paterson, of Moray Church, and others.

ST. STEPHEN'S, NORTH BOW.—On Sunday evening, May 9, Rev. T. Ranger Lawrence preached his farewell sermon to a congregation numbering some 1700 people, previous to leaving for Alexandria, where he will take charge of the work among soldiers in connection with Miss Robinson's Institution. Many marks of respect have been sent to Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence, and all in the parish wish them "God speed in their new sphere of labour."

SECOND ADVENT CONFERENCE, CLAPHAM.

The third annual Convention for the study of Prophetic Scripture, connected with the world-wide Prayer Union for the coming of the Lord, will be held on June 15, 16, and 17, in the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, S.W. It has been fixed for the Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of the week preceding the Annual Mildmay Conference, in order that persons from a distance may be able to attend both Conferences during the same visit to London. The subjects suggested for consideration are the following:—

1st day.—The Personal Pre-millennial Advent of our Lord Jesus Christ. The Manifestation of a Personal Anti-Christ. Has all Prophecy a Retrospective and Historical Fulfilment as well as a Future one?

2nd day.—The Character of the "Great Tribulation:" will all the Lord's people who are on earth at the time pass through it? The Signs of our Times compared with the Signs foretold of the Last Days. What is the connection between the city called Babylon and the Beast, or Anti-Christ? Where will Babylon be situated?

3rd day.—Israel's prospects and place in the Millennium. Is the Holy City which John connects with New Heavens and a New Earth (Rev. xxi.) to be connected with the World during the Millennial period? What Nations will Satan deceive after the Millennium?

Christians, everywhere, are invited, that the testimony "in the mouths of many witnesses may be established." The conveners entreat earnest prayer that the Holy Spirit may stir up the hearts of believers and incline them to join in the supplication:—"Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!" The Corresponding Secretary is Rev. C. M. Pym, Cherry Burton, Hull. For particulars apply to the office, Conference Hall, Clapham-road, London, S.W., enclosing envelope stamped and addressed for reply.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, May 15, 1886.

⁂ Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

⁂ Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

DISTRESS IN WALES.—Writing with respect to the poverty that prevails in many parts of Wales, Mr. John Nelson, Bishopston, Bristol, writes to say that, having done some relief work among children during the past winter, he purposes to extend it, if spared, the next winter season. He would be glad if any friends who could collect left-off clothing, boots and shoes, &c., for distribution, would kindly communicate with him.

GRAY'S YARD RAGGED CHURCH AND SCHOOL,

James Street, Oxford Street, London, W.

President—F. A. BEVAN, ESQ. | Treasurer—GEORGE HANBURY, ESQ.

Gospel Services, attended by about 500 of the Homeless Poor, are held on Sundays, at 11 a.m. and 3 p.m., after which each person present is supplied with Bread and Coffee. About £2 each Sunday are required for the Food alone, and there are other heavy expenses connected with the Work of the Church and Schools. Funds are Urgently Needed, and will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, 21, Portman-square, W.; Mr. Philip Gough, 33, Cambridge-street, Hyde-park, W.; Mr. A. G. Fraser, 4, Inverness-terrace, W.; or by Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

but many of us lose the comfort which full and childlike recognition of the fact must necessarily give. The fault is ours, and the loss is ours too. There is the promise to every trustful believer, that the Father and the Son will come unto him and make their abode with him, and that Christ will sup with him; but the door must be opened before there can be this sweetest of all communion. To all who desire an unbroken experience of the presence of God in the soul and his clear guidance in life, we commend Mr. Newman's attractively got up edition of the illustrious Quaker's narrative. (S. W. Partridge & Co. 6s.)

In the Episcopal Church of Ireland, as in the sister Church of England, there are striking differences which are somewhat painful to contemplate. At the recent Synod sums were voted to make up £37,000 for the endowment of the Primacy, and Mr. Brooke stated incidentally that the representative body "had altogether seven millions of money." On the other hand, we read of a society in Dublin, with a very small revenue, which, during the past year, has "brightened many a good minister's home, besides forwarding boxes and parcels of clothes to households barely able to supply themselves with the necessities for daily life."

At the opening of the Synod, the Archbishop of Dublin gave a long and interesting address, and concluded with these words:—

> Look forward as they might to the solution of the question that was now pending, they should see a dark prospect before them; but they need not people the darkness with spectres, and if they only went forward with God's help he believed they would overcome these dangers. Some of his friends described him as an optimist. Well, if he was an optimist it was not because he made little of the dangers and difficulties that surrounded them in the future, but because he made much of the strength which he believed would be given to them in the future as it had been given in the past, and which would enable them, through the blessing of God, to live on until they saw brighter hopes and better days for their beloved country and their beloved Church.

The party of ministers who left London three months ago for a tour in the Holy Land have nearly all returned. Revs. Newman Hall, Dr. Thain Davidson, and Dr. Monro Gibson returned to town last week, and occupied their respective pulpits on Sunday. With the exception of one member of the party, whose health broke down in Jerusalem, and who was obliged to abandon the project, all the "pilgrims" were able to carry out their programme; they visited nearly every district of special interest in Palestine, including Joppa, Lydda, Hebron, Bethany, Bethlehem, Jericho, Samaria, Nazareth, Tiberias, Tyre, Sidon, and Damascus. They also spent some time by the Dead Sea and the Lake of Galilee, and ascended Mounts Tabor and Carmel. They have been much delighted by what they have seen, and come back to their work refreshed in spirit, and more than ever persuaded of the truth of "the sweet story of old."

The remarkable volume issued by Lord Robert Montagu, entitled "Recent Events and a Clue to their Solution" (Hodder & Stoughton, 12s.) may be divided into two parts—facts and deductions. In a note by the Publishers, it is truly said that "the question of the Jesuits in England, and their ceaseless political intrigues, is a sufficiently important one to deserve more attention than it has hitherto received." On this account the book deserves serious consideration.

The "Address from the Chair of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, by Edward White" (Elliot Stock, 6d.), is a document which well maintains the credit which that chair has gained by previous utterances. Even on the subjects of the Sabbath, Total Abstinence, and Peace, on which he differs to some extent from many good men, his tone and spirit are as fair and genial as his speech is bold and definite. The title—"Free Church Foundations; or, The Application of the Apostolic Distinction between Law and Grace to the Theology, Ethics, and Politics of the modern Independents,"—necessarily presupposes a plea for Disestablishment; but so far from this being expressed with bitterness, no Churchman could have borne more filial, affectionate, appreciative, and generous witness to the sentimental or solid attractions of the Church of England. All Englishmen will hail "the grateful and admiring reference" to Queen Victoria and her glorious reign for half a century, by one who was born in the same year, and in the same month, with Her Majesty.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

In the introductory pages of the latest report of this Society, recently issued, there occur these words: "As the years come and go, we are learning more and more that it is our weakness, and not our strength, that the great Master wants." In this spirit the work for the Society is ever conducted, with results that would gladden the hearts of Whitfield or Wesley. In huts and barns, as well as in other buildings, the Gospel is preached in villagers and towns to thousands who never go to any ordinary place of worship, with the result that "the careless have been brought to serious thought and prayer, the backsliders have been led to take with them words, and to turn again to the Lord. Drunkards and sensual men have been reclaimed, and prodigals have been brought to themselves and to their Father and God." Not only so, but believers have been strengthened, and not the poor only, but many of the "better sort" have been reached and brought to God. That such a work may grow and prosper till the 1044 places supplied last year with preachers are multiplied greatly, may well be the earnest prayer of all who, recognising that the fields are already white to harvest, desire that those fields should be occupied with men who are filled with the Holy Spirit.

Figures are not much in regard to a work such as this, but, besides the fact that 175 tent missions were held last year, great blessing attending the services, though sometimes opposition was excited, as at Henley-on-Thames, where the edges were cut, and at Bath, where a gun was fired into the tent. The total number of meetings held during last year was 19,370, the estimated number of the attendances being nearly four millions, and the average cost of each meeting was twelve shillings. This last item may suggest to some in out-of-the-way places, where so many have not the Gospel preached to them, the possibility of organising such meetings To maintain this excellent work, a sum of £1200 a month is required. The offices of the Society are at 21, Surrey-street, Strand.

GERMANY.—In Charlottenburg, the Empress has established a Home for orphaned officer's daughters, in which she takes a strong personal interest. When in Berlin, she visits the institute every week, and on festal occasions sometimes partakes of a meal with "her children" of whom there are about fifty. They are also invited occasionally to the Palace, when the Empress receives them in the midst of her family, the Emperor also mixing with the happy flock. Everything is done for the higher education of the girls, and in later years they have a place in the Empress's heart.—Anzeiger.

UNION CHAPEL, NORTHAMPTON.

LAST APPEAL FROM ADML. SIR W. KING HALL, K.C.B.

Sir,—I heartily thank you for the deep interest you have taken in the case of the Rev. H. Bradford, of Northampton, during the last two years; as you know, he was Baptist minister of Prince's-street Chapel, Northampton, and for his bold and faithful testimony for God in his preaching, was, by an adverse vote of his congregation, who disapproved of the truths he set forth, by a majority of seventeen, led to resign his pastorate.

The members of his congregation who continued true to him, held a meeting—begged him to remain, and they would help to build a chapel; most nobly have they worked, and shown by their self-denial how thoroughly they appreciate and love their pastor, and honour God.

It is only just to you, as showing the great influence and wide circulation enjoyed by The Christian (and most deservedly), to state that on March 26, last year, you kindly inserted an appeal from me, asking for £500 by May 31, to authorise our calling for tenders for building (having other £500 in hand). By May 17 the amount was received, and on June 24 I laid the stone, and £321 was placed upon it. The chapel will hold 1000; it is on the basis of Evangelical Union principles, and vested in trustees. £4000 has been received, including promises on opening, all within two years. This should satisfy the many kind helpers that God has blessed the work.

In conclusion, I thank most heartily all who have kindly helped (many twice over). It is of great importance it should be opened on June 24 without debt. £361 only is now wanted; many of your readers have not yet given, may they do so. I appeal, however, to all. Stamps and postal orders to the amount of 2s. 6d. will be acknowledged. Help us to open free, that in Northampton all may see God's promise fulfilled: "Them that honour me I will honour."

W. King Hall, Admiral.

THE Y.W.C.A. AND HOSPITAL NURSES.

It has been laid upon the hearts of the Y.W.C.A. workers that a special effort should be made for the spiritual welfare of our hard-working nursing sisters in hospitals or elsewhere. It is desired to encourage the earnest Christians amongst them by loving sympathy and the Christian help they often sorely need; also to take the Gospel message to many who, whilst ministering to the bodily wants of the sick and dying, are unable to impart any words of spiritual help or comfort to them. A Union has been formed for trained nurses, whether in hospital or otherwise, which all are cordially invited to join; monthly drawing-room meetings are held in different parts of London, a list of which is given below.

The effort, however, will be useless without the hearty co-operation of the Christian nurses themselves. They are earnestly requested, not only to attend any gathering in their locality, but to do all in their power to induce their companions to accompany them. The meetings commence with a short Bible-reading, followed by tea and social intercourse, and are held at the following houses on the dates given, except during the months of August and September:—

Mrs. Burton Alexander, 36, Bloomsbury-square, W.C, first Tuesday, 6.30 to 8 p m.

Miss Ely, Central Institute, 17, Old Cavendish-street, W, first Wednesday, 6 to 8 p.m.

Mrs. Ostle, The Vicarage, St Bartholomew's Hospital, E C., first Thursday, 3.30 to 5 p.m.

Mrs. Mathieson, Garden House, Conference Hall, Mildmay, N., second Wednesday, 3 to 5 p m.

Mrs E. W. Moore, 15, Harewood square, N.W, second Thursday, 3 30 to 5 p m.

Mrs. Fraser, 4, Inverness-terrace, W, third Wednesday, 6 to 8 p.m

Miss Starey, St. Thomas's Vicarage, Lambeth, S.E, fourth Wednesday, 3 to 5 p.m.

Miss Ryland, 61, Denbigh-street, Belgrave-road, S.W., las Monday, 3 to 5 p m.

The hon. sec. is Sister Lucy, 36, St. Laurence-road, North Kensington, to whom all communica- should be addressed.

Anniversaries.

Ashley Mission, Bethnal Green.

The annual meeting of this Mission was held on Monday week in the mission-room. The Hon. Lionel Ashley took the chair, and spoke briefly of the deep loss the Mission had sustained in the death of its beloved president and unfailing friend, Lord Shaftesbury. The interesting report states there are a flourishing Sunday-school, a mothers' meeting numbering over 300 members, classes for men and girls, the members of which have shown zeal and energy in open-air work and tract distribution. The temperance work and many special agencies are vigorously carried on, including Bible-class for policemen. Mr. Ashley concluded his remarks by giving warm thanks to Miss Bontein, the hon. lady superintendent.

Lady Hope followed with a bright and earnest address. Mr. G. L. Dashwood and Mr. T. A. Denny also addressed the meeting, the latter alluding with feeling to those friends whose faces were missing—whose example he urged all to follow.

British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews.

Strange that a Society like this, with such far-reaching ramifications, with an income of nearly £9000, and a work before it so stupendous as the conversion of the sons of Abraham, should only attract about a hundred persons to its May meeting in Exeter Hall—a smaller audience than would be found at any of the auxiliary meetings in a little country town. Mr. James E. Mathieson, of Mildmay, occupied the chair. In the course of his opening remarks the Chairman pointed out that the Jews were the grand stumbling-block of Atheism, for on no conceivable human theory could Atheists explain their wonderful preservation as a distinct people, their marvellous vital energy, and their numbers. They were, in fact, the external witness to the truth of the Bible. He believed that God was now troubling and agitating the nations of Europe through the Jews as a punishment for the long ages of oppression, and persecution, and martyrdom, and death, which they had suffered in times past. In England, too, they were a scourge in one sense, for in consequence of their frugal habits, their sobriety, and plain living, they were able to work for less money than other people, and spoil the trade of everybody else. The time was coming when the nations of Europe would have to take the question of the Jews seriously in hand; indeed, he was convinced that the nations would have to devise some scheme to send the Jews back to their own Palestine.

Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson addressed the meeting immediately after the Chairman, and there was about his short speech a stimulating spirit of hopefulness. He believed there never was a time in the history of the past, since the Day of Pentecost, when there was more readiness to receive the Gospel of Jesus Christ in all nations and among all people. In the last three or four years they had heard of remarkable movements among the Jews; he instanced a case of a learned doctor of philosophy in one of the principal cities of Germany who had accepted Christ and been baptized, and whose mother had been induced by him to accept Christianity and be baptized likewise. There were thousands inquiring concerning the Gospel of Christ, and men were beginning to find out that if there was no salvation in Him there was none to be found elsewhere. They were often told they did not reach the Jews, but if they did not it was because of their own unbelief. They did not have the Apostles' results simply because they had not the Apostles' faith.

The Secretary then read what was termed an abstract of the report, but as it took more than half-an-hour's rapid reading we wondered what the whole report was like. A great deal of labour must have been expended upon the compilation of this report, and it was certainly a very elaborate composition. But surely with so many speakers it was scarcely wise to inflict such a lengthy document on the meeting. It indicated the accomplishment of steady, energetic work by the agents of the Society, not only in all the large centres of population in this country, but also in most of the continental cities—results which were far wider and more blessed than could be measured by the number of converts actually baptized into the Christian faith, though these were by no means few. It was satisfactory to find mention made of the opinion of many of the agents that all through Europe there is a prospect of the commencement of a religious movement, such as that which has been going on in South Russia in the past year. The Talmud is going down, they say, and the Bible is going up, while there is unquestionably much more reverence amongst the Jews for the name of Christ.

Rev. F. Hastings defended the Jews from many of the unchristian attacks upon them, justifying to a large extent their conduct because of their persecution. Mr. Aaron Sternberg, a Russian Jew by birth, gave some interesting particulars of a visit to a number of Talmudic students in Russia, amongst whom he found a strong faith in their early return to their own country. Amongst the other speakers were Rev. Frank White—who pointed out the great ignorance which prevailed as to the nature and extent of the work among the Jews, and the consequent necessity for the Society's labours, especially as he was of opinion that the world would never be brought to Christ until the Jews were converted—Revs. J. Douglas, F. H. Newton, and P. J. Turquand.

The Kabyle Mission.

The first annual meeting was held at Eccleston Hall, S.W., on the 10th inst. Our space prevents our giving a full report, but our readers will have become acquainted with the history and working of the Mission from recent descriptions in "Letters from Abroad." Major-General Haig presided in the afternoon. In opening, he said the keynote of the meeting had been struck by Dr. Eccles, who prayed that we might "look at the heathen as God looks at them." Two foundation facts must be accepted—viz., that the heathen are perishing, and that God loves them. While thousands of English visit North Africa for their health, they do not seem to realise that there are 4,000,000 of Mahommedans in Algeria, and 7,000,000 in Morocco, without the true knowledge of Christ.

In presenting his report of the year's work, Dr. Eccles stated that there is as yet no Christian effort put forth amongst the million and a half which populate Tripoli. In Tunis there is a mission in the town only (which contains 140,000 persons); but, as yet, no station in the province. In Algeria three provinces are occupied—Algiers, Oran, and Constantine—whilst at Djema Saridj, a large Kabyle village, in the interior, two missionaries and their wives are carrying on the work, of which a few years ago Mr. and Mrs. George Pearse were the pioneers. In fact, it is to the interest awakened amongst English Christians by the travels of Mr. and Mrs. Pearse that the entire Mission owes its existence. There are also two ladies working independently amongst the Kabyles in the mountains, a few miles from Djema Saridj. In Morocco the principal station is Tangier, from which two of the ladies have just undertaken the opening of a smaller mission at Arzila. This represents a total of twenty-five workers now in the field.

Mr. Hind Smith, who has recently returned from a visit to Tangier, spoke most warmly of what he had seen and heard. He testified that work was done, and done well. He had made an attempt to ride from Tangier to Fez, the capital, which is some days' journey. But the difficulties of travelling in a country with no roads proved too much, and at the end of the second day he determined to return. Mr. Baldwin suggested to do so viâ Arzila, and whilst there they were so impressed by the readiness of the people to listen to the Gospel, that both felt it advisable to open a station there. Accordingly, a few days later, Miss Herdman and Miss Caley left Hope House on this new enterprise, a house having been secured. Mr. Baldwin reports, "Arzila station flourishing; enthusiastic reception; house filled with Moors and Jews to hear the word."

Miss Baldwin, who accompanied Mr. Smith to England for rest and change, then drew a most interesting picture of a visit to Moorish ladies in their homes. The room is furnished with nothing but rugs and cushions, with a bed curtained off at one end. Three or four ladies are reclining or sitting in easy postures, but absolutely idle. They engage in conversation with their visitor, and their faces, usually blank and without expression, assume a look of interest and attention. But as the subject turns to religion the old look returns, and presently one remarks, "Why do you talk to us of these things? Remember we are women and have no souls. It is useless to converse thus, except with men!" They appear to have no object for which to live, being unable to read, sew, or do any fancy work whatever. But they will listen, and each succeeding visit is more encouraging to the missionary than the preceding one. After they attain the age of fourteen they are only allowed to leave the house about once a fortnight, and then closely veiled; on which occasions they may visit either a friend, a bath, or the cemetery. The last is most frequently chosen! In the poorer houses the women are equally to be pitied, as they do not have even bodily comfort to lighten their gloom. Those in the villages are little better than slaves; all the work falls to their lot, the men simply living on their labour.

In the evening General Graydon presided. Mr. Pericles Green, who has spent most of his life in Tunis and its neighbourhood, gave some very interesting details of the Mahommedan people in that part. He expressed his belief that the "drying up of the Euphrates" refers to them, as it is a fact that their property is passing from them, and they are yearly becoming weaker. A Mahommedan, he said, has no idea of storing up wealth. He spends it lavishly and saves none. Consequently it gradually passes into the hands of Christians and Jews. They are beginning to feel, therefore, that a Christian or a Jew only comes to them from some worldly motive, and they dislike them accordingly. But they have great respect for European women, so that they are much more easily reached by lady missionaries than by men.

Mr. G. E. Morgan and Mr. Hind Smith then gave some account of their experiences among the missionaries and people of Algeria and Morocco respectively, so that all the countries in which the Kabyle Mission is at work were duly represented. We counsel our readers to peruse North Africa (Partridge & Co., 2d.), which is the quarterly organ of the Mission.

Christian Vernacular Society.

On Monday week, at Willis's Rooms, this Society held its annual meeting, Lord Northbrook in the chair. Mr. Henry Morris read a brief extract of the report. "In every part of the labours carried on by its agents there is reason for gratitude, hopefulness, and praise. The only cause for thoughtfulness and regret is the lack of interest and the want of appreciation exhibited by the Christian people of England." This lack of interest is signified in the fact that £3600 is all that is contributed in England to the Society's funds, while £5800 is the result of sales of publications in India. The Chairman in the course of his speech said he used to go and visit the schools of India for himself, and find out their mode of instruction. He referred to the great need of pure literature for the educated young men of India. This, he thought, should be circulated not only in the vernacular, but also in English, which is fast becoming universally employed. A feature of the Society which commended itself to him was the fact that it embraced Protestant Christians of all kinds. There should be more unity in missionary work, for nothing was more dangerous than for Hindus and Mahommedans to see divisions among Christians. In that large extension of Christianity which would probably take place in India, it was not unlikely that the form taken might not be that of any one particular branch of the Christian Church.

Mr. J. Murdoch, the Society's General Educational Agent in India, during his remarks explained the models of native schools which are to be seen in the Indian and Colonial Exhibition, telling how the children write—now on the sand, now on a palm leaf, now on a black board in white ink, or vice versâ. He said the Government of India had done much, indirectly, to spread the knowledge of the Gospel by its just rule, its good roads, its English language. In some of the Government school-books a heavenly Father is recognised, but, he said, a full statement of natural religion will not satisfy. Nothing short of the Gospel will satisfy; this was found in the Society's books. Looking back at his forty years in India, he said that the native Christians had in that time increased six-fold; this he thought to be a very hopeful sign.

Rev. G. O. Newport, of the London Missionary Society, wished, as one who was not an agent of the Society, to testify to its usefulness. He said he was indebted to it in his missionary work for the literature which he used; for the teachers, who were certain, after the training they received in the Institution, to be efficient. He had had much pleasure in preparing some of the Society's literature, more especially in Tamil. Mr. Newport gave a striking fact when he said that if we compared a village where there is a Christian school with another where there is only a heathen, it would be found that the children are nobler, and purer, and more truthful.

Mr. J. S. Haig, the principal of the Training Institution at Ahmednuggur, gave some interesting facts about the teachers who had been trained in the Institution. Since its foundation twenty years ago, 340 teachers have gone forth to different parts of the country where the Marathi language is spoken; from these teachers some are often chosen by the missionaries as evangelists and pastors. This Training Institution is chiefly attended by Christians, but of sixty-six Hindus who had been received there for instruction, Mr. Haig knew of thirty-five having become Christians, and perhaps the others had as well. Mr. Elphinstone, Dr. Murray Mitchell, and Mr. Chapman also briefly spoke.

Christian Blind Relief Society.

Year by year the annual meeting of this Society is held at the East London Tabernacle, whose pastor and church take considerable interest in its welfare, last year contributing more than £20 towards its support. The thirteenth anniversary was held on Tuesday, May 11. Mr. T. Clarke, hon. sec. (59, Burdett-road, E.), said that last year 160 pensioners received help; among the donations was one of £25 received from the Queen. The report also detailed individual cases of sore need, which the Society had been privileged to help.
